—The Dodge County (Minnesota) Christian Asssociation held its sixth anniversary on Monday and Tuesday of this week as we are informed by their hand bill. The meeting was in the Seminary chapel at Wasioja. State lecturer J. R. Williams, whom the threatening Masons of Fairmont have so far spared, was engaged to speak both evenings. A cordial welcome and free entertainment were offered by the Wasioja brethren.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard returned from the South-west on Friday last, bringing a good report of his itineracy among the friends in south-eastern Iowa and in Knox, Henry, Peoria and Marshall counties in this State. He proves that the canvassing business can be made successful, for he reports some $66 for Cynosure subscriptions, besides large book sales and several contributions to the Washington fund.

—Bro. R. W. Lyman writes that he has learned from a reliable source that the wheels and some other parts of one of the carriages which bore Morgan on his death ride from Canandaigua to Fort Niagara, are still in existence. We have not become relic hunters and worshipers, but these old fixtures have almost as much value as the old wagon of John Brown which the editor of the Iowa City Republican lately purchased at auction from a Quaker friend of the old Abolitionist. We imagine they would not be an uncouth ornament for the N. C. A. office.

—Ex-Bishop Wright in the last number of the Richmond Star deals with great plainness and Christian candor with an appointment made by Bishop Glossbrenner who sent Rev. Wm. McKee of Ohio as his representative to the Kentucky conference. Mr. McKee is an avowed nullificationist, who proclaimed his sentiments of hostility to the church on the floor of the last General Conference at Lisbon, Iowa, and refused to retract when urged to do so. "It is noticeable," says the Star, "that the bishop generally sends anti-law men to represent him in that mission district." Perhaps the Bishop's ruling in the Chambersburg case was of the same character.

Bro. N. E. Gardner in a communication to the Richmond Star gives our reform work this grand notice:

"The National Christian Association opposed to secret societies is a mighty power for good among us, one that every United Brethren should welcome as a reinforcement sent of God. The church should aid the Cynosure; also the noble corps of lecturers who are working with might and main to conquer one of the worst enemies she has. The biography of Bishop Edwards, so faithfully portrayed by Dr. L. Davis, cannot fail to be a valuable help in toning up the church to her wonted standard."

Many thanks to Bro. Gardner and the Star for this commendation which we trust is not undeserved. The great work of Dr. Davis has been received at the Cynosure office and will be presented to our readers soon.

—It will be remembered that some months ago the Maine courts decided that the Masonis order was not a benevolent society. As the bare statement of the fact was all that we could furnish at the time, the following detailed statement of the case while it was on trial, from the Bangor Commercial is worth preserviug:

"A question of considerable interest has recently risen and is somewhat engrossing the attention of the people in this commuuity. The subject receiving consideration is the taxation of the handsome Masonic Block on Main street in this city.

"Masonic Block is now entirely owned by the Masonic Fraternity. It is valued by the City Assessors at $15,000 and the taxes levied last year on the block amounted to $435. The Masonic Fraternity refused to settle this account and advanced the claim that the block is rightfully exempt from taxation. City Solicitor Vose thereupon brought suit against the Fraternity for the amount of the above bill. Hon. Josiah H. Drummond, of Portland, has been procured as counsel for the Masonic Fraternity.

"The arguments advanced by the respective counsel are as follows: Mr. Drummond refers to Item 2, Sec. 6, Chap. 6 of the Revised Statutes which says there shall be exempt from taxation 'The real and personal property of literary institutions and the real and personal property of all benevolent, charitable and scientific institutions incorporated in this State.' Mr. Drummond claims that the Masonic order is a 'benevolent and charitable institution' and accordingly is exempted from taxation. City Solicitor Vose takes an opposite view of the case and declares emphatically that it is not a benevolent and charitable institution within the meaning of the above statute and that there is no sufficient reason why the Masonic Block should not be taxed the same as other city property.

"It is purely a question of law and it will remain for the full bench to determine the proper interpretation of the above statute. The case will soon come before the Law Court for final decision."

COMMENCEMENT WEEK AT AVALON.

NEBRASKA STATE ANTI-SECRECY ASSOCIATION.

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS.

ART. I.—This association shall be known as the State Christian Anti-secrecy Association of Nebraska, and shall be auxiliary to the National Christian Association; and shall have for its object to expose, oppose, withstand and remove all secret combinations from the church and from the land, and to rescue our Republican government from bondage and corruption.

ART. II.—Auy person may become a member of this association by signing in good faith this constitution and by-laws, but gross immorality or joining a secret society shall forfeit membership.

ART. III.—The officers of this association shall be a President, and one or more Vice-Presidents, Recording and Corresponding Secretaries, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three to be elected at each annual meeting and to hold office till their successors are elected.

ART. IV.—The duties of these officers shall be such as are generally assigned to officers of this class in the common organizations of this kind, and the Executive Committee is vested with power to call special meetings when necessary.

ART. V.—This constitution or by-laws may be amended at any regular meeting of this association by a two-thirds vote of all the members present, provided such amendment does not pervert the object of the association.

BY-LAWS.

1. The meetings of this association shall be opened by prayer or other devotional exercises.
2. No one shall be denied the right to participate in the business of this association on account of race, sex or color.
3. The expenses of this association shall be met by collections and voluntary pledges.
4. The State Agent and Lecturer, when so employed by the association, shall report to the Executive Committee, but shall not be a member of the same.

RAILROADING ON RELIGIOUS PRINCIPLES.

Col. Bennett H. Young, President of the Louisville, New Albany, and Chicago Railroad has issued an order which we hope may be also adopted all over the railway lines of the country:

"That so far as possible, no work be done or trains be run on that road on the Sabbath-day. Only passenger-trains will be run on that day in carrying mails, and efforts will be made to arrange for their discontinuance. In cases of perishable goods or live stock freight trains will run when necessary only. The order further says: "You will in future run no excursion trains of any kind for any purpose during the Sabbath. This order applies to camp-meeting trains. If the Christian people cannot find other places for worship this company will not violate Divine and civil law, and deny its employees the essential rest of the Sabbath to carry them to the camp-meeting ground. I am also informed that a number of the company's employees have conscientious scruples against any work on the Sabbath-day. There are likely others who do not feel so strongly on this subject. Under no ordinary circumstances must any employee who objects on the ground of his religious convictions be ordered or required to do any service Sundays. If any difficulties arise in the execution of this regulation you will please report them to me for consideration, and you will also notify the employees of their right on conscientious grounds to be fully protected in the observance of the day of rest."

THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.—This is a society organized to maintain existing Christian features in the American government, and to secure a suitable religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States. During the present year this society has greatly enlarged its operations. Four district secretaries are devoting their whole time to the work, holding conventions, addressing churches and public meetings, circulating petitions, and extending the membership of the organization. Within six months fourteen conventions, and more than two hundred public meetings have been held in behalf of this cause. The members of the association enrolled during the current year and contributing to its funds, are more than two thousand, and its list of officers includes many prominent and influential men. The Hon. Felix R. Brunot, of Pittsburg, is President. The Christian Statesman, of Philadelphia, a weekly journal, is the organ of the movement, and has recently been enlarged to sixteen pages.

Among the features of the government which this association aims to conserve are our Sabbath laws, the use of the Bible in public schools, prayer in the National and State Legislatures, and the Christian law of marriage in opposition to the lax divorce legislation now so common. Some suitable change in the Constitution is deemed by this society to be indispensably necessary, since that instrument, in its present form, is extensively regarded as an expression of the secular theory of government, and is constantly employed as an argument against all that is Christian in the usage and administration of our government. For the publications of the society, and any information bearing on this movement, address, T. P. Stevenson, Corresponding Secretary, 1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Another note from Bro. J. Tanner speaks of feeling a little better, but not materially improved.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

—The "Right Worthy" (in their own esteem) Grand Lodge of Good Templars meets in Chicago this week Tuesday and continues in session till the Sabbath, though for what they propose to use that day does not appear. The sessions will be held in the Palmer House and the whole world of secret lodgery which professes temperance will be represented. The Union Signal, which is worth more to the temperance cause than the whole Good Templar business ever was or will be, is much too humble in the presence of these grandees. With the utmost meekness it promises to publish so much of a report of the meeting "as may be given to the public."

—The Grand Council of Illinois of the Royal Templars of Temperance, a total abstinance and mutual insurance order, having 1,500 members in this State, and 20,000 in United States, held its third annual session in Jacksonville a few weeks since.

—Among the advertised Chicago "attractions" for the season are the Good Templar Grand Lodge, the "Ancient Order United Workmen" and Grand Conclave of the Patriarchal Circle of Odd-fellows. The latter is a kind of Knight Templar attachment to accommodate the snobbery of the order.

—Commenting on the sentence of John F. Burrill, late Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, of five years in the penitentiary, the Voice of Masonry says: "He knew his duty and justly suffers for his crime." But it makes all the difference in the world whose money is taken. Burrill might have defrauded a bank or a county or State, and the lodge would have shielded him and got him out of the way as it has a thousand other defaulters. But he stole Grand Lodge money!

—Ascension Day was observed by two Knight Templar Commanderies of this city, the St. Bernard and Chicago, in Bishop Fallows church. The banners of the lodge flaunted about in conspicuous places and the names of the two lodges were woven in flowers on each side the pulpit. Fallows was very appropriately assisted in the mock ceremony by H. W. Thomas, D. D.

—That wonderful and "eminent commander," N. T. Gassette, who is for marchiug off an important part of the Knight Templar Freemasons in an opposite direction while their Grand Conclave meets in San Francisco, claims to have sixty excursionists for his European trip, and as he needs a hundred and the time draws near, he begins to make use of all the free advertising he can get to drum up recruits. We hope he will get them, and as many more, and that in crossing the sea they may all be humbled to the ranks of ordinary and reasonable mortals and with the rest of their contributions to the deep, heave overboard their Masoury.

—The Royal Arcanum, a secret insurance lodge, held its "Supreme Couucil," sixth session, in Richmond, Va., not long since. According to the statements made at the meeting this lodge numbers 750 subordinate bodies in the United States with a membership of 49,000. It is also claimed that last year $2,000,000 were paid as insurance; which, if the members all bore an equal share would be over $40 each—a pretty dear rate of insurance, all things considered.

—The infatuated devotees of secretism have at length, we hope, found the acme of lodgery—its "last ditch," as it were. This is known as the "Supreme Commandery of the Universal Brotherhood." This mighty (in uame) order met in Danville, Ill., last week and was expecting to begin the very proper business of swallowing its neighbors. The "Order of the Red Cross" and the Knights of Maccabees were to be the first victims. Like Aaron's serpent we hope it will go on and "swallow all the rest." The Red Cross fellows had a great squabble here last winter among its few dozen members, in which the great lodge fraud B. P. Reynolds figured hugely. The Maccabees are of Canadian origin and have already been in more than one fight over their rubbish of titles, fuss and feathers. When this "Universal Brotherhood" gets to the Freemasons it will be funny, for the latter claim to be the only universal brotherhood that now exists or ever did.

—The New York Times is responsible for the following account of the beauties of lodgery: "Stamm Lodge, of the Sons of Malta, is, or was, composed of women, strauge as the fact may be. In March last, at a meeting of the lodge, two of its members spoke very plainly their opinion of the Grand Lodge of the order, saying that that body had called too often upon them and their associates for money; and that its demand for means to defray the expenses of a ball should not be complied with. The Grand Lodge was informed of what they had said, and regarding their language as undignified, expelled them from the order. About seventy sympathizers with the expelled persons went with them, and took away from the lodge its property, including a bank book for $900, money deposited to its credit in the German Savings Bank. Maria Amburger, President of the lodge, and twenty other members who supported her, began a suit in the Supreme Court against Eliza Folk and the other secessionists, and obtained an injunction restraining them from drawing and using the money and the savings bank from honoring their demand for it. Argument on a motion to continue the injunction took place before Judge O'Gorman, in Superior Court Chambers, yesterday. Civil Justice Steckler represented the plaintiffs, and argued that they were the lodge, and were entitled to the money. Colonel Charles S. Spencer argued that his clients were the lodge, being a majority of its members; that they had not seceded from it, and that they had merely disputed the right of the Grand Lodge to expel two of their associates. Judge O'Gorman reserved his decision."

LITERARY.

The Elzevir Library has added to its cheap and beautifully printed list the following: "Aristotle," by Sir Alexander Grant; "Plato," by C. W. Collins; "Horace," by Theodore Martin. These are in the famous and excellent "Ancient Classics for English Readers" series, heretofore obtainable only at the price of $1.00 each, but now published in this handsome form for 15 cents each. "The Indian Song of Songs," by Edwin Arnold, author of "The Light of Asia," is published at 6 cents. "Life of Alex. H. Stephens," by F. H. Norton, author of "Life of Gen. Hancock," and other works, containing an excellent portrait, and a fine illustration of "Liberty Hall," Mr. Stephens' famous home. Though a copyright work, paying the usual royalty to the author, it is published for 10 cents. The publisher makes the mistake of calling Alexander Stephens the "Great Commoner." That title, first given to Fox, was applied to but one American—Thaddeus Stevens of Pennsylvania. The last issue is Schiller's celebrated "Song of the Bell" and "Hero and Leander," all for 2 cents. John B. Alden, 18 Vesey St., New York, publisher.

The Third Biennial Report of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture is a large and handsome volume worthy of the strong young State which leads the temperance ranks in the West. Fine maps of the State and of each county are bound in the book, and it is a wonderful feature of the latter to mark how thickly planted are the school-houses throughout the settled portions of the State. It is a volume full of a vast stock of information, invaluable to every settler in the State.

The June number of the North American Review opens with an article by Joseph Nimmo, Jr., Chief of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, on "American Manufacturing Interests," in which is given a singularly full and instructive historical sketch of the rise and progress of manufacturers in the United States, together with a very effective presentation of their present condition, and of the agency of tariff legislation in promoting diversified industries and encouraging the inventive genius of the people. Hon. Wm. M. Springer, on "Incidental Taxation," presents an argument for Free Trade. D. C. Gilman, President of Johns Hopkins University, writes of the "Present Aspects of College Training," as affected by the increase of wealth and luxury, the development of natural science, and the influence of a larger religious liberty. Edward Self presents some weighty considerations on the "Abuse of Citizenship," as exhibited in the machinations of the dynamitists against a friendly power in disregard of the obligations of American neutrality. Prof. Isaac L. Rice criticises some of "Herbert Spencer's Facts and Inferences" in social and political science, and Christine Nilsson contributes "A few words about public singing."

Theodore Thomas has written an introduction for a paper "On the Training of Children's Voices," which Wm. L. Tomlins has contributed to the forthcoming June Century. Mr. Thomas is said to agree fully with Mr. Tomlins, that the old system of musical exercise in the public schools is alike ruinous to the voice and opposed to a sound musical taste. He thinks Mr. Tomlins correctly describes what such training ought to be.

Choice Literature for May is a valuable and entertaining number. The contents are "An Unsolved Historical Riddle" by the historian Froude, "The Gospel according to Rembrandt," "Phantasms of the Living," "Prince Gortchakoff on Russian Diplomacy," "Isaiah of Jerusalem," "A Tour in the Troad," "Windforce and how it is measured, Richard Wagner," "The Progress of socialism," "Early Spring in California." John B. Alden, publisher. 18 Vesey St., New York.

MASONIC TERRORISM.—Another instance of the terrorism which the lodge exercises over the minds of men is furnished us by the biography of John Quincy Adams by a Mr. Morse. Any candid mind knowing who and what John Quincy Adams was, would conceive it utterly impossible to write his biography without devoting a considerable portion of the work to the Anti-masonic services of that illustrious statesman. But Mr. Morse has done this. The most prominent feature of Mr. Adams' character Mr. Morse virtually ignores. It is as if one should write the life of Martin Luther and say little or nothing about the Reformation; or give us the life of Philip Second of Spain, and say nothing of Jesuitry.

That writers of sufficient note to undertake biographies of leading men should be so much under fear of the lodge as to suppress important truths that tell against it, is one of the most mortifying evidences of the hold which Freemasonry has taken of the American mind. Mr. Morse's book would not have sold if he had given Mr. Adams' Anti-masonry the prominence due to the facts in the case. He has suppressed the truth out of fear of the lodge. Or, if there is any other motive for the omission, it remains for him to explain what it is. Perhaps he may be so imbued with the lofty notions of Freemasonry that he may have been actuated by a feeling of contempt for Mr. Adams' efforts against it: but how a man can despise Anti-masonry and still respect Mr. Adams it would be very difficult to understand.

The truth is, Mr. Morse had to fear two things if he gave John Quincy Adams due credit for Anti-masonry: 1st. that his book might not sell, and 2nd, that his chance for political office would be ruined. In the face of these facts Mr. Morse has suppressed the truth; which shows that the lodge is very terrible, or that Mr. Morse is very timid. Perhaps both. It is humiliating to see an American citizen prostrate himself so low before a foreign institution.

DOWN WITH THE LODGE.

THE HOME.

PEACE.

"Then had thy peace been as a river." Isa. 48: 18.

If thou wilt bend thine ear
To the soft voice of love and pleading;
If thou wilt pause to hear
Amid thy cares, its counsels heeding;

If thou wilt bring thy cares
To Him whose promise is abiding;
If thou wilt leave thy fears,
To find in him a safe, sure hiding;

If thou wilt yield thy ways
To his most wise, most kindly guiding,
And all the weary days
Of want and woe to his providing,

Peace then shall flow to thee
As flows the full tide of a river,
So broad, so deep, so free—
Thy God the rich, the boundless giver.

And as the river calm
Bears to the meadows in its flowing
The richness and the balm
Of life and beaty, ever growing,

So in thy soul shall glow
A joy and grace to bless thy living.
That other hearts may grow
By the sweet impulse of thy giving.

—Am. Messenger.

HOW PEACE IS SLAIN.

"The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever." (Isa. 32; 17). "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea" (Isa, 48: 18). "There is no peace, saith the Lord to the wicked" (verse 22). "The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaccable" (Jas. 3: 17). If we would have peace as a permanent treasure, we must cease from sin, and be steadily, perseveringly, consciously obedient to the will of God. "Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall cause them to stumble" (Ps. 119: 165). Half-hearted obedience necessarily fails to bring peace. The cherishing of secret sin is of course murderous to peace. The omission of duty, even where there is no positive transgression, will, and ought to, rob us of peace. Nothing but a conscious purpose to do the whole will of God, to the best of our knowledge and ability, can secure to us the precious treasure of the peace of God. Then, whatever be our shortcomings, "if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." "If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1: 7–9). Are you conscious of failure at this point? Is your obedience only half-hearted? Is the law of God feared more than it is loved? Are you keeping back part of the price? Are you, in your selfishness, withholding from God the money and the service which he has a right to claim? Is his word neglected for the sake of the novel? Do you give more freely of your money to the theatre, and the opera, and the lodge than to the church of God? Do you hunger and thirst for riches rather than for righteousness? Is your heart steeled against the cries of the distressed and the perishing? Is your heart given up to worldly ambitions or evil desires? Is your life lacking in truth and honesty? Is your family growing up in godlessness through your unfaithfulness? Are you "at ease in Zion"—bearing no burdens, taking no part in the labors and anxieties that belong to true Christian warfare? Are you selfishly and idly brooding over your own miseries, when you ought to be busy in healing the wounds and soothing the griefs of real sufferers? Search your heart and life, and see whether the peace of God can dwell with the guests already entertained in the former, or rest upon the deeds of the latter. And remember that if you are straitened, you are straitened in yourself.—Christian Standard.

THE GREAT REWARD.

"The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb. Moreover, by them is thy servant warned: and in keeping of them there is great reward." Psa. 19: 9–11.

No man can serve his own interest better than by serving God. Religion conduces both to our present and future happiness, and when the Gospel enjoins piety towards God, justice and charity towards men, and temperance and chastity in reference to ourselves, the true interpretation of these laws is this: God requires, in order to our eternal happiness, that we should do those things which tend most to our temporal welfare; that is, in plainer words, he promises to make us happy forever, upon condition that we will but do that which is best for ourselves in this world. To conclude, religion is founded in the interest of men, rightly apprehended. So that, if the god of this world and the lasts of men did not blind their eyes, so as to render them unfit to discern their true interest, it would be impossible, so long as they love themselves and desire their own happiness, to keep them from being religious; for they could not but conclude that to be their interest, and, being so convinced, they would resolve to pursue it.—Archbishop Tillotson.

THE BRAHMINS OF INDIA.

A few weeks since Rev. Dr. Scudder lectured upon the leading caste of India, in the First Congregational church of Chicago. The speaker said he was born in India and had lived there for twenty-seven years. The Brahmins were aliens, belonging to the white race, an offshoot of the great Aryan branch. Though the Brahmin was born of a Brahmin father and mother, yet he must be born again or regenerated in order to belong to the caste, and to do this, study and devotion were necessary. At the age of from 8 to 16 he is invested with the sacred string which he wears thereafter over his left shoulder. He never ate eggs or fish, and held with great tenacity to the doctrine of transmigration. If he killed an animal he was obliged to pass through as many deaths as there were hairs on the animal. He bathed often and he washed his clothes himself, for the touch of another person would pollute them. They never intermarry with any other caste. It was a magnificent race, quick and lively in facial expression and graceful in bodily exercise. There were no finer-looking men in the world, and intellectually they have no superiors. There were four great original castes, but these had been subdivided until at present there were a multitude of grades, but the Brahmin was still a Brahmin. They cremated the bodies of their dead, and the speaker had no hesitation in saying that was the most cleanly manner of burial, and he hoped to see it adopted by all other nations of Christendom A Brahmin could not commit a sin and could only be disgraced by a violation of caste usages. He might commit any sin or curse his gods with impunity. He walked like a demi-god among men. He held the minds and hearts of the people by intellectual power, while his influence was stronger than that of the English with their bayonets. There were a great number of languages in India, all different, but with a common Sanscrit overshadowing them all. The speaker paid a high compliment to the Sanscrit language and its literature, and recited a number of poetical pieces in Hindoo dialects to show their poetical capabilities. Christ's truth, he said, had not failed to reach the hearts of many Brahmins. The lecture closed with a recitation of the creed of a new school Brahmin church, which differed but little from many of the modern sects of Christians. With this church thousands of Brahmins were now in sympathy.

PROSPERED IN GIVING.

"Give, and it shall be given unto you," said the Saviour. And in Isaiah it is said, "The liberal soul deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things shall he stand." In Samuel the Lord saith, "Them that honor me I will honor." And in Ecclesiastes we are told that if we cast our bread upon the waters, we shall find it again after many days.

Now these, and many similar expressions in the Word of God, point to the fact, so often verified by Providence in common life, that those who conscientiously, and on principle, give of their property in doing good, are, as a general rule, prospered in doing it. As one of the old writers says, "To the glory and grace of God, I find he will be no man's debtor." Or as a wonderfully liberal, and still more wonderfully prospered man at the West somewhat bluffly, but very expressively, said to one who told him he gave too much, "If, as you say, in giving, I am shovelling out, God is all the time shovelling in, and I find that he shovels the fastest."

An incident in the life of the late William E. Dodge, which he once modestly related to the writer, illustrates and confirms the principle thus mentioned. Henry Obookiah, it will be remembered, had come from the Sandwich Islands to this country, and was placed at Cornwall in school, there to be educated for the ministry, that he might go back, as a preacher of the gospel, to his native land—a plan which was frustrated by his death in 1818, though the interest his career had awakened led to the establishment of the Sandwich Island Mission.

Young Dodge, then quite a lad, was at this same school in Cornwall, and having been prayerfully trained by a faithful Christian mother, was deeply interested in the story of Obookiah and in his plans for doing good, and anxious to do something to aid them. Having, like most schoolboys of those days, but limited means, he scarcely knew how he could carry out his wishes and intentions; but finally he proposed to one or two of his young associates that they should take their little pocket-money and buy potatoes and plant them, and in the fall sell the crop, and give the proceeds for the benefit of Obookiah or the mission. They did this. And, said Mr. Dodge, as in later years he told the story, "From that day it seemed as if everything I touched prospered." Beginning at this early day, he all his lifetime recognized his stewardship to God, and endeavored to be faithful to it. And all his lifetime he was singularly prospered; and though his benefactions were numerous and most liberal, the bestowments of Providence were larger still, and his life gave evidence that he was one of the number to whom, at the last great day, it shall be said, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Tryon Edwards.

A MIGHTY MYTH.

Some time since a woman delivered a lecture in Lancashire, England, against Christianity, in which she declared that the gospel narrative of the life of Christ is a myth or fable. One of the mill-hands who listened to her obtained leave to ask a question.

"The question," said he, "I want to ask the lady is this: "Thirty years ago, I was a curse to this town, and everybody shrank from me that had any respect for himself. I often tried to do better, but could not succeed. The teetotalers got hold of me, but I broke the pledge so often that they said it was no use trying me any longer; then the police got hold of me, and I was taken before the magistrates, and they tried; and next I was sent to prison, and the wardens tried what they could do, but though they all tried, I was nothing better but rather worse.

"Now, you say that Christ is a myth. But when I tried, and the teetotalers, the police, the magistrates, and the wardens of the prisons, all tried in vain, then Christ took hold of me, touched my heart, and made me a new man. And now I am a member of the church, a classleader, a superintendent of the Sunday school; and I ask, if Christ is a myth, how comes it to pass that that myth is stronger than all the others put together?" The lady was silent. "Nay, Miss," said he, "say what you will, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation."—Christian Secretary.

REBUKED.—A few years ago as a stranger rose in one of our city pulpits to begin the service, several of the congregation began to leave the church. He was a lame man, and the pulpit was located near the doors.

"Wait a moment, my friends," said the preacher, till I get my hat, and I'll go with you."

Down he came, limping, hat in hand, and left the church. This abrupt closing of the services taught the people that there was at least one minister who would not be treated with contempt.

On a certain occasion, the eloquent Dr. E. H. Chapin, being sick, was compelled to ask a friend to preach for him. As the stranger rose to announce the opening hymn, a score of persons rose to go out. This clergyman also was equal to such an emergency.

"All," he said, "who came here to worship Dr. Chapin will please leave now; but those who came to worship God will sing the forty-third hymn."

That stopped the exodus.—Sel.

To teach a child to sing "Gentle Jesus" and to point its young heart to the Redeemer, may seem a trifle, but yet it may be a most essential part of the process of that gracious work of religious education by which that child shall afterwards become a believer, a minister, and a winner of souls. Omit that first lesson and it may be you have turned aside a life. Never neglect the loosing of the shoe-latchet for Christ, since you do not know what may hang upon it. Human destiny often turns upon a hinge so small as to be invisible. Never say within yourself: "This is trivial."—Nothing is trivial for the Lord. Never say: "But this surely might be omitted without much loss." How knowest thou? If it be thy duty, He who allotted thee thy task knew what he did. Do not thou in any measure neglect any portion of his orders, for in all his commands there is consummate wisdom and on thy part it will be wisdom to obey them, even to the jots and tittles.—Sel.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

HOW THE PITCAIRN ISLANDERS SPEND SUNDAY.

On Sunday we usually rise earlier than on other days of the week. Early in the morning may be heard the songs of praise ascending from the family altar, as each household meets for family worship ere the duties of the day begin. After prayers, the young people and children make themselves ready for Sunday-school; while the mothers, generally, and elder sisters prepare the breakfast, which is to be in readiness after the school is over. The school-bell rings at half-past seven, and school is dismissed at nine o'clock and sometimes a little later. It is usually the part of the fathers to take care of the youngest children and keep them quiet, as well as engaging their young minds in some interesting story from the Bible, while the mothers are busy preparing the morning meal.

After the breakfast is over, all who can possibly attend prepare themselves for church. The morning service begins at half-past ten, or rather the bell rings at that hour. Usually all the members of each family are seen in their places at church, though sometimes one parent or other stays at home to take care of the baby or youngest children Two church wardens are yearly appointed to keep watch over careless behavior while at church; as also to arouse the luckless sleeper that may be nodding under a long sermon, especially if the weather be warm, and it is scarcely otherwise here. The sympathies of the writer are always awakened in behalf of those who are caught napping. One tender-hearted church warden was once playfully remonstrated with for not performing his duty —namely, awakening a woman who was seen sleeping. In reply, he said he knew her eyes were shut, but was not certain whether they were closed in sleep or meditation; so he turned his head away for a minute or two, and, on again looking toward her, saw she was wide awake, for which thoughtful consideration the woman was extremely thankful.

No meal is partaken of after the morning service; as we have only breakfast and supper here, dinner being the exception rather than the rule, and fruits are what are most eaten at noon on Sundays. Every family has its own gathering together between the two services—some to read the Bible union chapter for the day and compare references; others to engage in some other portion of the word of God—all endeavoring, in their humble way, and to the best of their ability, to have the Bible made plain to their understanding. This employment is always engaged in by first offering up a short petition for the aid of God's Holy Spirit.

It is a matter of regret that the interest in Scripture geography is not awakened amongst us. The helps we have on that subject are principally the small maps in some of our Bibles; and we have, besides, a good Bible atlas and gazetteer. A friend wrote us word that he sent, some time ago, a map of Palestine, but it never reached here, much to our disappointment. To go on. By the time the family gathering at noon is over it is time for the bell to ring for the afternoon service, which begins generally at three o'clock. The service over, the parents return home, and the children remain behind for school in the evening. The fifteen minutes that intervene between the close of the church service and the commencement of the school, is often pleasantly spent by the teachers and older scholars in singing sacred hymns and songs, the organ accompanying. Music and singing form the chief pleasure among most of the young people, and, as everybody on the island sings, without a single exception, there is never a lack of voices to swell the chorus when any song is sung.

Watt's Psalms and Hymns are exclusively used in the church service, but at parting other hymns are sung, as "Abide with me," etc., "Sun of my soul," "Lord dismiss us with thy blessing," and several others of a like character. A few years ago a parcel of hymn-books was sent here, in the hope that the books may be used in the worship of the church. They were "Hymns, Ancient and Modern." On the subject being mentioned to Mr. Young, he said that he had no taste for hymns, every one of which has an Amen ending it, as were those in the "Ancient and Modern Hymns." There are some really beautiful hymns in the collection, and many of the old standard hymns; but so great is the respect and love that Mr. Young has for Dr. Watts, that nothing would ever induce him to lay aside the time-honored Psalms and Hymns, and introduce any other hymn-book of more modern times. We have several other collections of hymns, which we frequently sing in our other meetings, so there is a great variety. The "Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs," used so extensively in the late revivals, and which Mr. Sankey used with such good result, as we learn, obtain a high place among the favorites of the young people here. For many years past it has been the custom for the young people to meet at Mr. Young's house every Sunday night, for the purpose of singing hymns; but this has been discontinued lately, and the Sabbath evenings are now employed in a different way, the time being used in conducting a meeting for children and youth, and the singing class meets on Wednesday evening instead. On every other Sunday the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is administered, and on such occasions there is no Sunday-school in the afternoon, as that is the time we celebrate the feast of love. When not engaged in public worship or family readings, the time is occupied in reading some religious book, of which we have a plentiful supply.

Sunday is considered emphatically the Lord's day, and to his worship and service it is devoted, all other work and pleasure being laid aside for the six days in which they may be done. There is nothing that disturbs the peaceful quietude of our Sabbath here, unless it be the arrival of a ship on that day.—Independent.

BLESS HIS HEART.

In a very elegant palace car entered a weary-faced, poorly-dressed woman, with three little children, one a babe in her arms. A look of joy crept into her face as she settled down into one of the luxurious chairs, but it was quickly dispelled as she was asked rudely to "start her boots."

A smile of amusement was seen on several faces as the frightened group hurried ont to enter one of the common cars. Upon one young face, however, there was a look which shamed the countenances of the others.

"Auntie," said the boy to the lady beside him, "I am going to carry my basket of fruit and this box of sandwiches to the poor woman in the next car. You are willing, of course?"

He spoke eagerly, but she answered:

"Don't be foolish, dear; you may need them yourself, and perhaps the woman is an impostor."

"No, I'll not need them," he answered decidedly, but in a very low tone. "You know I had a hearty breakfast, and don't need a lunch. The woman looked hungry, auntie, and so tired, too, with those three little babies clinging to her. I'll be back in a minute, auntie; I know mother wouldn't like it if I didn't speak a kind word to the least of these when I meet them."

The worldly aunt brushed a tear from her eye after the boy left her, and said, audibly: "Just like his dear mother."

About five minutes later, as the lady passed the mother and the three children, she saw a pretty sight—the family feasting, as perhaps they had never done before. The dainty sandwiches were eagerly eaten, and the fruit basket stood open.

The eldest child, with her mouth filled with bread and butter, said, "Was the pretty boy an angel, dear mamma?"

"No," answered the mother, and a grateful look brightened her faded eyes, "but he is doing angel's work, bless his dear heart!" And we, too, said: "Bless his dear heart!"—Sel.

WHAT IS THE USE OF SNAKES?

C. C. Hopey, in his very interesting work on "Snakes," writes of their usefulness as follows:

"Persons who dislike snakes continually ask, 'What is the use of them?' That they are not without a use will, I hope, appear in the course of this work, were it necessary to preach that all things have their use. But in one habit that offended Lord Bacon, namely, 'of going on their belly,' lies one of their greatest uses, because that, together with their internal formation and external covering, enables them to penetrate where no larger carnivorous animal could venture, into dark morasses, bog jungles, swamps, amid the tangled vegetation of the tropics, where swarms of the lesser reptiles, on which so many of them feed, would otherwise outbalance the harmony of nature, die, and produce pestilence.

"Wondrously and exquisitely constructed for their habitat, they are able to exist where the higher animals could not; and while they help to clear those inaccessible places; they themselves supply food for a number of the smaller mammalia, which, with many carniverous birds, devour vast numbers of young snakes. The hedgehog, weasel, ichneumon, rat, peccary, badger, hog, goat, and an immense number of birds keep snakes within due limits, while the latter perform their part among the grain-devouring and herbiveous lesser creatures. Thus beautifully is the balance of nature maintained."

FRIENDLY ROBINS.—The Christian Register says: Friendly acts of birds of different species to one another have been rarely witnessed. Such an instance has just been related by Mr. R. B. Forbes, of Milton. "My mocking-bird," he says, "hangs under the piazza, and near him is a robin's nest containing young birds. The parent birds seem to be busy all day bringing worms to their young family. Twice the robins have been seen to alight on the cage of the prisoner, and drop worms into his mouth, passing by their own well-fed young. Were Longfellow here, I should invoke his aid in commemorating this fact in rhyme."

A COMPREHENSIVE PRAYER.—Thomas a'Kempis, who died just one hundred years before the German Reformation, is said to be the author of this prayer: "Give me a clear understanding against all error, a clean heart against all impurity, a right faith against all doubtfulness, a firm hope against all difficulties, fervent charity against all indifference and negligence, great patience against all disturbance, holy meditation against every filthy imagination, continual prayer against the devil's assaults, good occupation against the tiresomeness and drowsiness of the heart, and lastly, devout remembrance of thy holy passion against the wounding of the soul by vices. Assist me, O my God, with all these, thy good gifts, and confirm me in all thy holy word. Amen."

—The laws of nature are not, as modern naturalists seem to suppose, iron chains by which the living God, so to say, is bound hand and foot, but elastic cords, rather, which he can lengthen or shorten at his sovereign will.—Philip Schaff.

TEMPERANCE.

Drunkards do not support the saloons; all the profits of the business comes from the moderate drinkers.

The more respectable and attractive any house where liquor is sold, the greater the mischief it is able to do in any community.

Bishop Ireland says "The men who babble about social reforms without pointing to the saloons as the first cause of poverty and degradation talk in the air."

Some one struck the nail on the head when he wrote: "Take the political influence from the whisky business, and the thing would collapse in a minute."

The Pittsburgh Banner says that thirty-two per cent. of the murders and crimes of violence in Germany are committed on Sunday.

The Distiller and Brewer, published in St. Louis in the interests of the liquor traffiec, has been discontinued.

In a quarrel on a train of the Cincinnati Northern road bringing a picnic home, a general shooting and cutting affray took place May 13th, about twelve miles from the city. Five men were seriously wounded; none fatally. About a dozen were engaged in the fight, all of whom had been drinking.

In a family fight at Indianapolis, May 13th, Isaac Baker, an old man, was horribly beaten about the head with heavy clubs by his son-in-law, Wm. Montgomery, and his brother-in-law, Scott Seay. His skull was crushed in three places, although alive at midnight, it is certain that he cannot live until morning. The three men were drunk, and the fuss arose over their dinner.

An inquirer at a temperance meeting interrupted the speaker by exclaiming, "I say, mister, do you think a gin sling does a fellow any harm?" To which the lecturer replied, "Not if a man slings it far enough; but when the gin slings him, ever so little, then it does harm."

Prof. Foster, of the Canadian Parliament, has secured the passage of a resolution calling for information from the government on the liquor traffic, as set forth in the Trade Returns, for the fifteen years from 1868 to 1882. He said in supporting his motion that the existing government has promised to introduce legislation, and the subject will no doubt be thoroughly discussed, and that the information asked for would be exceedingly helpful in forming a judgment upon it.

A lady has just given $6,000 to the temperance cause who a few years ago was told by her husband that as temperance was being agitated in their State (Virginia) he thought he would sign the pledge to help keep the cause. With great pride she said, "I should be ashamed of a husband who would thus surrender his personal liberty." One year from that time he died of delirum tremens, and her sons, learning to drink at their mother's table, have both died drunkards.

Rev. Joseph Cook's personal testimony is: "Many persons when they travel, being told that the waters are not pure or safe to drink, and, being recommended to drink the wines of the country, foolishly believe this delusion. From my extensive acquaintance with many lands, I unhesitatingly affirm that everywhere God has provided pure water for man, and that the wines drunk are often miserable and dirty. I have found water everywhere that I have travelled—in China and India. Palestine and Egypt —and everywhere water has been my beverage."

We give the following quotation concerning Sweden, which thirty years ago was said to be the most drunken country in Europe. It is from the pen of Mr. A. Balfour, of Liverpool, who says:

"In estimating the practical value of the Swedish License Reform Act of 1855, allow me to refer to the fact that no minimum number was fixed for licences, and this, which is essentially a permissive prohibitory Act, has existed in Sweden for the last twenty years. So vigorously have the people outside of towns used their permission to limit and prohibit that, among 3,500,000 people, there are only 450 places for the sale of spirits. This it is which has so helped Sweden to emerge from moral and material prostration, and which explains the existence of such general indications in that country of comfort and in dependence among all classes."

In Switzerland, where the Cantons have been deprived of the powers they previously possessed of regulating the drink traffic, the results have proved most disastrous. Witness the following statement of a Times correspondent, writing from Geneva in December last:

"As a consequence of the abolition of these restrictions, the number of public houses has increased from 17,807 in 1870 to 21,838 in 1880.....The increase of public houses has been followed by a marked increase of drunkenness and crime, and the time lost and the money spent by workingmen in public houses has resulted in untold suffering thereby inflicted upon their families. The vice of intemperance is growing so fast in Switzerland as to occasion grave anxiety among men of all classes."

The Nation publishes a Berlin letter upon the alarming increase of intemperance and the use of alcoholic drinks in the place of, or in addition to, the use of beer. Belgium has since 1840, more than doubled the use of alcohol, and in the industrial counties has a dram shop for every seven persons. In Germany the dram shops increased in two years 12,261—about 10 per cent. The Emperor of Germany, in his late address to his Parliament, called attention to the serious increase of crimes and misdemeanors committed by men in a state of drunkenness, and Parliament has sought to limit the number of licensed dram shops. It is apparent that wine and beer are no preventatives of drunkenness. Rather they awaken and stimulate the appetite for stronger drinks.

THE CHURCHES.

—The Wesleyan Theological Seminary at Wheaton closes its secend year June 1st.

—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of the United States was opened at Saratoga, N. Y., Thursday last. Dr. Herrick Johnson of Chicago preached the opening sermon from the text, Matt. 6: 23. Dr. E. F. Hatfield of New York was chosen Moderator by a viva voce vote. A motion by Dr. Howard Crosby was adopted that all honorary titles be omitted in addressing members of the General Assembly.

—The General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian church met in Nashville, Tenn., on Thursday. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. S. H. Buchanan, D. D., of Little Rock, Ark., the retiring Moderator. The meeting was held in the State Capitol. An address of welcome was delivered by William B. Bate, Governor of the State, to which Dr. Buchanan responded.

—The General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church commenced in Lexington, Ky., Thursday last. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. R. K. Smoot, of Austin, Texas, the retiring Moderator.

—A general convention of the Young Men's Christian Association was held in Milwaukee last week. The delegates numbered 700. Robert Weidensall, travelling and organizing secretary said that 3,000 young men had been brought into the church through the Y. M. C. Associations.

—The Union Theological Seminary in New York has received a gift of $40 000. The money will be used for the establishment of a professorship of elocution and voice culture. Prof. Charles Roberts, Jr., will occupy the chair. A chair of Biblical Theology will also be established.

—Out of the 1,300 graduates of Middlebury College, Vermont, 500 have been, or are, ministers of the Gospel under nine ecclesiastical organizations; eighteen have become presidents of colleges or theological seminaries; seventy have become college professors, and forty have become missionaries.

—The anniversary exercises of the Yale Theological Seminary, New Haven, occurred last Thursday. The graduating class numbered twenty-six. At the annual meeting of the alumni the subject for discussion was "Special attractions of the Christian ministry for young men at the present time, and causes which tend to deter them from entering upon the ministerial profession."

—Last week the commencement exercises of Garrett Biblical Institute (Methodist) and of Morgan Park Theological Seminary (Baptist), took place in this city. In the former were fourteen graduates, and eighteen received diplomas for special course. Twenty young men graduated from the latter.

—Richard Weaver, the converted Yorkshire collier, after a long period of retirement from public notice, is now said to be laboring very successfully as an evangelist in Edinburgh under Wesleyan auspices.

—There are sixty Chinamen in Springfield, Ohio, and thirty of them are members of a Sabbath-school. They cannot all attend at the same time, because "the Christians," as they call all whites, will on opportunity break into the laundries and steal their money, so they leave a portion of their number on guard.

—Of seventy-one churches in India and Ceylon connected with the American Board, there are fifty that receive nothing from its treasury. How far does this proportion fall short of that of our self-supporting churches in this country?

—A European merchant at Mandaly, India, imported a thousand glass images of Gautama, and sold them to the heathen. One native bought the whole lot, and made money by peddling them out. The images had blue eyes, by a mistake of the manufacturer. This mistake had to be rectified, which necessitated a few touches of hand-painting on each image. The idolatrous images were made in Birmingham, England.

—At a late gospel temperance meeting in the lecture room of the Y. M. C. A. of Chicago lately, twenty-five men rose for prayer, and testified to the convicting power of the Holy Spirit there present. Thirteen of that number professed Christ. One fine-looking man from Texas said: "Intemperance is my besetting sin, but the Lord has saved me to-night. I will go to the hotel and write to my wife that I have found Christ and am saved." An ex-saloon keeper in this city who never had been in a prayer meeting, who came only out of curiosity, was converted.

—Mrs. Amanda Smith, the celebrated colored evangelist, is evangelizing among the colored people of Grand Bassa, Liberia. She writes that she has given many Bible readings, and that she finds among the women of Liberia a great disposition to study the Bible. She finds strong drink to be the great curse of Liberia, and she is laboring diligently in the cause of temperance reform. She will probably make her permanent work in Liberia.

—A little boy in South Carolina has sent $100 to the Southern Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, the proceeds of the sale of canary birds raised by himself.

—The Scandinavian Lutherans are zealous workers. In Nebraska the Swedish people are busily engaged in establishing a Lutheran college at Wahoo, the county seat of Saunders county. As yet there are only about one dozen Swedish pastors in the State, but they are evidently hopeful and energetic.

—Last year the religious denominations of the United States gave $107,000,000 for charitable and religious purposes. This fact is a conclusive answer to the stuff we continually hear about the terrible inroads that are being made by infidelity, agnosticism, and other forms of error. The last man on earth to spend his money for what he does not believe in is a live American.—Lutheran Standard.

—At a recent conference regarding Christian work among the Chinese in New York, the following figure were given: There are some 2,500 Chinese in New York and its suburbs; there are 400 Chinese laundries in New York; in New York and Brooklyn there are eighteen Sunday schools with Chinese classes. In these schools 600 are under instruction, one school in New York (a Reformed Presbyterian) having 112 Chinese scholars in attendance at one time. Much labor is involved in carrying on these schools, as a teacher is given to each scholar. Some forty of these Chinamen are professed Christians. The Trinity Baptist school seems to have been most successful in bringing the Chinese to Christ. Three or four Christian Chinamen are studying for the ministry, and one has gone back to China as a missionary. The Chinese district in New York is on Mott street just of Chatham Square.—National Baptist.

—Stockport, Scotland, claims to have the most wonderful Sabbath-school in the world. Its membership comprises 400 teachers and 4,500 children, and nearly 96,000 children have passed through the school since its commencement. The singing is led by an orchestra with sixteen violins among the instruments. Dr. McGregor recently preached the sermon on its ninety-ninth anniversary, and he declares that when he heard the hymns sung by from three to four thousand young voices, with the accompaniment of the orchestra and the full force of the organ, he felt as if the windows of heaven were opened.

—The Presbyterians who, in large part, have the New Mexican missions in hand, are excellent work for the Indians. It is far better to have the schools here than to remove the children so far as Carlisle or Moody's school at Northfield. In the first place their friends are most loth to have them go so far, as no people are more tenderly attached to their children than the Indians; and in the next, the very presence of such schools, with the cultured homes that grow up about them, and the educated teachers with whom the parent Indians thus come in contact, do a vast work, indirectly, toward building up a Christian civilization.—Miss Willard in the Signal.

At the annual Conference of the African M. E. Church in Philadelphia, a committee reported condemning in most severe terms the convict or "chain-gang" system as practised in the South, the exclusion of the negro from the railroad cars and hotels, and the proscription prevailing in public travel, and recommended the appointment of a trustworthy person to travel through the South and gather information for a report to be submitted to the coming General Conference. The report was accepted, and it was agreed to hold a mass meeting on Wednesday evening to discuss the questions mentioned in the report.

—The religious interest in Boston and vicinity continues to grow in extent and power. It is said to be more general than at any time since the extraordinary year 1857, when converts were numbered by thousands. A noonday prayer-meeting at Meionaon, conducted by the Young Men's Christian Association, is often crowded, and is bearing much fruit. An all-day meeting, from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M., led during eight successive hours by as many clergymen of different denominations, bore witness to the remarkable state of feeling in the city, both by the large number present and the fervor of prayers and exhortations. There are no evangelists in the field, nor special agencies at work, but the churches are relying on the Spirit's power to attend the ordinary means of grace. The Unitarians look on with wonder at the enthusiasm of evangelical ministers and churches.—Examiner.

—The New York Witness of last week speaks as follows of a great work for the evangelization of the masses in New York: "The fifth anniversary of Mr. C. W. Sawyer's evangelistic work in Cooper Union will be signalized next Sunday evening by the presence of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Moody will give his views on the question, "How shall we bring the unevangelized masses of our large cities under the power and influence of the Gospel?" and Mr. Sankey will sing. The wonderful success of the Cooper Union work, attracting as it does crowded houses every Sunday night Winter and Summer, and growing so steadily that an Annex Hall has had to be provided in which to hold meetings during the week, shows what might be done throughout the city. There is room for a dozen such efforts in this vast metropolis, and it is to be hoped that next Sunday evening a decided impetus will be given to the extension of the work."

—At the recent meeting in Rochester, N. Y., of the Woman's Baptist Missionary Society, the following memorial was unanimously adopted: "There are 21,000,000 of Hindoo child-widows in India. Do you wonder that one of them, in narrating the cruel treatment to which they are subjected, said: 'Oh, God forbid that any more women be born Hindoos.' It is owing to the cruel custom of child marriage and a religious Hindoo law forbidding widows to remarry, with the right of every man to have a number of wives. All this is considered a greater trial and sorrow than the suttee, and the English government, which has abolished the one, should abolish the other. Therefore we, the Woman's Missionary Society of America, respectfully petition the Queen of England and Empress of India, whose reign in India has already brought so many blessings to her subjects, to abolish by law this cruel practice of child marriage, and thus add another jewel to her crown.

A SOLEMN SCENE.

The Observer, published in Moravia, in the republic of Liberia, West Africa, describes a novel scene in the courts of that country at the sentence of a murderer:

"The case of the Republic vs. Singby was called up. Singby was charged with the murder of one Gwyah Sundoo, a woman. The jury, after the examination of witnesses and the judge's charge, went out and soon returned a verdict of guilty. Next day the prisoner was brought into court to receive sentence. His honor, the judge, announced that the court would enter into divine service before pronouncing sentence upon the prisoner. Thereupon eight very appropriate lines were sung by the court and spectators present to the tune of Boylston, following which the divine blessing was invoked by the judge in prayer. After this the prisoner was sentenced to be hanged on Friday, the 26th of January next, between the hours of 12 M. and 2 P. M."

AN EVANGELIST THREATENED.

SPARTA, Kent Co., Mich., May 11, 1883.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:

I send you copies of two letters received by Sister Lura A. Mains from Sparta post office while she was here holding meetings.

Sister Mains has been laboring with me in a revival meeting held in the United Brethren Church, of which I am pastor. She is on the radical line and preaches against worldly conformity, pride, use of tobacco, secret societies and all other evil. After receiving the first letter she read it in the congregation to a full house, hence will be seen the reason for the writing of the second letter, which was also read in the congregation.

The secret societies are much opposed to the meetings, and some tried to hinder the work when souls were being saved. I have the original letters in my possession.

N. HEALD.

LETTER NO. 1.

MISS MAINS:—It has been decided among the secret societies in this part of the country that there is no prospect of silencing you in any other way, and you must die. A sincere desire to save you impels me to risk my own life in warning you. You had better leave the place at once and go quietly and not let any one know where you are going. Please burn this and don't let any one see it. I have disguised my hand-writing, but still some one might trace it out. Don't think us all bad. God knows some of us would get out of this if we could. The Lord bless you. A. FRIEND.

LETTER NO. 2.

MISS MAINS!—You have failed to heed my advice, and, as I said to you, you must die some time. More than that, you have exposed me by reading my letter in public, and I must die also. How could you do such a thing. There is no escape for me; I shall die. Morgan is surely dead, and all who persistently oppose secret societies have to die. Also those who expose anything. You may escape for awhile, seeing your brother is a Mason, but if you continue to talk against secret societies you will have to die at last. I am sorry you betrayed me, but do not repent having tried to save you. Life is worth little after all unless it can be given for others. Do all the good you can, sister, and don't forget the unknown friend who gave his life for you. A FRIEND.

SUCCESS OF MISSIONS.

Sir Richard Temple, long connected with the government of India, and well known throughout the Christian world for his deep interest in the work of missions, in his address before the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church, in this city, during his last visit here, thus answers the question as to whether any success has followed the missionaries' work in that land: "Have they done anything in India? The answer to this must come from well verified figures and facts. No blow is so effective as one given straight from the shoulder, and no argument is so effective on this subject as that drawn from official documents. I have not my papers and figures with me while traveling in America, but I could give you an array of facts of which all Christendom would be proud. They read like the statistics of some great governmental undertaking, but they really constitute the result of private enterprise undertaken in the most sacred of causes. The fear is not that we shall be discouraged by the small result already attained, but that the result is becoming so great, and increasing with such rapid growth as might be well styled, in view of the rapid development of your great country, an American growth, that it may ere long so grow on your hands that you can not cope with it. It is now advancing fifty per cent. every ten years during the generation (thirty years) ending with the year 1880. If it goes on at that rate during the present generation, there will be by the year 1910 about 2,000,000 of native Christians on your hands, and any organization you can make with European agency will be inadequate to deal with them. Your only hope will be in organizing a native church. And this work is already receiving due consideration. Natives of acknowledged ability and piety are entering the Christian ministry, and the government have already had to sanction, in conjunction with the English missionary societies, three additional bishops to examine and ordain the native ministers and deacons. There are now in India three hundred native ministers with four hundred Europeau missionaries, and we hope that ere long the natives will out-number the foreign missionaries."—Christian at Work.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION CONVENTION.

At a regular meeting of the National Arbitration League of the United States of America held at the city of Washington, D. C., April 10, 1883, the following resolutions were adopted by a unanimous vote, viz.:

Resolved, That the National Arbitration League of the United States of America hereby call an International Arbitration Convention, to meet in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., on the 22d of November, 1883.

Resolved, That the corresponding secretary of this league be authorized and instructed to commnicate with the various arbitration and peace societies, yearly meetings of Friends, etc., in this and other countries, inclosing copies of these resolutions, and inviting them to co-operate with the league by sending delegates to said convention.

HOLDEN WITH CORDS.

From "The Free Methodist."

"Holden with Cords, or the Power of the Secret Empire." Price, postpaid, handsomely bound in cloth, $1.00; paper covers, 50 cents.

There is no important history extant but has connected with it numerous other histories of which was the initial point or the dominating influence. The abduction and murder of Morgan set ten thousand secret springs in motion as the surrender of the charters of so many lodges at that time, and the severing of their connection with the order of some forty thousand of its members indicated. The story is one of these histories, and is a collection of facts woven into a story. It cannot fail to be read with interest. Address National Christian Association, 221 West Madison St., Chicago.

GOOD SUMMER READING.

The importance of painting roofs, not only for ornamentation, but for preserving as well, is a matter which is meeting the attention of property holders throughout the country. A Roofing Paint that is reliable in quality and moderate in price is what is needed, and such an article is manufactured by the New England Paint and Oil Co., whose advertisement appears in this issue.

ANCIENT LAW MAKERS.

About the beginning of the Fifth Century, the Salians, after their settlement in Gaul, under their King, Pharamond, they framed a body of laws which have since been known as Salic; but at that time those law-makers knew nothing of the wonderful discovery which works harmoniously with nature's laws, and which is a positive boon to those suffering from Rheumatism, Gout or Neuralgia. We refer to that common sense remedy, Salicylica.

DR. JOHN BULL'S
Smith's Tonic Syrup
FEVER and AGUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER.
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

FARM NOTES.

PRESERVATION OF LAWNS.

It is not as difficult to maintain lawns in prime condition in this country as in England; or rather the spread of wild and noxious plants in lawns in England is more rapid and persistent than in the Northern States of this country. The reason is, the constant moisture in England is favorable to the growth of mosses, plantains, daisies, etc., while our dry seasons keep them in check. The noxious weeds, most of them, have very strong roots, and the leaves lie very close to the ground; so when the grass is cut it is weakened by the loss of its leaves, but the weeds are uninjured, comparatively and continue to thrive. The severe droughts here are not favorable to the continuance of the intense green of lawns noticed in England; our lawns are often dry and brown in July and August, indicating the need of moisture. But the lawns in England are not always green; we have seen Hyde Park when the grass, usually green and luxuriant, was burnt to a crisp, and this was the state of the beautiful lawns all over England.

We have found that weeds are kept in check by the avoidance of the use of animal manures. During the past ten years, we have employed the nitrate of soda and alkiline salts for fertilizing purposes with most satisfactory results. As we have about four acres of lawn to maintain in condition, its preservation has been made a study.

Lawns should not be shaven too closely, and once a week is often enough to use the mower. On small plots the fertilizer may be best applied in the liquid form; and if one is willing to bestow a little extra care upon a lawn it may be maintained in great beauty in the driest seasons.

A barrel of water, in which is dissolved two pounds of nitrate of soda, one pound of muriate of potash, and one pound of the genuine bone superphosphate, may be sprinkled over a lawn of four or five thousand square feet once in two weeks, during the summer, with great advantage, When the salts are applied in the undissolved state, they should be pulverised very fine, and mixed with three or four times their bulk of good sifted loam, and sown evenly. A few pounds of dry plaster (gypsum) may be added to the mixture, as it promotes the growth of the white clover. With a little attention lawns may be maintained in good condition for many consecutive years.

HANDS AND FEET IN AGRICULTURE.

Peter Henderson, in an address at a recent agricultural convention, said that although engaged in gardening operations for over a quarter of a century, it had only been lately that he fully realized how indispensable is the use of the feet in sowing and planting. In the sowing of seeds he thought millions were lost annually through neglect of "firming" the ground around the seeds. During the past dry season, enormous losses were incurred by market gardeners and other cultivators of cabbages, cauliflowers, celery, etc., mainly because they persisted in sowing the seeds without taking the precaution to firm the soil by rolling. His own practice is, after plowing, harrowing, and leveling the land smoothly, to draw lines by the "markers," which makes a furrow about two inches deep and a foot apart; after the man who sows the seed follows another who with the ball of the right foot presses down his full weight on every inch of soil in the drill where the seed has been sown. The rows are then lightly leveled longitudinally with the rake, a light roller is then passed over them and the operation is done. By this method his cabbage and celery crops have never once failed, and what is true of these seeds is equally true of all seeds requiring to be sown during the late spring or summer months. On July, 2, 1874, as an experiment, he sowed twelve rows of beets, treading in after sowing every alternate row of each. In both cases, those trod in came up in four days, while those unfirmed remained twelve days before starting, and would not then have germinated had rain not fallen, for the soil was as dry as dust when planted. The result was that the seeds that had been trodden in, grew freely from the start, and matured their crops to a marketable condition by fall, while the rows unpressed did not mature, as they were not only eight days later in germinating, but the plants were also to some extent enfecbled by being partially dried in the loose dry soil.

The same season in August he treated seeds of turnips and spinach in the same way. Those trod in germinated at once, and made an excellent crop, while those unpressed germinated feebly, and were eventually nearly all burned out by a conuance of dry, hot air, penetrating through the loosed soil to the tender rootlets. A large proportion of the blame often laid at the doors of nurserymen on account of selling dead trees, he attributes to the neglect of growers to compact the soil about the roots.—Observer.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man, by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal: or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished hy the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—President Arthur has accepted the invitation to attend the exercises incident to the opening of the Brooklyn bridge the 24th inst. He has also accepted the invitation to attend the public reception tendered him by the Mayor and City Council of Brooklyn on the evening of the bridge day.

—The steamship Canada, of the National Line, brought to New York from London locomotives built by Stevenson and Watt. The old engine Rocket is among them. It has long been one of the curiosities of the South Kensington Museum, and has bern lent for exhibition at the National Exposition of Railway Appliances at Chicago.

—In the Illinois House of Representatives Wednesday the Harper high-license bill, with the $150 beer attachment, was ordered to a third reading. As the bill now stands the minimum license for all alcoholic beverages, except beer, is fixed at $500, and the minimum license for beer at $150.

—The Michigan House Wednesday passed the bill giving women the right to vote at school, town, and city elections.

—Preparations for the grand display of fireworks which is to succeed the opening of the Brooklyn bridge, on May 24, are being rapidly carried forward. It has been determined to light up the whole structure on the night of this exhibition. The contractors for the display say that it will be the finest ever witnessed in this country, and will be easily seen for ten miles.

—While attempting to save his children, John Payson was consumed in his burning house at Bracebridge, Ont., Tuesday. His 10-year-old boy also perished.

—The steamer Granite State was destroyed Friday morning while approaching the dock at Goodspeed's Landing forty-one miles below Hartford. The flames spread so rapidly that nothing was saved. Five lives are known to have been lost, four by burning and one by drowning.

—A powder explosion in a coal-breaker at Moosic, Pa., Wednesday, shook the whole town, tore one man to pieces, and left no trace of another workman.

STORMS.

—A hurricane at Valparaiso, Neb., Thursday afternoon, wrecked five buildings and injured two men. The section is daily being visited by gusts and heavy rains.

—A cyclone, accompanied by rain and hail, tore through a section of St. Joseph county, Mich, near Sturgis, Monday afternoon last week, causing heavy destruction of farm property, and injuring many persons. At Oronago, Mo., Sunday afternoon, a cyclone demolished all the buildings save one, killed or fatally injured five persons, and wounded fifty others. At Macon, Mo., three persons were killed, and at other points in the State the loss on property and stock is very heavy. The damaged condition of the wires prevents full accounts of the disaster.

—A frame school-house at White Pigeon, Mich., filled with children, was overturned by the hurricane Monday, one boy being killed and several little ones badly injured. The cyclone, besides wrecking two churches and the town school and ruining a number of structures at Southport, Ind., made a descent into the cemetery and tore up or broke in pieces its tallest monuments. Cottages, farm houses and fences were blown down in all directions.

—The late heavy storm in Western Missouri, caused great loss in cattle in drowning. The rivers are very high, and many bridges have been washed away.

—Hailstones fell at Mound City, Ill., Monday evening, measuring nine inches in circumference and weighing six and one half ounces. At Layfayette, Ind., the stones were as large as eggs and knocked down a horse and its rider.

—The city of Racine, Wis., about sixty miles north of Chicago, was struck by a cyclone at 7 P.M. Friday, which demolished more than 150 buildings, killed 10 persons, fatally injured 15, and wounded at least 100 others. The cyclone was announced by a breaking of the clouds, which took on a whirling motion, and struck the earth with a noise which might be compared with the roar and rumbling of a thousand railroad trains thundering over a bridge. The path of the storm is a little over half a mile long, and perhaps a quarter of a mile wide. In this territory here and there a building is left standing. Many occupants of the houses escaped by seeking the cellars and other places of comparative safety, but the cyclone came with such lightning quickness that many were killed before reaching the cellars. In only a few cases were houses moved from their foundations. Those in the center of the storm center simply exploded and fell in ruins where they had stood. The cyclone, as it moved from the city out upon the waters of Lake Michigan, presented a grand spectacle, such as is seen but once in a lifetime.

FOREIGN.

—A dispatch to the Central News from St. Petersburg says the police of that city have been informed of the existence of a plot to frighten the horse of the Czar at some favorable opportunity during the procession at Moscow on the coronation day, and, in the confusion which would no doubt follow, to kill the Emperor.

—A dynamite bomb exploded in a village near Lisbon during a popular fete, killing four persons and wounding twenty.

—The town of Qu'appelle, Manitoba, was almost destroyed by fire Monday last. The Dominion Government's immigration buildings, stored to the roof with settlers' effects, was consumed. The loss is placed at $100,000.

—The news has been received that King Cetewayo, having advanced to attack Oham and Usibepu, the latters chiefs combined their forces and utterly routed Cetewayo. The first accounts of the engagement put the loss at 6,000 men, but this is probably exaggerated.

—Daniel Curley, the second man convicted of the murder of Cavendish and Burke, was hanged in Kilmainham jail at 8 o'clock Friday morning. The jail was gaurded by a force of military similar to that on the occasion of the hanging of Brady on Monday last. Two Catholic priests attended the condemned man.

—James Mullett, Edward O'Brien, Edward McCaffray, Daniel Delaney, William Moroney, and Thomas Doyle, all of whom pleaded guilty to the charge of conspiracy to murder, were sentenced last week. The first five mentioned were each sentenced to ten years penal servitude, and Doyle to five years penal servitude.

—Fitzharris, the Dublin car-driver, was convicted Wednesday as accessory after the fact of the Phœnix Park murders, and sentenced to life penal servitude.

—The instructions of the Vatican to the Bishops of Ireland condemn the Parnell testimonials as an incentive to rebellion against the laws, and says it is intolerable that priest or bishop should aid such objects.

—The Pope, on hearing of meetings at Dublin, in which his instructions were condemned, sent for Cardinals Jacobini and Simeon, and insisted that his letter to the Irish Bishops be strictly obeyed.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.
In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are
COSTLY AT any PRICE.
The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.
The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing
FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.
They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

According to its constitution the annual business meeting of the National Christian Association will be held at 10:30 A. M., on the third Thursday (21st) of June next, in Carpenter Hall, 221 West Madison street, Chicago. This meeting is expected to be of unusual importance and requires the attendance of every member of the corporate body and as many friends as possible should be present. JOHN D. NUTTING, Rec. Sec.

CALL FOR A POLITICAL MEETING.

The Central Committee of the American party is hereby called to meet at the N. C. A. building, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, at 4 P. M., June 21st 1883, to consider the question of calling a National Political Convention at Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, and to transact such other business as may be of interest to the party. A full attendance of the members of the Central Committee and all other interested friends is earnestly requested.

Come and attend the N. C. A. Annual Meeting convening at 10 A. M. and also hear Senator Pomeroy at Farwell Hall in the evening of the same day (Thursday, June 21st.)

EZRA A. COOK,
Ch'n Cen. Com. American Party.

VERMONT.

An Anti-masonic State Convention has been called to meet at Capitol Hall, Montpelier, Vt., at 7 P. M., June 5, 1883, to continue through the following day and evening. All persons who are interested in the reform movement against secret societies are invited to be present and take part in the convention. Gen. J. W. Phelps of Brattleboro, Rev. W. R. Laird of St. Johnsbury, Rev. D. C. Faris of West Barnet, Elder J. L. Barlow of Willimantic, Conn., and other able speakers are expected to address the convention. It is expected that a permanent organization will be effected at this meeting. For further particulars address the undersigned. E. D. BAILEY,
No. 8 Portland street, Worcester, Mass.

NOTES.

THE BROOKLYN BRIDGE.—It was an auspicious opening for the greatest work of modern engineering which moves half a million people a quarter of an hour nearer the business center of New York city, that the ceremonies appropriately recognized the Christian sentiment of both cities. Bishop Littlejohn offered an opening prayer, and Richard S. Storrs, the first representative of the American pulpit delivered the concluding oration. It is fearful to read, however, that the hours of the Lord's day following were filled with confusion, for the multitudes turned to the great bridge for a pleasure resort, running down gatekeepers, police and barricades in the rush. It is reckoned that some 200,000 people crossed it on that day. It will never have a severer test.

THE CLAN-NA-GAEL meets in its hall in Washington, D. C., on the same street, and but a few doors from our headquarters. On St. Patrick' day, March 17th, this Clan turned out in the most expensive and gaudy finery, and rode the most mettlesome steeds. Women were not of the Clan, or in the procession; but they were in demand for the dance at night; and late at night might be heard the roar and clatter of their revelry and carousal over the woes of Ireland and the secret religious mysteries of their clan which afford neither food for the starving, freedom for the oppressed, or deliverance from priest-craft and the vices which it pardons and promotes.

YOUNG MORTIMER D. LEGETT was killed at Cornell University, Ithica, N. Y., while being initiated into a Greek letter fraternity. Pres. C. A. Blanchard undertook to lecture there on "Who killed Mortimer D. Legett?" The University students broke up the lecture, throwing cayenne pepper in the eyes of the police. The professor of Natural Science denounced secret college fraternities. The faculty under Pres. White voted, "College societies must not practice initiations which endanger life," and let the mills of Satan grind on. The following is from the Philadelphia Presbyterian, May 12, 1883: "Some of the graduates of Cornell University are not satisfied with its present condition and prospects. The number of students has fallen off, and the Alumni trustee says that there 'is not that average of talent in the faculty which made the University's first year a success.' President White has appeared in defense of the institution, but the Alumni trustee treats him very cavalierly."

IRISH NATIONALITY.

In an article, May 10th, on the Philadelphia Irish convention, the conviction was stated that, "The wrongs of Ireland are not fancies but facts," and some brief reasons were given for that opinion. The formation of this National League, which is by far the most important movement of the kind ever inagurated in this country, demands further consideration.

Mexico and the teeming populations south of it extending to Cape Horn, though not deficient in the essentials of manhood, have not succeeded well in arts, culture, and popular institutions, though they have again and again attempted to model their governments after that of the United States, which, in the world's speech, really stands for the continent, in-so-much that when "America" is spoken of by the people of Europe, they mean the United States. If this movement does not turn out a disgusting failure, like the English Chartist movement, which it closely resembles in resources and numbers; if the League is to avoid the end of the Chartists, it must avoid their methods; it must not travel their road. It is now just forty years since Feargus O'Conner, the O'Donovan Rossa of the Chartists, set those earnest and trusting men to manufacturing pikes; and in six short months the whole movement went to pieces and was wiped out. Such, and even more disgracefully fatal will be the ending of the League, unless it takes distinct ground against the secret assassination societies of Europe and the United States.

The just and fearful sentence of God is, "Thou shalt take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, but shalt take him from mine altar that he may die." Secret assasination is murder; and not only murder but cowardice, which never yet succeeded in anything but in suicide.

This great convention attempted neutrality towards the Nihilists and sneak-assassins. The attempt was a failure. One of the delegates attempted a witticism on the murder of Cavendish and Burke. He came, he said, "from the Tombstone district of Arizona; a district also represented by Cavendish and Burke." Such an attempt to be funny over assassination, resembles the grin of a corpse! True, the murder-delegates were kept back. But all a secret society asks is to be "let alone" and it will find or make the means of success.

A secret society called "The Society of Jesus," was formed at night, in a cave near Enresa in Spain; and, though suppressed by the Pope, it defied him, and in 1534 established itself in spite of him, and the word Jesuit is now the world's synonym for jugglery and craft! That society is now the head center of all the secretism on earth. It is no part of the real "Holy Catholic church," which existed centuries before Jesuitism had its birth and being.

Now this priest-secrecy is so secret that Father Walsh of Waterbury, Conn., praised the widow Walsh in Ireland who suffered her innocent son to be executed for a crime, though she knew her son's innocence, and knew the criminal; because she had sworn to conceal that criminal and his crime!

Now, this priest-secrecy is no part of the Catholic church, but an odious and detestible fungus on it. Dr. Butler's catechism for the Catholic Sabbath-schools says: "God hath promised all blessings, even heaven itself, to the believer through our Lord Jesus Christ." What need then of Jesuitism? Again, Christ "hath an unchanging priesthood." (Heb. 7:24), hence all human priests since his day are counterfeits and usurpers.

Now, therefore, "Irish," or any other "nationality," cannot stand on priesthood, because nations cannot stand on error but on truth; and human priests are errors. Much less can Irish nationality stand on Jesuitism, which is a fungus on the Romish priesthood.

The convention did right to snub O'Donovan-Rossa and his dynamites. For the dynamites are incarnate devils, whose father was a "liar and murderer from the beginning." Whereas, the priests, at least some of them, put forward in the convention were doubtless good men and believers in Christ. Mazzini, Garibaldi and their compeers were Freemasons, but patriots. But omitting Christ from their lodges, their successors became Communists, Socialists and Nihilists, proposing to destroy oppression by crime! The fight between priest-secrecy and lodge-secrecy is a fight between a kite and a snake. Either or both will wreck the hope of Irish nationality just as sure as dynamite will blow up a building.

The clause which will save the movement is in the preamble, and is this: "SINKING ALL PRIVATE PREJUDICE AND CREED DISTINCTIONS, WE UNITE," etc. Let Irishmen honestly live up to that, and Irish nationality will result as sure as sunlight brings bread and flowers. The Ten Commandments are not sectarian. The Sermon on the Mount is not sectarian; nor is Christ a sectary. Let Irishmen build on these and millions throng their platform and pray for their success.

DEMOCRACY AND RELIGION.

The tendency of democratic liberty is to overflow religion and sweep away its landmarks. Democracy feels that everything must be subject to the vote. Is there really a hell? Put it to vote and see! The majority have it; there is no hell. This is the way the democracy is inclined to do things.

Under a democracy one religion is as good as another. Mormonism in Utah and Masonry in Massachusetts are all right. If a man of moral principle should undertake to abolish Masonry in Massachusetts, he would be regarded very much as he would be if he were to attempt to destroy Unitarianism, Episcopacy, Methodism, Romanism, or any other form of religious belief. Masonry has in fact become the prevailing religion of New England. It is a religion that reconciles all kinds of knavery with a pious life and moral principle (it is thought) and is therefore very popular. Its selfishness, its meanness, its trickiness, its covert hostility to the Christian religion, are all lost sight of so long as it is a religion. It is a religion, a good religion, an honorable religion, better than the average run of religions, and is therefore worthy of being sustained. If this is not the condition of the New England mind toward Freemasonry, then appearances are very deceitful.

This being the case, the consequences to our republican government can be clearly foreseen. A republic cannot be sustained upon such a religion as Freemasonry. Nothing short of the imperial form of government is suited to such a religion. There is no justice where the square and compass are associated with the Bible, and sheep-skin aprons are worshiped.

A case has recently occurred in New England which will serve to illustrate this point. A head officer of a National Bank squandered in some very improper way about half a million dollars, thus inflicting great injury upon many poor people, some of whom were driven to despair, madness and death by it. His sentence was six years confinement in a reform institution, where he is leniently treated. A misdirector of the bank was sent to Congress, and its teller was given a twelve hundred dollar clerkship. At about the same time a horse-thief, a hardened one it is true, was sentenced to the penitentiary for ten years. This we regard as a fair specimen of the equality of justice among men who "meet on the level and part on the square."

Are the members of the Masonic religion in the majority in New England?

No; nor are the church members in the majority. But the lodge members are having more influence in everything that concerns the interests of society than the church-members. So we believe. They are compactly organized, like soldiers; are emboldening each other in infamous practices, and are always zealously at work advancing the interests of their organization, to which they are as doggedly attached as the Mormons are to their organization.

Many years ago we remember to have heard a New England youth give his experience of New Orleans society. He was deeply impressed with the fact that his free talk against Romanism made some people very wrathy. If he were to return to New England at the present day he would witness the same phenomenon; but with this difference, it would be the members of the lodge-religion that would show wrath at free speech. Nowhere in the world will a man grow pale and tremble in the face of power quicker than the average New Englander will in the face of the Masonic lodge. It is the religion of Mammon; it is the religion of coveteousness; it is the religion of terror. Having abolished hell from the other world, it substitutes intimidation and throat-cutting in this.

Has not the New-Englander spirit enough to rise against this tyranny and vote it down? My simple-minded friend! you may ask a New-Englander to dethrone Queen Victoria as well as to suggest to him the dethronement of the lodge. You might as well expect a trembling dozen of raw recruits to stand and fire their bullets against a whole army as to expect that the New England man would fire his ballot against the "ancient and honorable fraternity of Freemasons." You might as well expect to see a "bride of Christ" leave her convent and run away with a pugilist, as to see the New-Englander question the hegenesny of a Royal Arch Mason. He is all entangled and bound up in the lodge; his uncle, his brother, his father, his clergyman, his doctor, his rival, all belong to it perhaps; and then, how many "good men" are there not among the Masons? You can hardly begin to root up any one vicious thing in New England but you will find it enrooted and enlaced with the very fibers of the Masonic lodge; and that is gaining a hold of New England soil firmer than that of Puritanism.

The political leader of New England may affect to treat the lodge with silent contempt, and lift his head, mountain-like, serenely above the mists and clouds of Masonic villainy, but in reality he fawns, and crawls, and licks the dirt before it. His life is shaped by it. He is deserting the responsibilities of republican citizenship and suppling his knees to dance attendance on an emperor.

If this view of New England society is correct, the West will make a fatal mistake if they still continue to look to New England for headship in religion, morals and politics. New England literature is hollow and void of moral excellence so long as it remains silent on such an infamy as Freemasonry. It has been amply proved, we believe, that the excellent poet Longfellow utterly misconceived the character of Freemason Paul Revere in his sensational ride; but this was a faint misconception when compared with that which must inevitably exist wherever Freemasonry prevails. Society is approaching a state of moral anarchy where such scandals as the Tewksbury almshouse, the election of Gen. Butler, the absolution of Oaks Ames, the censure of Charles Sumner, the defalcations of deacons, the numerous breaches of trust of church members, the frequent divorces, etc., etc., are attributed to the Christian church and not to the Masonic lodge. The lodge is ever busy disparaging the church, while the church unsuspectingly opens its arms to the lodge. Of all the moral confusion that society ever suffered, none could be greater than that where lodge worship and the worship of Christ are attempted to be reconciled in one and the same person, or in one and the same church.

NEW-ENGLANDER.

NATURE A MIRACLE.

BY MRS. S. C. KENNEDY.

A child sometimes gives lessons
To older, wiser heads;
The faintest star of evening
O'er earth some brightness sheds.

So even Hindoo ignorance
Some vital truth may name,
A living faith revealing
Which puts Christian doubt to shame.

And perhaps the honest spirit,
In this Hindoo legend old,
May find among its rubbish
Some thought of purest gold.

A Brahmin, says the legend,
Wearied with pondering o'er,
And seeking in his blindness
Proofs of Almighty power,

Discouraged, sought a teacher,
A priest, whose wisdom grand,
Had gained him reputation
To the borders of his land.

And, "Tell me!" cried the Hindoo,
"I would know this very hour;
If there's an Almighty spirit
Where are tokens of his power?"

The priest without replying,
Seeming to pay no heed
To the Hindoo's earnest question,
Buried a small brown seed,

Right in the soil before him,
Which quickened into life,
Burst from its close, dark prison,
And rose with beauty rife.

It spread its tiny leaflets;
And the man with wonder mute,
In one short hour beheld the tree
Bear branches, blossoms, fruit.

Gazing as on a vision,
Too real to be denied,
Yet far above man's wisdom,
"A miracle!" he cried.

"Look round you," said the teacher;
"See! o'er vale and mountain rise
Ten thousand thousand miracles
To greet your searching eyes."

"For what slow Nature raises
By seasons from the sod,
Before your careless vision,
Is a miracle of God."

San Jose, Cal.

WEEK-DAY SERMONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

"Where shall I read, Mrs. F.?" I inquired the other day—my usual question as I take up the sacred volume, still cherished as fondly as if its owner's eyes were not as blind to its pages as they are to those of God's other book which she studied once with such reverent delight, finding in every stone and leaf and flower a scrap of the Father's handwriting. Yet she never complains; her little room is peace itself. And so truly does her affliction seem "the shadow of God's hand," that sitting by her side with all the din and strife of the world shut out, I always feel as if in a sanctuary. Holy voices speak to me out of that consecrated stillness, and I go away with new strength for the burdens of the morrow, more thankful for the gift of life, more ready to deny self and follow the Master "whithersoever he goeth."

But all this is off the track of my present subject which was started from reading the twelfth chapter of Revelation. For when I came to that triumphant strain of victory in the tenth verse, "Now is come salvation and strength, and the kingdom of our God and the power of his Christ, for the accuser of our brethren is cast down which accused us before our God day and night," Mrs. F. interrupted me,

"I have thought of that passage so often. When I hear worldly people finding fault with Christians then I say to myself, there is 'the accuser of the brethren.' For it is the same old Satanic spirit that accused Job. We expect to see that spirit in the world; but oh, it is a sad thing for Christ's cause when it gets into the church. Grumbling, fault-finding Christians work more mischief than all the libels and slanders of infidelity can do to the end of time."

And is it not so, beloved brother or sister? Are there not at least ten church members who will join in Mr. Worldly's sneer at Deacon Lovegain for always putting his biggest apples on top of the barrel, to one who will go to him in private and faithfully warn him that his soul is in danger? And though it may be sadly true what Mrs. Carping tells you about Sister So-and-So, what right have you to discuss that sister's failings with one of the world's people? You would resent it as an insult if some stranger should presume to talk over with you the faults and misdoings of some member of your family circle; and the deeper your inward sorrow at his or her derelictions from right and duty the less inclined you would feel to converse about them with outsiders.

When brothers and sisters of the great household of faith so far forget their divine relationship as to be willing to join the world in ridiculing each other's infirmities they give the accuser of the brethren an immense advantage. Yet to wink at sin is criminal too. "Reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and patience." That is the true charity which "covereth a multitude of sins." Let your light shine out broad and clear, and not only will it be the condemnation of all who walk not according to the truth, but it may show many a wandering soul the way back.

Perhaps the accuser of the brethren never did a better thing in this line than when he invented the various secret orders. They stand like Beelzebub's tower in Pilgrim's Progress, and these are a specimen of the venomed arrows which he shoots therefrom right into the very camp of Jehovah: "There is more true brotherhood among Masons than among Christians." "If a man only lives up to the teachings of Masonry it is all he needs." "Odd-fellowship is better and more benevolent than the church any day," and so on ad infinitum. Young converts are chilled and disheartened, sinners encouraged and Christ dishonored. Now the church knows whether this is a lie or the truth. Her ministers know whether Christ alone can save men, or whether there is another way of salvation equal to or better than his. And when for the sake of a false peace, church and ministry instead of combatting the slander with godly indignation, agree to be silent and thus give it their tacit assent, they help the accuser of the brethren mightily. For he knows very well that a few statistics and a heart full of courage in the Lord would soon spike all his batteries in that particular direction. Satan is cast out of heaven. He cannot accuse you before God, for another stands there—our Mediator and Redeemer, Christ, blessed forever. But he is still the accuser of the brethren, though his field is narrowed. His darts fall thick and fast, and they are dipped in cruel venom. But to fight Satan is one great object of our being in this world to-day. Let us gird on our armor and go forth to the battle.

MINOR SECRET ORDERS.

Some may look upon the minor secret orders as innocent; but observation shows that they are like "the little foxes that spoil the vines." Nor is this to be wondered at, when we consider the following facts concerning them:

1. They are modeled after the major orders.
2. Their authorized worship, like that of the major orders, is deistic.
3. They have most of the faults and features of the major orders.
4. They train for the major orders and lead into them.
5. They nourish the principle of secretism, which culminates in Freemasonry and Jesuitism.
6. Members of the major orders enter them to control them.
7. They minister to a carnal and satanic appetite for craft and concealment.
8. Their tendency is to dissipate piety, if any is found, in their votaries.
9. Many of them partake largely of the nature of hoaxes; the Patrons of Husbandry, for instance.
10. Not often are their real ends those avowed to be the primary objects of their organization. The ends aimed at by their founders are often the reverse of those held out as inducements to such as they seek to dupe.
11. They have been weighed and found wanting as reformatory agencies. They even neutralize much of the reformatory power of their members.
12. They generally seek to obtain the credit of being chief agents in reforms which they really tend to vitiate or defeat.
13. Like Bedouins of the desert, their members are ever ready to pounce upon open methods of reform, to confuse and control, and, if possible, to appropriate the fruits of the labor and influence of open workers, while those secretists hinder rather than promote those reforms, by their underhand and clannish methods.
14. Their members sometimes join in with open methods, just enough to quiet the popular demand for such, and then try to render such methods futile, that secret methods may be exalted.
15. Time generally proves the organizations of the minor orders, in every place, to be failures; and so they involve all the inconvenience and expense of failures.

For the foregoing reasons, the wisdom of any church which forbids its members holding connection with minor secret societies, is most apparent. No church could long exclude major orders and yet tolerate the minor orders. Those, who have in the past advocated the modification of the law of the United Brethren church, so as to tolerate the minor secret orders, know full well that such modification would be only the beginning of the end so much desired by themselves, the toleration of the major orders.—Milton Wright.

SHAKESPEARE ON OATHS.

BY W. H. PARKER.

One of the strongest arguments against the antiquity of Freemasonry may be found in the works of Shakespeare. His versatility in knowledge is wonderful. He touched upon almost every branch of human learning in his day; law, medicine, navigation, history, astronomy, war, science, in fact every department of human learning was freely drawn upon to illustrate and embellish his writings. Occasionally he referred to events recorded in the Holy Scriptures; but one may search in vain for any reference in his writings to Masonry. Now the conclusion is irresistible that there was no such thing known in his day else he would have referred to it in some way.

Secretists make great account of the sanctity of their oaths or obligations. Let us see what Shakespeare says in reference to extra-judicial oaths:

> "An oath is of no moment being not took
> Before a true and lawful magistrate
> That hath authority over him that swears."

And again:

> "It is a great sin to swear unto a sin,
> But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.
> Who can be bound by any solemn vow
> To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
> To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
> To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
> To wring the widow from her customed right,
> And have no other reason for this wrong
> But that he was bound by a solemn oath?"

CLAN-NA-GAEL.

THE ORIGIN AND HISTORY OF THE SOCIETY—FOUNDED BY A FREEMASON ON THE PLAN OF MASONRY —FORCED INTO DYNAMITE DEALINGS BY REVOLUTIONARY MEMBERS.

[From the Brooklyn Eagle.]

"The Clan-na-Gael, the organization which must assume responsibility for Dr. Thomas and Bernard Gallagher, Lynch, and other alleged dynamiters now under arrest in London, is a secret and oath-bound society," said a well-known member of one of the clubs which meets in the vicinity of Court and Fulton streets to the writer recently. "Its history is no secret to advanced Irish revolutionists in this country, but it is a secret to 95 per cent. of the men who belong to it. Such a statement may seem paradoxical to a man like you, who know nothing of Ireland and her revolutionary societies. The origin of the Clan-na-Gael was a somewhat peculiar one. In 1869 the Brian Boroimhe Circle of the Fenian Brotherhood of New York city had a membership of about 700, comprising business men and others influential in political circles. One of the members was a candidate for office, and his friends brought up the question of his indorsement in the circle. Mr. Michael Sheady, an honest and sterling patriot, opposed the dragging of American politics into Irish national societies, and vehemently denounced the proposed action of the circle. He held that every man could and should vote as he saw fit, regardless of the fact that the candidate was a member of the Fenian Brotherhood. The candidate was endorsed and Mr. Sheady and his friends immediately left the circle. Mr. Sheady was a Freemason, away up in the order, so that he might be designated a distinguished member of the craft. He called his friends together promptly and proposed starting a new organization independent of the Fenian Brotherhood. He saw that the well-to-do Irish-Americans, business men especially, kept aloof from the Brotherhood, and he proposed getting them into the new organization. The United Brotherhood, now known as the Clan-na-Gael, was started, and the club, known as No. 1, but the name of which I cannot now remember, was formed. The intention of Mr. Sheady was that the United Brotherhood should be a tender to the Fenian Brotherhood by assisting them with money when they took any decided step for the advancement of Irish freedom. The intention of Mr. Sheady was, as I have already stated, to enlist well-to-do Irishmen in the cause. Many of that class kept aloof from the Fenian Brotherhood for various causes. As the members of the United Brotherhood were not expected to do any fighting, men of some means only were courted as members. The initiation fee was placed at $2.

MODELED ON THE PLAN OF MASONRY.

"I have stated that Mr. Sheady was quite a distinguished Freemason. Every member of the Masonic order belonging to the Clan-na-Gael must admit that fact, even though they had never heard of such a man as Mr. Sheady. The fact is that Mr. Sheady, as he stated publicly at the time, modeled the United Brotherhood, or Clan-na-Gael, as it is now known, on the plan of the Masonic order, there being very little difference between their workings or even the titles of the officers. Freemasons—and there are some of them in the Clan-na-Gael—must have been agreeably surprised when inducted into a Clan-na-Gael club. The forms are quite familiar to them, so much so that they may have doubted whether some of their fellow-craftsmen of the Masonic order were not getting up a joke on them before they 'saw light.' Of course, few if any members outside of the Masonic body can realize the nature of the forms and never once suspect their origin. Ninety-five per cent. of the members of the Clan-na-Gael of Brooklyn will be very much surprised when I tell them through the Eagle for the first time that the forms of initiation of Masonry are no secret to them now.

"It must be said that none but the better class of Irishmen in this country belong to the order. The startling ceremonies attending the inducting of a member fills him with the idea that the secrets of the society are something wonderful, and that his election implies extraordinary confidence in him on behalf of his associates. Three black balls exclude a man, so it will readily be seen that the society is in a sense exclusive. Its secrets have never been violated, and Lynch, the informer, if he really belonged to the order, apparently knew but little about it. In fact but few members, outside the executive of the club, whom I shall designate the Chairman, and the district member, know much about the secrets since the society became actively engaged in revolutionary objects. A feature of the initiation is that a man, when sworn in, does not see the members, although they see him. After taking the oath he is admitted to light and sees his associates. The outside and inside sentinels and the guides, and even the mode of addressing the Chair savor of Masonry. The forms certainly give eclat to the order.

THE CLAN-NA-GAEL'S FOUNDER A FREEMASON.

"Mr. Sheady was, most unquestionably, actuated by the best of motives in forming the Brotherhood, and aimed at bringing the business and well-to-do class of Irishmen into the order who would have nothing to do with Feinanism. He thought it best to surround it with the safeguards of Masonry, so that well-to-do Irishmen could assist the cause of their country without being paraded in public.

"The United Brotherhood dragged along slowly until after the failure of the proposed raid on Canada in 1870. Many of the members of the Senate wing of the Fenian Brotherhood then joined the United Brotherhood or Clan-na-Gael. The society has probably 10,000 members at present. Brooklyn is really most influential in the councils of the Clan-na-Gael, since we have about fifteen clubs here, while there are probably not more than ten in New York. Brooklyn, New York and Jersey City are divided into five districts, as well as I can remember, over each of which there is a district member. You see the plan of Masonry is carried out here. The ancient craft has District Deputy Grand Masters, and the districts are given in numerical order. The name of the Executive of the Clan-na-Gael, or the title of the office, is not probably known to 80 per cent. of the members to-day. In this connection I will say that Lynch, if he ever belonged to the order, was kept in perfect ignorance of its workings, and most unquestionably knew nothing about its Executive or the title of his office. He referred to O'Donovan-Rossa as the 'old man' who was to furnish the money, but Rossa had no more to do with the business than Gladstone. In fact, the man at the head of the Clan-na-Gael and Rossa are bitter enemies. But in tracing the history of the Clan-na-Gael I must say a few parting words as to its founder. When Stephens came to this country the second time and organized the I. R. B. Mr. Sheady was among the first to join it. In resigning from the Clan-na-Gael he stated that he did so because it had departed from the purpose for which it was organized. Too much American politics had crept into it. Mr. Sheady, who was, in my estimation, as good a patriot and as sincere a man as Fenianism ever produced, died four or five years ago."

"I see by an interview in a morning paper that ex-Coroner Burns of Jersey City, said that it was O'Donovan-Rossa who sent Lynch and the other men arrested in London, over to do the work."

"He is mistaken. O'Donovan-Rossa had no more to do with sending the men over, or a least Lynch and the Gallaghers, than President Arthur. Of course I cannot say whether he knew Lynch and the Gallaghers or not, but when one part of Mr. Burns' statement is incorrect the assumption is that all of it is."

"Has the Clan-na-Gael been long in the dynamite business?"

A MAIDEN EFFORT IN THE DYNAMITE BUSINESS.

"I had not intended to say much on that subject, but I may as well tell you all as I understand it, since it is bound to come out. The society was reluctantly forced into it by the revolutionary members not long since. The men I refer to clamored for action, and threatened, in case something was not done, to side with Rossa. The result was that it was decided to make a maiden effort with dynamite. The Gallaghers and Lynch and others were probably sent over to do the work. They were novices in the business, and not trained revolutionists like the Fenians. Hence their failure and the arrest of the men. Had they been revolutionists, Lynch would never have lived to testify in dock after his failure to produce the box entrusted to his keeping."

"Then the Clan-na-Gaels were not concerned in the attempt to blow up the Government building in London?"

"As I understand it they were not, and the Gallaghers and Lynch were even in total ignorance of the men who did. The fact that Lynch could give no information on that point bears out my assertion. If the New York papers had applied the test of cold reason to the bosh they printed they would have seen that the so-called statements were simply a mass of contradictions."

"Then you consider that Rossa and his council are better revolutionists than the Clan-na-Gael chiefs?"

"I am forced to that conclusion by results. Rossa's men applied dynamite to the London Government buildings and there was no arrests. The men who executed Cavendish and Burke were very likely followers of Rossa. They did their work well, and had they exercised sufficient prudence and left the country, they would never have been discovered."

IRISH REVOLUTIONARY SOCIETIES AND AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

A writer in the North American Review for June, Edward Self, gives a very forcible presentation of one feature of the Irish-American movement against England, namely, the management of the Irish secret revolutionary societies, and their declared purpose to raise international difficulties, even to the event of war. From this lengthy article are taken the following passages:

Whether the Irish in Ireland have or have not ground of complaint against their landlords or against their Government is a question with which the Irish in America, as American citizens, have nothing to do. They have no right to embroil themselves or our Government in foreign contentions. To attempt it, is, to say the least, a most ungracious return to the American people for the privilege of citizenship. When adopted citizens publicly and ostentatiously declare their purpose to inflict death and destruction upon persons and property belonging to a country with which we are in profound peace,—announcing their intention to destroy ships at sea, together with their inoffensive passengers and crews,—we have such a glaring defiance of American sentiment, and if not an actual violation of American law, so near an approach to it, as to make it worth while to consider whither we are drifting.

Notwithstanding the disgust created by the long catalogue of agrarian crimes in Ireland, and the well-known fact that the criminals derive encouragement as well as pecuniary support from their fellow-countrymen here, little or no public exppression of disapproval or condemnation has been heard from any of our adopted Irish citizens, except, perhaps, in respect to the murders of Cavendish and Burke. That class of our public speakers who are so prompt to fire the Irish heart have kept a most significant silence upon this topic, not because they really approve of the outrages, nor because the immense majority of the Irish-born voters approve of them, but because they dare not oppose the blatant men whose identification with desperate rascality abroad has made them a power in the slums here at home. Of the 1,854,571 natives of Ireland in this country, only a small percentage can be justly charged with abetting the crimes we allude to. It is their misfortune that they have been so shamefully misrepresented by self appointed leaders; it will be their fault if they do not find a way to resent it. Unless they do repudiate these perversions of the privileges of citizenship, and insist upon the observance of the restraint which common sense dictates as an adjunct of naturalization, the question will suggest itself to the public mind: Should citizenship be conferred on those who show themselves unworthy of it? If a class or a nationality is prone to agrarian crimes, here or abroad, should that class or nationality be clothed with political power, to be exercised to the detriment of the whole people? Why should we confer political power upon men of a country with which we have but little to do, if that power is used to embarrass our relations with the very country whose commerce is to us of by far the first importance, and to which we are united more than to any other by common laws, common religious ideas, and common speech? . . . .

As we write, an occurrence of the day supplies an illustration of the bellicose oratory so much in vogue at Irish meetings in this counry. The orator was once a member of the Senate of the State of New York, elected as an American citizen, not as an Irish subject or refugee. He spoke as one having knowledge of what he affirmed, and declared that:

"There is an organization working for Ireland's deliverance, and all the gold of the British Empire cannot corrupt it nor obtain its secrets. Notwithstanding the powerful resources of England, she has been able to find but a few poor traitors who have acted the part of suborned witnesses. (Hisses and prolonged applause) What have these men done to hurt us? Nothing. All their testimony does not disclose a hint of the vast power that is to overwhelm the proud empire of England, and the day is speedily coming when it will not be a crime to be a patriot in Ireland. We shall continue to instil venom in every land against these plunderers of the world. It is the duty of all Irishmen in this country to bring about war between the United States and Great Britain. (Cheers.) Put Irishmen in high places—into the State Legislature, into national offices, into the Cabinet of the United States—and they will do their work well."

Such frothy utterances bring votes to the men who pronounce them, consequently there is a constant temptation to politicians of a certain sort to indulge in such idiocy. But the effect upon the illiterate and undiscriminating hearer is to lead him to suppose that agrarian crimes in Ireland are commendable, and that the ferocity of a handful of Irish assasins and their symathizers is of more political consequence than the peace and well-being of fifty millions of Americans. . . . .

Popular discontent has usually manifested itself in Ireland, under the machinations of secret organizations of an agrarian character. Such societies, under the names of United Irishmen, White-boys, Peep-o'day-boys; Ribbonmen, Rockites, Fenians, Land Leagues, aud Invincibles, and under the lead of desperadoes, have controlled large numbers of people, and in some sections have for a while defied the Government itself.

All the Irish societies in this country profess benevolent and worthy objects, but some of them have used the garb of benevolence and religion to further malign and nefarious purposes. They perpetuate foreign feuds, and keep alive race distinctions, both of which are out of place here, and should be made to disappear in the broader life of America. Scheming men, to further their own ambition, flatter and applaud the prejudices of the members; thus the societies become important agents in elections, and, knowing their power, do not scruple to "—deal damnation round the land

On each they judge their foe."

The murders and other atrocities committed by the Fenians in Ireland, and the Irish Mollie Maguires in Pennsylvania, stamp them with a strong family likeness. These secret societies arrogate to themselves the functions of prosecutor, judge, jury, and executioner. From their mandate their is no appeal; the signal given, the victim is doomed. The same illogical and brutal spirit exists in each. In quick sympathy for fugitive criminals, in the mystery of their movements, in contempt for the condemnation of their Church, and in reckless abandonment of restraint, human or divine, the two conspiracies are alike. In both, the object is not robbery, but revenge and murder; and this shocking intent, by some strange beguilement, is gloried in as a resource of patriotism. Should such mental and moral confusion ever attain the ascendency, it would overturn civilization and bring back chaos and black night again. . . . .

In Pennsylvania, the criminals were hunted down, and the crimes stopped. The Irish in Ireland did not send aid and comfort to criminals here, nor in any way interfere with the process of our courts. In Ireland, the difficulties are far greater; therefore, the people, as well as their Government, have a right to expect of us, at least, the friendship of a silent sympathy, instead of an embarrassing interference, prompted by a desire to propitiate the turbulent, not the peacable Irish element here. There was no pretense of inequality before the law in Pennsylvania, nor of extortionate rents, nor of undue governmental restraints. Neither, on the other hand, did the State adjust or scale down rents to suit the necessities of tenants. But in the coal regions, a reign of terror existed of precisely the same in kind as has so often reigned in parts of Ireland. As the victims in Ireland represented a political power obnoxious to their murderers, or else private persons who had incurred their hostility—so, in Pennsylvania, the victims represented, in some capacity, the corporations controlling the mining business, or were persons who had offended the ruffians. Here, as in Ireland, the plots were unraveled, and men in higher station were implicated as ringleaders. At this point the resemblance stops. It is due to the Mollie Maguires to admit that they did not run to Ireland or France for shelter, nor even to take up a collection. Few of the mad revolutionists here, who pretend to be anxious to drive the British out of Ireland, evince any great desire to engage in the work themselves. If a hundred or two of them would only go to Ireland at once, they would at least seem consistent, and gratify Americans as well as the British people. But they will not go; they know that here they may "live long and prosper." The sum of their Irish patriotism is expressed in the old formula: "We are opposed to the cholera, and in favor of the next war with England." They also know that if that patriotism, which Johnson defined as "the last refuge of scoundrels," should fail to render them an ample support, they can, as a last resort, open bar-rooms, become aldermen, get rich, and hope to die in the odor of sanctity.

And the sting of it all is that it is true. As a people, we have debased our citizenship so low, that when we know it is abused we make no sign. Neither of the great political parties dares to raise the standard of duty and obligation, or to oppose the mischievous clap-trap of the day. If the Chinese had been voters, and even one-third as numerous as the Irish, they would have been welcomed—not excluded. The power to remedy the abuse of American citizenship lies in the assertion of American patriotism. When a candidate is known to be in sympathy with men who are in name, not at heart, American, their support should be sufficient cause to insure his overwhelming defeat. We want no divided allegiance, no tools of foreigners, to "make laws for us and govern us," or to force the United States into one policy or another. All Americans, native or naturalized, owe it to themselves and their country to take a high stand upon this matter. The quick defeat of a few candidates for obscure as well as conspicuous places would be a salutary lesson to politicians who generally respect the teachings of adversity.

There is no danger now that imigration will bring hither advocates of monarchy or nobility; consequently, it is not so important that aliens should swear to support the Constitution as it is that they should emphasize their accession to the rights of citizenship, by a solemn pledge to obey the laws, and to utterly renounce their former national and race antipathies. If they object to these conditions, they should not be trusted with the priviliges citizenship confers; their naturalization would be only a sham, and themselves unnecessary additions to the number of irresponsible and inconsiderate voters.

Naturalized citizens should not be entitled to vote until they have resided in the State at least a year after their admission to citizenship. In this respect, they should be placed upon an equality with natives,—citizens from birth,—who are required in New York and other States to be residents for twelve months before they can vote. If this change were made, it would put an end to the corruption attending wholesale neutralizations in the heat of elections, and the courts could consider the applications according to the intent of the law.

Incorporation is a privilege granted to associations on the ground of public utility. It follows, logically, that it is an abuse and a fiction to incorporate a secret society of any kind. This abuse becomes intensely pernicious when such a society is formed of foreigners of one nationality and their immediate descendants, and must, of necessity, foster alien interests in the hearts of those who ought to be devoted to their adopted country.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May, 21, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We had another excellent little meeting at 3 P. M. yesterday in our new Headquarters, 215, 4½ street, N. W., Elder Gibson being in charge. It was made up of Friends, United Presbyterians, Free Methodists, seceding Methodists on account of secrecy, and at least one Universalist who spoke in quite a friendly manner to our cause.

Last week's Cynosure is a most valuable number by reason of the sketch of the life of that great and good man, ex-Senator Samuel C. Pomeroy. It gives the true key to the rise and overthrow of the great slaveholders' and Freemasons' Rebellion in 1861–5 and prior to those years in Kansas, in which such an active, leading and vital part was taken by Senator Pomeroy from first to last, especially in the U. S. Senate in this city of Washington during that fearful conflict. In that struggle I had the honor of taking a very humble part myself, being gone from my home in East Tennessee over four years in the army. I was at Mumfordsville, near Fort Donaldson, Shiloh, Perryville, Stone River, Tullahoma, Chicamauga, McMinnville and Rock Island, Tenn., Resaca and in the great march on Atlanta. It was a "dark and bloody" war and no mistake. The orphans and widows and crippled soldiers on both sides are the only ones that feel its horrors yet, and they are counted by millions; while Jefferson Davis, Albert Pike, and other leading conspirators have been taken up into the bosom of this great government they tried so hard and so long to destroy by pushing others into rebellion, while they were too careful of their carcasses to get hurt.

Yes, this is indeed an age of wonders, as President Blanchard has well said; wonderful for injustice to the innocent by the bloody traitors who brought it on and who are yet living in splendor while their victims by the million are perishing on both sides. "Glorious land of liberty," this, to be sure!

May the Christian Cynosure ever be guided by the same spirit, the unerring Holy Spirit of the Son of the living God, our Saviour, through his faithful, venerable President Jonathan Blanchard, and other great and good men around him.

With the greatest respect,
P. H. GRISHAM.

—Commencement at the United Presbyterian Freedmen's College, Knoxville, Tenn., took place recently. There were two graduates, the first sent out from the institution, Wm. J. Cousler, and Miss Sylvia J. Mason. President McCulloch delivered an earnest and excellent address on the occasion.

SPRINGS OF REFORM—GOOD THINGS FROM RHODE ISLAND.

WESTERLY, R. I., May 21, 1883.

No better illustration of the progress of reform work is afforded than here. A long story could be told, every detail of which would be of interest to those who watch with philosophical discernment the natural and providential developments of God's great plans. An old man, who remembered well the Morgan days and kept alive his convictions, obtained from some source, some books. Occasionally he tried to interest his neighbors, but with the usual discouragement. A series of little circumstances had aroused in a young man a shadow of prejudice against the secret orders. One evening the young man made a neighborly call on the old man. The conversation finally turned to secret societies. The old man tendered the loan of his books to the young man and they were accepted. Within a week the old man was in his grave but his words and books were still living and doing an unexpected work. The young man was convicted, abandoned his one secret order and tried to interest others. All unconscious of any movement in the country for the destruction of the secret orders, he used to muse over the matter and say to himself, "Some one will take up this work somewhere and we shall hear of it."

Like the ship-wrecked mariner on a lonely island, who strains his eyes to catch sight of an approaching sail, this young man has been waiting and watching for a movement which already has fifteen years of growth behind it and a present momentum which is jostling society, politics and religion with its steady progress. Mr. Spaulding came here and found some hungry souls waiting for just the news which he brought.

This town of 8,000 inhabitants lies partly on the Connecticut and partly on the Rhode Island side of the river. Some years ago a man, living on the Connecticut side and doing business across in the other State, was liable to arrest on the Rhode Island side for some misdemeanor. He was a Mason and so also was the constable in whose hands were the papers to be executed. The criminal himself told a friend, who has now told me, that, while those papers were in the hands of the Masonic constable for execution, there was an agreement between himself and the constable by which he had only to notify the latter at any time when he wished to cross the river into Rhode Island and the officer of the law would leave town to avoid meeting and arresting him! This story is unquestionably true and all the parties (I believe) still live here.

Recently the law and order league of this city undertook to free the town from saloons. They obtained evidence against four offenders and prosecuted three of them successfully, securing a heavy fine and imprisonment. The fourth man was a Mason and it was generally predicted that he would go free. Before the hearing of the case a pastor of one of the churches, himself a Mason, and also President of the temperance society, drew up a petition praying for the release of this criminal. To hide the true intent of the petition the name of a poor bar-tender, who was also liable to arrest, was also inserted in the petition and a pitiful story was tôld about his poor widowed mother being dependent on him for a support! The movement was successful. While three unfortunate non-Masons went to jail to atone for their crime the Mason goes unpunished. Such events as these have prepared the way for a successful reform campaign.

Four of the leading pastors of the place are Masons, one of them, a Baptist, is Eminent Commander of the Knights. A gentleman who sometimes preaches and who also is a Mason asked another gentleman if he knew the ministers all smoked; to which he replied, "No," supposing himself certain that they did not smoke. "Well," said the Mason, "they do, for I have seen the four ministers, at the close of a lodge meeting, get off in a corner by themselves and smoke their cigars together." The Eminent Commander pastor has been seen returning from lodge meeting at an early hour of the morning with his sword dangling at his side. I am happy to add that two of these four representatives of the secret clans read their resignations to their churches yesterday and are soon to take their departure.

Mr. C. T. Melville, now a regular reader of the Cynosure, made arrangement for a series of Anti-masonic lectures here. The first one was given Sunday afternoon at Armory Hall where a large audience assembled to hear the religion of Freemasonry publicly assailed. The leading Masons of town were present, grinning and winking at one another before the lecture, rejoicing with evident trembling, doubtless expecting to see a good many loop-holes out of which they could crawl, but wondering also what an Anti-masonic lecturer could say about so venerable an institution. Bro. C. T. Melville presided and Rev. Mr. Morton an able and godly pastor of one of the churches, led in prayer. A reporter of the Providence Journal was on the platform and took full notes of the lecture.

At the conclusion of the lecture leading citizens of the place came forward to insist that instead of going into the churches for economy we should continue the discussion in the large hall and they were ready to contribute toward the expenses. This was an unlooked-for turn of affairs and an hour's consultation among men who had not been previously known as Anti-masons resulted in an agreement to engage the hall again, if possible, and raise money enough for the expenses. This morning friends were making an effort, but of the result I am not yet informed. There are already three more appointments out for lectures and whether we secure the hall or not the lodge is likely to be badly shaken up. For myself I can only wonder and pray. The God who forges the thunderbolts by which the brick and timber and rocks of whole towns are crushed and ruined n a moment does not surely stand aghast at these frail humanly-devised secret lodges which are spared only to make the destruction the greater. The Lord shall have them in derision. As Elijah mocked the prophets of Baal so shall these priests of the mysteries be ashamed of their own folly when the day of the Lord comes.

A letter from O. C. Bailey received before leaving Worcester, was full of interesting items of his work, but the letter is not now at hand. He was detained longer in the vicinity of Brattleboro than had been expected; preaching, lecturing and visiting from house to house. Some gentlemen came from another town to hear him preach and professed to be so anxious to hear an anti-secrecy lecture that they would guarantee him a house to speak in. He accepted their invitation, though suspicious that there might be some trick about it. The men were Odd-fellows.

Two weeks now remain from this date to the Vermont convention, but when this letter is read less than a week will remain in which each reader shall decide what he will do for the success of the convention. No better preparation has probably ever been made for any State convention in New England. Able and experienced speakers are provided. Gen. J. W. Phelps is a veteran in this warfare and is able to do giant service. Rev. W. R. Laird of St. Johnsbury is a younger man, but he has passed through one mob in behalf of the cause and has felt the teeth of the monster. He is a good speaker and thoroughly posted. Rev. D. C. Faris I have not personally met, but unless his friends misrepresent him he is able to strike blows which will produce an echo. Now last of all comes the glad news that Elder J. L. Barlow of Willimantic, Conn., will probably be with us, fully charged with grape and canister. Other able speakers will be present to fill in the odd moments with short addresses. We want to organize the State and prepare for an aggressive movement. The convention will be held at Capitol Hall, Montpelier, June 5th and 6th. Friends of the cause had better be present even if they have to borrow money for their expenses. It will be a joyful event to remember that we took part in the first organization of the State. In the name of the Lord let us go up and possess the land.

QUESTIONS IN MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

A people set up a republic which passes as a Christian republic. Men flock to this republic from all the nations of the earth to enjoy liberty; but, not satisfied with this, they seek to enforce liberty among the nations of the earth by the pistol, dynamite, and the dagger. They are encouraged to do this by secret societies, which, unbeknown to the respectable portion of mankind, have taken posession of the republic.

Now the question is—

First—Are not the Christian portion of this republic morally responsible for the acts of the assassins that go forth from their midst?

Second—Can the really Christian members of such a republic consistently vote for secret society men for office?

Third—Were the doctrines of the Old Man of the Mountain any worse than those of secret societies?

Fourth—Can a man consistently object to the use of wine at the sacrament, and at the same time vote for a secret society man for President—as in the case of Garfield?

Fifth—Is the American Freemason, in a moral point of view, any better than an Irish Fenian, a French Jacobin, a German socialist, or a Russian nihilist?

LETTERS FROM THE SECRETARY.

Massillon, Ohio, May 21st, 1883.

I left Washington on the evening of the 18th, profoundly impressed with the importance of that field as a strategic point. It will require faith and works to maintain a position within short range and under heavy siege guns manned by the keen-sighted and most experienced "Sovereign Grand Commanders" of the secret empire. But it can and it must be done. Bro. Joseph Bowes, whose brave words will be remembered by our readers, takes charge of the building and will keep up chapel services Thursday evening and Sabbath afternoon until more permanent arrangements can be made.

I notice from the Washington papers that two political movements have recently been started, evidently to forestall any general connection of the colored people with the American Party. In conference with Mr. Douglass, he remarked: I'm a Republican, dyed in the wool, and do not believe its mission is ended." I asked, "Has the convention of your people talked of here in September any political significance?" "It may have," he replied, "but it will probably be postponed." Referring to the portrait of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy in the Cynosure, he said: "You have an excellent picture of my brave, noble, honest friend, and I wish him and your cause a grand success." These are doubtless the honest sentiments of Mr. Douglass' heart, may he be as true to his convictions as Pomeroy, Blanchard, Lovejoy, and other abolitionists were to their convictions, when it was a stigma to say that Mr. Douglass or any man of his color had rights that a white man was bound to respect whatever the leaders in political affairs at Washington may do or not do matters little in determining final results. The handwriting is on the wall, and the man, white or colored, who bows the knee to godless policy "to serve a turn," will be written in history with the James Buchanans and the Robert E. Lees of the "Slaveholder's Rebellion," if not overtaken with fate of Jefferson Davis before summoned their final account.

Journeying, I chanced to meet a man from Wheeling, Va. He was a Methodist and a Royal Arch Mason. I remarked, "It is the misfortune of good men sometimes to get into bad associations." He replied, "I have never regretted my connection with either the church or the lodge."

I suggested, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light;" to which he responded, "I have never seen anything wrong in Masonry." The church he admitted was sometimes derelict, but for his brethren of the "mystic bond" he spoke no word of censure. When I suggested a few possible objections, he said, "I do not wish to discuss the question."

I then asked, "Who do you think will be our next President?" He replied, "Harrison of Indiana." I showed him Senator Pomeroy's portrait, and asked, "How would you like to vote for that man?" "O, that man is a fraud."

"In what respect?" said I. "He was a staunch friend of freedom, and made a good record in Congress during the war." "But," said he, "he gave some fellow out in Kansas $7,000 bribe money to send him to Congress again, and then got left."

"Is that so?" I asked. "Yes."

"Who got the money?" "Well, I don't remember the fellow's name, but it was a clear case of bribery."

"Did you ever hear of Caleb Cushing?" I asked. "Yes, he was a Douglas Democrat, I believe, and quite prominent during the war."

"Would you attach any importance to his opinions?" "Yes."

"Now, sir," I said, "I happen to know personally several of the parties in that case, and I have Mr. Cushing's opinion of it. Alex. York is a R. A. Mason, and has sworn under penalty of death 'to espouse the cause of a brother R. A. companion so far as to extricate him from any difficulty.' Senator Pomeroy made a speech in Chicago against the lodge and it resolved to kill him politically, and that bribe affair was the plan adopted to accomplish their purpose." I then handed him a copy of Mr. Cushing's analysis of the case which he promised to read, and after placing a Weed pamphlet in his hand he left the train at Canton, Ohio. This Kansas business is the stock in trade of the lodge and it is a marked providence that a complete answer has been furnished by so able a man as Mr. Cushing.

Bolivar, O., May 21.—Yesterday was a rainy day in Bolivar and the storm still continues. Despite unfavorable weather I was greeted by fair audiences who listened to my remarks with attention. By the courtesy of friends and the judicious arrangements of Bro. Yant. I occupied the Lutheran house in the morning and the M. E. house of worship in the evening. Bro. Yant purposes leaving his farm soon and his time is now fully occupied in the construction of a house in town intended for his future home. Despite their cares and labors both Bro. Yant and his estimable wife found time for numerous kind acts and words, which I shall remember with gratitude, although providential orderings gave me less opportunity for personal conference than I desired. My temporal wants were amply supplied in the families of Bro. Ramsey, Bro. Lamb and Dr. S.——, who are three friends, and by whose Godly conversation I was greatly helped on my way.

Elyria, O., May 22.—I spent last night at the house of our venerable friend, Dr. J. A. Bingham, Mallet Creek. He has passed his ninetieth year, and although infirm in body and with his once keen intellect somewhat impaired, he is ripe for the harvest field and waiting the reaper's coming. Here I met Bro. R. B. Gardner, and learned of the departure of his beloved companion to the brighter shore. Thus one by one the faithful are gathered and their absence is itself a call for more laborers in the Master's vineyard.

USE IT, BRETHREN!

Spring Arbor, Mich.

The following illustrations are gathered from personal contact with secretism as it effects non-members of the lodge in a church where it is tolerated, nay, I may say where it rules. Our friends, I trust, know me well enough not to suspect me of being inactive in reform work. My relation to the grand work of exposing and exterminating secret societies is always the same. My base has changed. I lecture and preach against these Christless systems just the same as when an agent of the N. C. A.

Illustration first happened in Hanover, Mich. It was on this wise: I found a preacher of the Methodist Episcopal church who had entertained me a few years ago at Allegan, and who expressed sympathy for our work. A strong attachment sprung up apparently between us and the intermission had fed it, as the following goes to show.

There was a revival in progress in his church and at the Friends meeting-house, and though I had expected to protract our meeting I declined, on an urgent invitation from our brother to come over and help him. I cautioned him against bringing me into his pulpit seeing I was known as an Anti-masonic lecturer, assuring him it would make him trouble. His reply as near as I can recall it was:

"If my church forbids my fellowshipping a man who I know has religion I will leave it and come to the Free Methodist." I told him he did not know what that meant. Then referred to his liberal salary ($1000 and patronage) and our meager support. Nothing would satisfy him but my preaching, so I yielded and for three days and four nights I did my best. The congregations increased and I believe real awakening sprung up.

Now came the strain from the lodge. Saturday night I went and lectured on Masonry a few miles from Hanover at Moscow, where the lodge is in full running order, never having been disturbed. At the close I announced that I would preach in the Methodist church of Moscow at 3 P. M. next day by invitation of the pastor, and in the evening at Hanover M. E. church. At the hour for preaching I found the preacher in the pulpit and it looked as though he meant to preach, as he was selecting his hymns, however he mustered up courage and called me into the desk. While the choir performed he asked what is your subject for to-day? I told him my mind was not settled yet.

"You will not say anything on Masonry will you?" I answered. "I thought I said enough last night," but couldn't promise.

He answered "Can't you preach the sermon you did at my church on the first evening?" I said I didn't know.

He answered in a nervous manner, "You did not compromise me last night did you?" The choir had finished their song and I was to pray and so the matter ended for that time. God came to my help and for an hour I cried in their ears the truth from: "Do thyself no harm." During my lecture I had congratulated the Methodists in having a non-Mason as their preacher. This I found was the reason for his nervous conduct above referred to.

Worse yet, on the following week he ran around for sympathy and declared he never asked me to preach, but I had announced the appointment un-invited. Further, declared he was not acquainted with me. It was too late,

MICHIGAN ANTI-SECRET ALLIANCE.

A goodly number of those who had subscribed for alliance stock, met at the Grand Rapids Convention; and the outcome of their consultation was the incorporation of a society which took the name of "The Michigan Christian Association." This name was taken the better to comply with the conditions of the statute under which we were incorporated, W. H. Ross, S. P. Poole, M. Veenboer, H. A. Day, C. C. Foote, L. I. Wicker, Geo. Swanson, Jr., H. F. Buffham, and J. Walter were chosen by those present who had subscribed for stock, to represent them in the matter of incorporation, and act as trustees for one year.

The articles of association were issued in duplicate, one to be filed with the Secretary of State, and one for the Association. I had expected to have had a copy for the readers of the Cynosure in this issue, but it sometimes takes Anti-masonic documents a good while to go a short distance. Bro. Veenboer mailed me a copy a week ago, but it has failed to put in an appearance so I will have to give a synopsis from memory.

ARTICLE I. Name.—The Michigan Christian Association.

ARTICLE II. Object.—To expose, withstand and remove secret societies, and other anti-Christian movements. This article is copied verbatim from the same article in the constitution of the National Association.

ARTICLE. III.—Vests the management of the affairs of the Association in a board of nine Trustees, to be elected annually by the member of the association.

ARTICLE. IV.—Fixes the principal office for the transaction of business in the city of Jackson.

The conditions of membership, plans for raising funds, and other minor matters, are left to be arranged for in the by-laws. As there was not time while we were together to arrange the by-laws, by mutual consent of the trustees, W. H. Ross and M. Veenboer were constituted a committee for that purpose. This committee have not been able to meet, but will do the work assigned them at the earliest opportunity. As soon as the by-laws are adopted by the Board, they will be published.

As has been already explained in this paper, the principal condition of membership in this association, is the taking of one or more shares of stock, each share to be ten dollars, payable in ten annual installments of one dollar each. The condition of the subscriptions already taken is that they shall be payable when five hundred shares are taken. I have now on my book subscriptions for one hundred and sixty-one shares, the largest being that of C. C. Foote of Detroit, for twenty-five. We are anxious to complete the five hundred so that we may make the subscriptions already taken available. There ought to be one thousand shares taken and one thousand dollars in the treasury by the time the Board meets in September. Send in your subscriptions friends, and solicit others. Let us have our machinery in running order by the time the lecture season opens. Send all subscriptions until further notice to Rev. W. H. Ross, Allegan, Mich.

IMMUNITY OF THE CHINESE FROM DISEASE.—The Medical Officer of the State Board of Health of San Francisco has given his testimony as to the effects of residence among the Chinese, which has been laid before the Congress. He states that he never knew any disease or pestilence originating or spreading in the Chinese quarter. He admits that the Chinese live quite close, and attributes their healthy condition and immunity from disease to their frugal life. "They eat," he says, "only what is necessary to live upon. They eat to live, and do not live to eat. They are clean in their habits, and they drink no whiskey. I have never seen a drunken Chinaman in my life. They consequently obtain a better resisting power to the attack of disease. They constantly wash themselves, and keep themselves and their clothes clean. The death-rate is greater among the whites than among the Chinese,—greater with adult white people than with adult Chinamen. There have been no epidemics among them, and there has been less smallpox among them than among the whites, the ratio of population being allowed."

ABSOLUTION.—The Masonic lodge, as worked in the Massachusetts Legislature, has granted absolution to Oaks Ames. This is equal to anything of the kind ever attempted by the Confessional. And wherein do the prayers and speeches over dead men's bones on Decoration Days differ from Romish prayers or high mass over the dead? Is the worship of saint's bones more degrading than the worship of sheepskin aprons? Scratch the skin of a lodge-man and you will draw the blood of a Jesuit.

So MOTE IT BE.

—A lecturer on Ireland, Rev. Duncan McGregor, speaking in a Chicago church last week, affirmed that so far as the masses of the Irish people were concerned they were never so well off as at the present time. A judgment that most reflecting minds will approve.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GHOULISH WORK.

CHICAGO, Ill.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It becomes my painful duty to speak of the emissaries of the lodge and their strategy at a certain religious center in this city.

Despite the pretensions of Masons, Odd-fellows, and of secretists generally that applicants are unsought for, that they do not hold out inducements of an inviting character, their actions in many ways show that the reverse is not only true but a prominent truth. That they constantly and incessantly parade themselves in every way possible to get accessions to their number is indisputable.

At the session of the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F. held awhile since in this city, there was referred to the committee "on the state of the order" a resolution instructing the representatives of the Sovereign Grand Lodge to favor legislation making candidates eighteen years of age eligible to membership. Also, referred to the com mittee on legislation, a resolution whereby Odd-fellowship is to become very cheap—almost rivaling us in our work in the same cause, through our publication of the ritual. It is suggested that the lodges "be authorized to confer either degree upon members initiated before July 1, 1882, for $1.00, if application be made prior to July 1, 1883."

The religious center referred to is the Y. M. C. A. and of the emissaries of the lodge that prowl about these rooms and gatherings, forming the acquaintance of young men of promise, one is a prominent physician of this city. How he can spare the time that he thus does from his practice, is one of the things that first attracted my attention. I first learned that he was an Odd-fellow about one year ago, at which time he happened into our place, and while here stumbled on to a stack of books which he denominated a "pack of lies" (or something of that sort). In that discussion, however, he impressed me with the fact that he was by no means a novice in his line. Subsequently, on seeing him around the Farwell Hall meetings, I said to myself, "Why, here is a strange mystery." I had heard it said that where you find a zealous secretist you will seldom, indeed, find him an active Christian. So I began to "rub my head" and think I had been too hasty. Well, matters ran along till about three months ago the "secretist" became almost a regular visitor at the Y. M. C. A. "Senate" (debating society). Then, for the first, I began to see through the game. I once really feared lest I had offended him in not being more "free" with him, and invite his company on the way home; but I afterward found that this is the time when he fastens on his prey. Having selected his victim he accompanies him home.

How many of his kind there are in this business I do not know, but I have learned from this, from the pompous parades, from the incessant self-laudation of their benefits, that the order, if never before, certainly now, is in need of stimulants to prevent extinction. It need not be stated that some work has been done to neutralize affairs in this instance. Some tracts have been circulated, books loaned, and something done in the way of personal conversation, but with what result time alone can tell. It sometimes seems disheartening to see the readiness with which many receive falsehood and imposture; to see how willing, in fact, they are to ally themselves with men who, as individuals, they would not trust for a moment. But the promises are so glaring, and the facilities (outside of our works) for knowing the truth are so meagre, that young men, with the hope of ameliorating their condition, and thinking that nothing can, at most, be lost, make the hazardous and awful (but to them insignificant) venture. The rope once around their neck, the seducer's work is done.

Another matter, in connection with this dear cause, that has been distressing to me, is the amount of information and enlightment necessary to a community on these subjects, before it can ward off the attacks of these men drilled in the schools of darkness. To be a candidate for the "cable-tow" one needs no fitness; the most stupid blockhead, in fact, is likely to become a most efficient and zealous worker. Anti-secrecy, on the contrary, implies investigation. Successfully to combat the spurious, anti-Christian, fraudulent character of secrecy, requires more time than very many indeed can give. Again, time is required to convince one that actual information is possible; and this all the more, as secretists make it their great stronghold, and again, as new converts, intimidated by the terrors that surround them, instantly join in the most unblushing and brazen falsehoods, concerning vital points, necessary to establish the claims of anti-secretists. But if the Lord permits his people to bring home the race, this is surely the path by which it must come.

A MASONIC VICTIM.

WHO KNEW CARINGTON GAVITT?

UNIONTOWN, Kans.

I joined the Congregational church in Granville, Ohio, under the pastorate of Rev. Jacob Little, on the 1st day of January, 1832, and a Mr. Gavitt was a member of that church at the time.

There were two Gavitts (brothers), Ezekiel and Carington, and they were both M. E. ministers, and both left Granville shortly after that date. Ezekiel did not join the Congregational church at all as I know of, but the brother did, and afterward left and went to the M. E. church. I am almost certain that one of them was the person alluded to in Horton's book, "The Image of the Beast," which gives the name of Gavitt of Ohio as having been sacrificed by Masons in consequence of his revelations.

Can any of your publications give any account of that affair to me? I verily believe said Gavitt was a member of the same church with myself fifty years ago, and I am deeply intercsted to know. I have a faint recollection of the sudden and tragical end of Gavitt, and I am of the opinion it is the same man who joined the same church with myself and afteward traveled as an itinerant M. E. minister.

THE WORK GOES ON.

BEDFORD, Iowa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE.—The reform work progresses. The last decade has done much for us as a people. Thirteen years ago a copy of the Cynosure was placed in my hands by the noble mother of M. N. Butler, State Lecturer for Missouri, and junior editor of the Freeman. Then it was a small four-page paper. Then the cause was in its infancy and but few papers dared oppose that liberty-crushing monster, secrecy. The old Morgan agitation had nearly died away. A new and later generation of men played their parts in the world's great drama and the Morgan murder seemed well-nigh forgotten.

Sometimes in the race after fame and wealth, men forget the grand brotherhood of Man. But God never forgets, and in this effort of reform, he has raised up many earnest workers. In Chicago there are at least two papers published in the interest of the anti-secrecy cause, your own unswerving Cynosure and the Free Methodist; while our organ of reform is the ably edited Freeman of Albany, Mo., published by Messrs. Needles and Butler, and we feel sure there are no more earnest workers in the field than these two men.

The war on this soul-degrading worship will go on till the hood-winked worshipers shall see for themselves that they are oath-bound and slaves.

ALTA STEVENS.

MASONIC PRAYER THROUGH CHRIST.

N————, Kans.

From what Anti-masonic works I have read and from conversations upon the subject I have understood that in the Masonic lodge the name of Christ is not allowed to be spoken.

The "Sir Knights" of this town celebrated "Ascension" day by a horse-back parade and calling upon the families of Sir K's in the afternoon and at night, with an address to the public by Rev. Asher of the M. E. church and a brother Knight, after which was a ball and banquet. In the exercises by the K's which was a confession of their religious belief and prayers, read (only lip service) they professed to believe in the birth, death and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, and their prayers were all in His name. Now I was surprised to witness this, and if you can give me an explanation it will greatly oblige an Anti-mason, for it has always been one of my great reasons for not allowing a professed Christian in the lodge, this putting out of the Saviour's name and the proceedings that evening seemed contradictory of what I have hitherto believed and expressed.

In Newton we hear scarcely a word of disapproval toward secret orders until this slight stir on Ascension day. The M. E. minister mounted his steed arrayed in his showy regalia and paraded the streets with his "Brethren in the lodge," who for the most part are men who speak the name of God only to blaspheme, care naught for the church of Christ and believe in free whisky, etc. At night (which was M. E. prayer meeting evening) he left his band for the more important duty of addressing the public in favor of Masonry. Now this is too much for my principles, but when they say (and I believe truly) that this minister tippled with them the beer cup, I cannot accept him as a preacher of the true Gospel, but here he occupies his pulpit Sabbath after Sabbath, and I must say is the most popular minister in the place; but I must also say that his ministerial labors do not prosper as would be desired, for he can not serve God and Mammon. He also was bold enough to declare that were the Masonic order lived up to it was all that was necessary for a man's salvation (or words to that effect).

L.

NOTE.—The discrepancy noticed is but another of the wiles of lodgery. In what is known as Ancient Craft Masonry, that is, the original and primitive degrees, Christ is not recognized. He is rejected as a sectary. His name is not known indeed in the first nine degrees through which all Masons must pass. The first three of these degrees are under the control of Grand Lodges and are called Blue Lodges. The next four degrees are under control of Grand Chapters; then two, the eighth and ninth, are controlled by Grand Councils. Following these are three degrees, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta, which are called degrees of Chivalry and are under the control of Grand Encampments or Commanderies. These latter, which profess to imitate the orders of knighthood which flourished during the Crusades, are profuse with the use of the name of Christ, and by profession are most holy and Christian. It is needless to say that this profession is a hollow sham, for it is made by men who have in the lower degrees rejected Christ, and who in their personal character have no more to do with Christ and his word than any other mere worldings.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON XI., June 10, 1883.—At Iconium and Lystra.—Acts 14: 1-18.

TIME.—A.D. 48, summer and autumn, perhaps into 49. Immediately after the last lesson.

PLACE.—Asia Minor,—province of Lycaonia,—cities of Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe.

PAUL.—Aged 46. On his first great missionary journey.

RULERS.—Claudius Cæsar, emperor of Rome (8); Cumanus, governor of Judea; Vespasian in Britain.

NOTES.

"So spake, that a great multitude.... believed." They so spake so plainly, so convincingly, with such an evidence and demonstration of the Spirit, and with such power; so warmly, so affectionately, and with such a manifest concern for the souls of men; they spake so from the heart, so earnestly and seriously, so boldly and courageously, that they who heard them could not but say, God was with them of a truth, Yet the success was not to be attributed to the manner of their preaching, but to the Spirit of God, who made use of these means.—Henry.

"The unbelieving Jews." Better, But the Jews that were disobedient. The verb is the same which is found in John 3: 36, where the rendering should be, "He that obeyeth not the Son shall not see life." The word is stronger than "unbelieving;" it expresses unbelief breaking forth into rebellion, and so exactly describes the character of these Jews who were persecuting Paul and Barnabas.—Cambridge Bible.

"Stirred up the Gentiles." How the unbelieving Jews evil affected the minds of the Gentiles is not indicated; not impossibly by exciting political prejudice against them as preachers of another kingdom and another king than Cæsar (chap. 16: 20, 21); or it may be that their ministry against idolatry was made an occasion for provoking a Gentile persecution (chap. 19: 26); or there may be some historical basis for the Roman Catholic legend St. Thecla. According to this story, she was converted by the apostle's preaching, and refused to marry her betrothed; the refusal resulted in Paul's imprisonment and banishment. See Conybeare and Howson, vol. 1, chap. 6, or Mrs. Jameson's Sacred and Legendary Art, vol. 2, p. 556.—Abbott.

"Therefore." Paul became well aware that the opposition by adversaries is often an essential means of success. On one occasion, reporting a very favorable opportunity for conducting his work, he describes it by two features: a wide door, and many adversaries. He seems to intimate that one of these two factors alone would not have constituted the opportunity which he valued and enjoyed. Both were needed. If there had not been a fierce wind blowing against his kite, it would not have been able to rise.—Arnot.

"Granted signs and wonders." Miracles were a proof of a divine commission to the Gentiles; whereas, in reasoning with the Jews, the appeal was to the prophecies of the Old Testament, as when Peter preached on the day of Pentecost, and when Paul preached to them in the synagogue of Pisidian Antioch;—Gloag.

"The multitude of the city was divided." The context shows that St. Luke writes of the bulk of the heathen population. No numbers are given, but we may fairly assume that the converts were in a minority, and that they belonged, as a rule, to the lower classes (1 Cor. 1:26, 27), and that the chief men and women of the city, as at the Pisidian Antioch (chap. 13: 50), were against them.—Plumptre. The very things which produced strong conviction in some awakened bitter antagonism in others. The earnest man always stimulates others to earnestness, either of agreement or of enmity.—Taylor.

"There was an assault made." The Greek word refers to a set purpose, or intention formed in the mind, not to its being actually carried out into action (a stir or movement was going on which would have led to an assault, had they not been ware of it Alford). No stone was thrown. See Paley's "Horæ Paulinæ," chapter 4, No. 9, where that writer notices the accurate agreement of Paul's statement in 2 Cor. 11: 25, with the history in the Acts.—Pask.

"There they preached the Gospel." We must suppose that Paul gathered groups of the Lystrians about him, and addressed them in places of public resort, as a modern missionary might address the natives of a Hindoo village. —Conybeare and Howson. Lystra was the home of Timothy, and as he knew of the persecution suffered by Paul in this tour (2 Tim. 3: 10, 11), and was already a disciple at the time of Paul's second visit to Lystra (Acts 16: 1), it is reasonably surmised that his conversion to Christianity took place at this time; that he was converted under Paul's ministry, is indicated by 1 Cor. 4: 15, 17.—Abbott.

"Perceiving that he had faith." By his earnest attention and manner he indicated that what was spoken had been accepted by him with faith.—Cambridge Bible. The Holy Spirit also showed Paul his faith; and faith in one soul easily perceives faith in another. The man believed in Christ as his Saviour, accepted the Gospel, and had still more the faith of healing.

"Saying in the speech of Lycaonia." Hitherto the intercourse between the missionary apostles and the people of Lystra had been carried on in the Greek tongue, the ordinary language of commerce in the cities of Asia Minor; but now, surprised and excited, the Lystrians naturally returned to their native dialect. Scholars are divided in opinion respecting this language. Some think it was an Assyrian dialect, others suppose it was merely a corrupt Greek, athers assume it was a Galatian dialect.—Schaff.

"They called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius." Jupiter (or Zeus), was the greatest of the classical deities, the "father of gods and men." Mercury (or Hermes) was the god of eloquence, and regarded as "the messenger of the gods." The poet Ovid preserves a legend that Jupiter at one time assumed human form, and visited these very regions, attended by Mercury; which accounts for Paul and Barnabas being taken for them. Barnabas was probably older than Paul, and perhaps of more commanding mein (see 2 Cor. 10: 10), and would therefore look more like the superior deity; while Paul, as "the chief speaker," would naturally be identified with the god of eloquence. —Stock.

"Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of." The two apostles, not knowing what the cries meant (which is certainly implied, and which accounts for the dialect being here specially mentioned), were unconscious of the honors in store for them until they saw the sacificial procession; and then, horror-struck, they rushed out to prevent the profanity. Raphael's famous cartoon gives a vivid idea of the scene.—Stock.

"That ye should turn from these vanities." The apostle points to all the pomp and pageantry of the intended sacrifice. The words "vanity" and "vain" were almost the invariable terms used by Jews to describe the emptiness and worthlessness of heathen worship (Eph. 4: 17; 1 Peter 1: 18).—Plumptre. So are all the objects of modern idolatry,—wealth, honor, ambition, sinful pleasure, all are vanities unable to satisfy the soul.—Peloubet.

"Which made heaven and earth," etc. The Greeks generally did not regard the gods as the creators of material things; matter was eternal; the gods themselves were created in time; thus Zeus was the son of Chronos and Rhea, and Mercury was the son of Zeus, or Jupiter; and in their mythology, the various domains of nature had each its own deity.—Abbott. Creation, according to our conception, is one of the facts of revelation (Heb. 11: 3).—Cook.

"He left not himself without witness." God left among them the witnesses of his existence and perfections in the works of creation, and in his benevolent dealings with them. And accordingly we find that several of the heathen philosophers became acquainted with God through the light of nature. Socrates and Plato, for example, though in a certain sense heathens, yet were in another sense the worshippers of the true God. And this knowledge of the true God was perhaps more extensive than is generally supposed.—Gloag.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

What sort of a man does the Old Testament call him who stirreth up strife? What does James say exists where strife is? What rule did Jesus give to his apostles for their conduct when persecuted in one city? What did the Spirit witness to Paul about what was to befall him wherever he went? Before what people did Paul afterwards make an address with very nearly the same thoughts as in verses 15–17 of this lesson?—Scholar's Quarterly.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.—No. 8.

EZEKIEL'S SECRET SOCIETY.

1. Ezekiel was a priest who was carried captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar.

2. The Jews who were left in Jerusalem, instead of being humbled by their punishment, grew bolder in their idolatries, and Ezekiel needed to be shown the wickedness they practiced in order to warn them of their approaching punishment.

3. The Spirit took him to what was called "the altar gate" in the temple at Jerusalem. It was so called because it opened into the inner court where stood the altar of burnt offering.

4. The "image of jealousy" was an idol god supposed by some to have been Astarte, representing the moon. Jerome thinks it was a statue of Baal that during King Josiah's great reformation was overthrown and then restored by his successors.

5. This image was a great abomination because it stood before God's own altar and directly by the entrance, so that it would be the first thing to catch the attention of the worshiper.

6. These seventy represented the Sanhedrim, or great council of the nation.

7. By "the dark," and "chambers of imagery" allusion is doubtless made to the ancient pagan myteries which we studied about in a former lesson.

8. Tammuz was the Syrian Adonis and the same as Baal.

9. The annual festival held in his honor was in June. He was fabled to spend half the year on earth, and half the year in the lower regions, because the sun departs from the earth in winter and returns again in summer. His worshipers, therefore, gave themselves up a part of the time to wild grief for the disappearance of the god, then pretending that he was found again they spent the remaining period in extravagant rejoicings and drunken and impure revels.

10. This was in many respects the greatest abomination of all. First, because of the place. It was in the inner court where only the priests went on extraordinary public occasions, Joel 2: 17; and secondly, because these twenty-five men represented the whole priesthood.

11. The true Israelite prayed towards the temple, 1 Kings 8: 44; Dan 6: 10, but these men stood with their backs towards the temple, and their faces towards the east, the attitude always assumed in the rites of sun worship.

12. Strabo says "they held up a branch or bundle of tamarick called barsom to their noses at daybreak while singing hymns to the rising sun."

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Idolatry is worst when carried into God's house, for then it is the most direct insult to him.

Secrecy is ever a sign of guilt.

The false worshiper stands with his back to God's house—the true worshiper is like Daniel, with the windows of his soul ever opened toward Jerusalem.

God sometimes punishes the false worshiper by leaving him to his idols, for it is possible for men to sin till they lose the power of repentance, just as captives kept for years in dark dungeons lose their sight.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And this is the condemnation that light is come into the world. and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. John 3: 19.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—False worships hate the light.

QUESTIONS.

1. Who was Ezekiel? Ez. 1: 1–3.

2. Why did God show him this vision? Ez. 8: 1–4. What did he see first? v. 2. Who was this glorious Being? Rev. 1: 13–16.

3. Where was Ezekiel carried? Ez. 8: 3. What did he see there? v. 5.

4. What was the image of jealousy?

5. Why was this image a great abomination? What did Ezekiel next see? v. 7. What was he told to do? v. 8. What did he see after doing this? v. 8, l. c. What did he see after entering this door? v. 10, 11.

6. Who were these seventy men?

7. What is meant by "in the dark" and "chambers of imagery?" What did he next see? v. 14.

8. What was Tammuz?

9. How was he worshiped? Where next was Ezekiel brought? v. 16.

10. Why was this the greatest abomination of all?

11. What was the difference between the attitude of these men and that of true worshipers? What did God then say to Ezekiel? v. 17.

12. What is meant by "putting the branch to their nose?" What did God say should be the punishment of their guilt? v. 19. What is said in Prov. 1: 28, and Hosea 4: 17? What do we learn from these texts? See last Practical Truth.

LESSON STORY.

The Emperor Julian, up to the age of twenty, appeared to be a devout believer in the Christian religion. He was then induced to become a candidate for initiation into the mysteries of Ephesus. It is likely that the priests who were very crafty used some trick to make him believe that the gods and goddesses of ancient Greece really appeared and spoke to him. From that time he became a superstitious pagan.

He publicly renounced the Christian religion, and used every effort to abolish it and bring back the worship of the gods. To prove our Saviour's predictions false he tried to rebuild the temple, but flashes of fire out of the ground so terrified the workmen that he was obliged to desist.

He died miserably at last from a wound received in battle. Catching the drops of blood as they welled from his heart he threw them upwards, crying, "O Gallilean, thou hast conquered!" His name will always be known in history as Julian the Apostate.

The secret society which Ezekiel saw was a branch of the ancient mysteries which turned Julian away from Christ to heathenism. All secret rites and ceremonies are idolatrous. They are intended to wean men from the worship of the true God. Individuals or nations who practice them are in fearful danger of apostacy and final destruction.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 31, 1883.

THE ANNUAL MEETING, JUNE 21.

The Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association occurs on the 21st of June, commencing at 10:30 A. M. in Carpenter Hall, 221 West Madison street. Considered with reference to the work of the past year, or looking to the openings before us and the possibilities of the year to come, this gathering must be one unequalled in its importance by any previously held. The three prominent events of the year are the erection of the Morgan monument, the purchase of the Christian Cynosure and the Washington enterprise. The building at Washington is ready for occupancy, and how or by whom, and for what specific purposes, are questions for all to consider. There needs also much wisdom in adjusting all questions affecting the management and circulation of the paper, as well as financial interest generally.

Beside other inducements sufficient to bring every friend of the cause who can possibly attend, we are glad to announce in addition that Hon. S. C. Pomeroy will be present to aid by his counsels and will deliver an address on our reform work in Farwell Hall which has been secured for that purpose, on the evening of June 21. Rev. E. D. Bailey will report the work in New England personally and there will be many features of deep and special interest to all who pray and work for the overthrow of the lodge power in church and state.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

NOTES FROM SARATOGA.

THE BAPTIST GENERAL CONVENTION opened here yesterday. I found the large house packed, aisles and all, and sat down against the rear wall, by a New Hampshire Baptist, who said he was a manufacturer and a Mason.

"How many of this mass, between us and the pulpit, are Masons?"

"Don't know, but there's a multitude of us, all through" (i. e. in the country).

Dr. Williams of Baltimore, a fine, tall speaker, was making a splurge, ending, "And the Baptists will unite from Florida to Dakota, and move onward till the uttermost parts of the earth shall be their possession." (Applause to the echo.) A man followed who took the wind out of his bubble by facts and figures. Resolutions were then offered, beginning with a general declaration that Baptists have the right to circulate that version of the Bible which in their judgment most exactly expresses the mind of God.

I asked a great, fine-looking Baptist by me, "What does that resolution mean?"

"It means that Baptists have a right to do just as they have a mind to," said he.

Dr. Moss of Indiana, declared for the old American Bible Society, and union in circulating the Bible through our globe. Another stout Baptist said, "No stone wall of sect can be built so high, but I can and will shake hands over it with a true brother on the other side." They are a great, fine-looking, powerful set of men.

IGNORANT BLISS.—A keen, good-looking elder here in the Presbyterian General Assembly, from Bradford county, Pa., yesterday at the Hathorn Spring, told me he was a Knight Templar. I asked, "Have you read Masonic books to know what Masonry is?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you like, on page 16, Mackey's Lexicon, the statement that Masonry makes a man SINLESS, perfectly holy?"

"Well, I have not read that book. Indeed, I give but little attention to the subject."

"And you," I exclaimed, "a ruling elder in this highest Presbyterian court, to guard and purify character from ocean to ocean,—you give 'little attention' to what absorbs your young men by thousands and money by millions!"

CONTINENTAL LYING.—Take the following facts: When Morgan was killed, the lodge at Leroy, made up of the best and worst men of that village, met and all agreed to utter and did utter the same lie. This was afterward confessed by the penitent members. In Cumberland county, Pa., a colored Methodist Mason preacher told me Fred. Douglass was a Mason. He knew it from many witnesses. Here in Saratoga yesterday, a colored preacher from South Carolina, affirmed to me the self-same lie! Mr. Douglass is not, never was a Mason, or member of any secret order!

THE PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

I have enjoyed the meeting of this body beyond words to describe. True, the lodge has "snaked its way" into Presbyterian churches. An elder from Bedford Co., Pa., told me he was a Knight Templar. The most eloquent colored commissioner, Rev. J. S. Moultrie of Edesto Island, S. C., said to me: "I am now contemplating joining the lodge." It would be fearfully instructive to know how many of the 640 members of the Assembly are in the secret sieve of Satan. But, on the other hand, the most eloquent temperance minister in the Assembly, an elder from northwestern Kansas, a prominent commissioner from Washington, D. C., and an eminent scholar and professor in a Presbyterian Theological Seminary,—all of these prominent men declared to me their sympathy with our movement; and some of them take and read the Cynosure.

As it would have been improper to attempt to force a discussion on the lodge, I addressed the following letter to the Assembly. The Committee on correspondence gave me a cordial and respectful hearing, and it was moved and seconded that the chairman of the committee, consisting of fifteen members, should read the letter to the Assembly and move to put it on file. The motion to read was postponed at the suggestion of the chairman, Dr. Evans of Lane Seminary, till absent members of the committee should be present. The letter speaks for itself:—

To the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church meeting at Saratoga in May —, 1883.

FATHERS AND BRETHREN:—The venerable Synod of Cincinnati, of which Rev. Dr. Joshua L. Wilson and others were members, at their meeting in Dayton, O., in 1836,

"RESOLVED, That membership in a Masonic lodge is incompatible with a credible profession of the Christian religion."

The slave question was then the Aaron's serpent which swallowed up all other questions; and its war has brought back the secret lodge system into honor. Slavery and its war being gone, the old discussion is revived. In 1868 the National Christian Association opposed to secret societies was formed in the Presbyterian city of Pittsburgh. It now has headquarters in Chicago, Ill.; Worcester, Mass.; and in Washington, D. C. As president of that National Association, and in its behalf, I request of this Assembly such recognition of this national cause as it accords to the discussions concerning temperance, viz., a simple reception of this letter, and putting it on its files. Having been myself a Presbyterian pastor for nine years, and always and now a receiver of Presbyterian doctrines, it is natural that I should turn to this body, in its origin born a religion of principle, to encourage our discussion of the secret organized deism of the lodge. Very respectfully, yours in Christ,

J. BLANCHARD.
Pres't. National Christian Association.

OPEN LETTER TO FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

NOTE.—The following letter was mailed to Mr. Douglass, was read by him, and is here published by his consent.—ED. CYNOSURE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 7, 1883.

To the Hon. Frederick Douglass,

DEAR AND RESPECTED SIR:—When I went to your house last Saturday, I had your speech of April 16th in my pocket. I have arisen this (Monday) morning at one o'clock in the night; and now I have that speech in my head.

As I cannot review it, and it needs no commendation, allow me to point out a defect. It is this: that, in forecasting the destiny of the American negro, it omits to give the ground on which his unification with the American masses rests. The speech omits what makes that unification certain, to-wit, that there is no color line in the politics taught by Paul and Christ; that the blood of "all nations of men" is one blood; that the Bible tolerates no color line in school or church, family or state; that Moses by whom God gave the Law of the Bible married, and Philip, the evangelist of its Gospel baptized Ethiopian negroes; and that God frowned on and terribly punished "prejudice against color" in the brother and sister of Moses who objected to his Ethiopian wife. This was a grave omission. But the speech, which to say the least is a sublime one, has one terrible defect. It gives to men the credit due to Christ. It was Christ, dwelling in and demanding recognition for "the least of these my brethren," the wretched and despised slave —it is Christ who has wrought out their deliverance, by the prayers and sufferings of men and women whose record is in heaven, but nowhere on earth. These "unconsidered trifles"—these men and women constrained by their love of Christ, gave Charles Sumner and others their vocation. But for Christ, who dwells in every Christian "except reprobates," Charles Sumner would have treated slavery as, in his letter to Samuel D. Greene, he treated the lodge—postponed attacking it till the cause should have votes and a platform.

Why, the old Latin deeds of emancipation which enfranchised the slaves who once tilled the soil of all Europe, run, "Pro salute animae: pro amore Redemptoris nostri, (for the salvation of the soul and the love of Christ!) Christ, not Sumners, Garrisons and Wades, as your speech hints, has abolished the slavery; aye, and will abolish the sin of mankind. That Christ, my dear and honored sir, whom your otherwise august and magnificent speech (I do not flatter) does not even deign to mention; though his political creed strikes color and caste from the nations!

In leaving this part of my letter let me say that of some future things I feel assured, among them this: that your views and ideas of Jesus Christ are destined to enlarge and deepen. No mind so honest and capable as yours can long tolerate the palpable moral contradiction which calls Christ "the greatest of moralists," and yet accuses him of falsehood, when he said that he held, "All power in heaven and in earth," and again, "All things which the Father hath are mine." If he was not a falsifier when he uttered those words HE IS GOD!

Your last words spoken to me were, "Don't put my name on that ticket." And my reply was, "Not yet." O my brother, can you see the colored people sworn, swindled and put on the road back to paganism, by the false worships of the lodge, and not stand up for their deliverance! Are the reasons which have made you resist the great pressure brought to force you into the lodges, too weak to make you willing to help us rescue your weaker brethren, who are being sworn by thousands on thousands to obey the "signs, summons and tokens, given, handed or sent," by the minions of "Sovereign Commander" Albert Pike, whose Indians at Pea Ridge scalped the soldiers who fell fighting for you and for them? No, no! Ten thousand times no! I can feel your great, God-given heart beat, while I write these words; and it beats tears into and from my eyes!

No, you cannot, will not stand aloof while your brethren and mine, having escaped the slavery of their bodies, are now selling their souls to "the devil" who, your speech properly says, never "founded a church," or, I will add, freed a slave.

Thanking you for the pleasure I enjoyed in my call at your house, and for the pleasure and profound instruction which your speech has given me,

I am, honored sir,
Your ob't servant,
J. BLANCHARD.

JOSEPH COOK.

The second lecture in Chicago this season by this justly renowned champion of public morals and revealed religion, was given on Thursday evening last in Farwell Hall. The announcement that he would give a "prelude" on the American newspaper press was received with no small degree of interest, since his remarks at the Congregational Club, April 16th, had been received by the papers with no marked degree of cordiality, for they have too long been accustomed to pursue their own way without deserved rebuke for conniving at gross immoralities. Mr. Cook's fearless criticisms were like coals on a turtle's back. The Chicago daily press with hardly an exception writhe under the useful torture, and reply with slighting allusions, distorted telegrams, or open attack. In his prelude Mr. Cook gave due honor to the efforts of the press against entrenched iniquities. "It must be conceded," he said, "that there is nothing that even corrupt rings fear so much as an independent press, and this pitiless javelin has often been thrust through these evils. I suppose we owe to the courage, the shrewdness, the omnipresence of the reporters in New York city the overthrow of several rings there, especially the corrupt Tweed government by the New York Times. I might give a long list of the exposures of secret iniquity in this country by reporters. There is nothing that secret iniquity fears so much as a newspaper. It is a crown of honor to the sheets who are so feared. I may say further that it is one of the high merits of the American press, and peculiar to the journals of our country, that there is a union between it and the church, for the papers of no other country report sermons so much or so fully as do ours. This feature in our papers is, indeed, a wonder to foreign travelers when they take up a Monday morning's paper. I must add that it is to the honor of American papers that they are not all under the control of political parties, but the papers that are not so controlled or liable to be controlled can be counted on the fingers of the hand. The principle of independent journalism, if adopted, would tend to the purification of journalism in this country."

On Friday morning Secretary Stoddard and the office editor of the Cynosure called upon Mr. Cook at his room in the Palmer House. They were warmly welcomed, Mr. Cook well remembering the interviews with Bro. Stoddard in Boston in 1880, before his journey of observation and instruetion around the world began.

The great lecturer is a man of remarkable appearance: some six feet tall, yet so robust and broad-shouldered, he appears of but ordinary size; and his immense head, finely proportioned to his frame, shows where lies the Samson-like power which has borne away the gates of many Gazas of scepticism, false philosophy and popular deception. His wonderful power of expression is marked not alone when he speaks, but by a large, quickly-rolling, pleasant blue eye which seems pressed upon by the mental energies within, to whose emotions it gives a ready response.

Referring to his former acquaintance with our reform, he said that he was thoroughly in accord with our views of the secret orders. He had made no extended public remarks upon the subject since he had not studied it with such care as to warrant the beginning of a public discussion. "We rely upon you," he said, "to furnish us the facts upon these orders, and confide in your judgment in the matter. I am unable to speak of them from personal experience, for I have never belonged to any such order, unless it be one of the temperance orders in an early day. I became thoroughly disgusted with the affair and withdrew. I never even belonged to any of the Greek societies which are so popular in many of our colleges." He inquired particularly of our conception of the object of these numerous secret orders and was much interested in the view of the lodge system from the standpoint of active opposition to it.

The Boston mob of March, 1880, was mentioned. "Ah!" said Mr. Cook, with peculiar and sonorous emphasis, "I read of it. Disgraceful! disgraceful to Boston! I felt humiliated—ashamed of such an occurrence. You must certainly come to Boston again and give us an opportunity of redeeming ourselves. Had I been lecturing in the city at that time I would certainly have given a prelude on that matter." He inquired about the character of the audience and when told of the interest and sympathy of Wendell Phillips and Charles Francis Adams said we must come again to Boston before that great man died. Mr. Phillips advice to retrain from any prosecution unless some capable lawyer like Ben Butler(!) could be employed. being mentioned, Mr. Cook remarked laughingly that one of the droll New England mots about Butler was

> "For of all sad words of tongue or pen,
> The saddest of all is surely Ben!"

And referring to the wonderful faculty Butler has exhibited since getting into the governor's chair of getting everybody by the ears, he said another hit was that "Benjamin's mess was twice as big as all the rest."

He believed that if he should put up a bulletin at the entrance of Tremont Temple announcing a prelude on Freemasonry he would neither have a mob or a vacant house. At one time last winter when he asked the professing Christians in his audience to rise, 2,000 were on their feet immediately. He repeated his remark that he would have spoken of the Boston mob and its animus had he been in the city when it occurred, when the timidity of the Boston press was mentioned, and said he, "If you come to Boston again and I am in the city you may rely on one friend at least." And with a warm grasp of the hand and a reiteration of his sympathy in our efforts he bade his visitors good morning.

—President Blanchard returned from Washington through New England and Saratoga on Friday evening last in good health and with unabated zeal and confidence in the efforts now being made to put forward the reform. General Secretary Stoddard also returned on the day before, and is preparing for an annual meeting of the National Christian Association which will be worth the while for every member of that body and friend of its work to attend.

—Bro. Hinman began a short journey through northern Illinois last week, during which he hopes to interest many friends of the reform in the Washington work.

A BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.—One fountain there is whose vein throws up its silver drops among mankind—a fountain that will allay the thirst of millions, and will give to those who drink from it peace and joy. It is knowledge. The fountain of cultivation, which gives health to mankind, makes clear the vision, brings joy to his life, and breathes over his soul's destiny a deep repose.

A muddy stream, flowing into one clear and sparkling, for a time it rolls along by itself. A little further down they unite, and the whole is impure. So youth, untouched by sin, may for a short time keep its purity in foul company, but a little later and they mingle.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

SOME OPINIONS ON THE WITHDRAWAL.

APPROVED.

The unselfish withdrawal of President Blanchard from the candidature for President of the United States on the American ticket is praiseworthy. Now, as he says, "Let us move heaven and earth."

This land should be "stumped" in favor of God Almighty (who is "in Christ), and Samuel C. Pomeroy as his chief magistrate. Let there be one country in this sin-cursed earth wherein eomplete Scriptural liberty shall be enjoyed, even from end to end and from side to side. Let us build on the "sure foundation," for "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ." It should be understood by all that "righteousness (alone) exalteth a nation," and that "sin is a reproach (or a curse) to any people." A "campaign document" covering the vital principles and points at issue should be scattered throughout the length and breadth of our land by the million. Let us work and vote as we pray! Amen. T. F. DOLAN.

AN OPEN LETTER TO REV. JONATHAN BLANCHARD.

DEAR BROTHER:—I am impatient to congratulate you on your late masterly move in the nomination of Samuel C. Pomeroy, with his secured consent, as the candidate of the American Party for the next Presidency of the United States. During those twelve memorable years of his faithful service as U. S. Senator from Kansas, I occasionally corresponded with him, when he stood shoulder to shoulder with Wilson and Sumner, Norton and Chandler, a radical of the radicals, in valiant support of those great measures whereby slavery was overthrown, the Constitution maintained and amended, the rebellion conquered, the nation solidified, and the national credit assured. It is meet that a veteran with such antecedents, and such a record, and in full sympathy with all our principles, should be the chosen standard-bearer of the American party. The advocate and prompter of Seward and Lincoln, of Chase and Stanton, and with faculties so well preserved by temperance and the inherent vigor of constitution derived from a Puritan ancestry—who can be named so worthy to head the combined forces of temperance and anti-secrecy in the campaign upon which we are entering?

I thank you for the suggestive and most valuable article in the Cynosure of May 17th, with which you introduced him to its responsive readers and to the country at large. May you live to see it working effectively like living leaven throughout our broad land!

Enclosed is a small present contribution toward the purchase of Washington headquarters for the N. C. A., which our energetic agent, J. P. Stoddard, has so wisely secured. It must not fail of a speedy and complete deliverance from debt. The Washington Fund is as sure to succeed as was the Batavia Monument Fund for Morgan.

You will be grieved and mortified with me to hear that Massachusetts is furnishing a new demonstration of the prodigious power of the liquor interest which we antagonize in the American party—a demonstration that is calculated to incense and alarm all good citizens. The pro-license aldermen of Boston, finding that, by the last amendment of 1882 to the restrictive license law forbidding any dram-shop within 400 feet of a public school-house on the same street, eight or ten saloons in the vicinity of the Franklin school-house would be under the ban, have decreed the removal of that ancient school rather than shut up the saloons themselves and lessen the danger to our precious youth. At the same time the aldermen of Worcester, not to be outdone by Boston in pliant subjection to rum and lawlessness, notwithstanding the vigorous protest of leading citizens, vote a license to a German beer saloon on Lincoln Square within 200 feet of Summer Street school house, located on the same line, by the evasive quibble of an excuse that from Lincoln Square the street bends a little to the right and goes by another name of Lincoln. So, too, after having the applicants for licenses advertised according to law, and after granting a hearing to citizens and associations opposed to license, and then with unparalleled effrontery and to the astonishment of the rummies themselves issuing 197 licenses, and resolved that no more should be granted after the first of May according to law—three weeks later, when all the world supposes the matter is at rest for a year, they deliberately re-open the case in order to license a notable disappointed applicant who was rejected for cause, he acknowledging that he had sold on the Lord's day, and so forfeiting his license, but being warned said he would do so no more. Great is liquor! Great is Irish and German Democracy!

And Republicanism, as run by its bosses, raises no dam against the raging overflow. The need, therefore, of an American party that will antagonize both liquor and the lodge, the dark lantern and dynamite, is becoming more and more apparent. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

Worcester, May 22, 1883.

President Blanchard, who was nominated for President of the United States at the Galesburg Convention of the American Party two years ago, has now withdrawn his name from the canvas. Dr. Blanchard's withdrawal is in favor of Senator S. C. Pomeroy of Kansas. Mr. Pomeroy has a good record as a man, soldier, United States senator twelve years, and as a citizen of high moral sentiments and thorough integrity. Senator Pomeroy is a Christian man, he having united with the church at the age of eleven years. He is opposed to all secret societies, and with true and manly courage announces his conviction that there is no use for such institutions in a free country.—Religious Telescope.

LODGE POLITICS.

The lodge with its Pharisaical morality taints everything that it touches; and what is there in life which it does not touch? A sordid, mercenary spirit is the mainspring of its action in every thing. While it favors men who deal in back-pay grabs and become rich in the public service, it derides and hoots at every one who resigns office on account of principle. In a form of government which can only be maintained by a spirit of high disinterestedness and self-sacrifice on the part of its officers, the lodge fosters and encourages the most sordid spirit of self-seeking. Of all the men who have resigned or declined office during the last twenty years how many have met with political favor? Hardly one; while on the other hand men notoriously implicated in Credit Mobilier swindles, back-pay grabs, bank defalcations, Star-route frauds, etc., are held in honor.

Such is one of the results of lodge-supremacy in politics. It dishonors true men and honors the selfish and corrupt. This is the organic character of the institution; it could not do otherwise, any more than the crocodile could help to rend and devour while shedding tears. The very irresponsibility with which its secrecy invests its members, encourages them to do acts which men of integrity would abstain from with disgust. They will always go as far as the people will stand it, and what will not an unsuspecting people stand in the name of politics which it supposes to be honest?

Can the Republic be saved? This depends entirely upon the question whether the people have the moral power and the intelligence to wrest their political affairs from the grasp of the lodge, and turn over the management to men of sounder morality and of a higher order of sentiment. To suppose that such republican institutions as ours could exist for a long time under Masonic management, is tantamount to saying that the Christian church could be maintained by Mohammedan muftis and spinning dervishers. Show me a Freemason, and I will show you a man who is unworthy the confidence of a Christian people. AMERICAN.

THE HOME.

IS IT SO?

(Job 5: 6.)

Doth trouble from the ground spring forth,
  Affliction from the dust,
Man live to flutter as the moth—
  No God in whom to trust?
Comes disappointment on the wind?
  Sickness by chance lay low?
Gives Death unto poor human kind
  By hap his cruel blow?
Is there no guiding Providence,
  No laws of good or ill;
None steering our frail bark from hence,
  But our uncertain will?
If there's no God who guides my days,
  If I by luck do live,
Why should I follow virtue's ways.
  And o'er my failings grieve?
I'll up, I'll fly on pleasure's wings
  'Till life's short day is past;
No more I'll mind if conscience stings—
  For I'll but die at last.

Oh, no! there is a God who reigns,
  Who steers our bark so frail,
Appoints our cares, our joys, our pains,
  And hears us through life's gale.

Should we then mourn, if in our path
  Some disappointments lie?
God sends them, and he ever hath
  In love our faith to try.
Then let us look to him for strength
  Now in our time of need;
He is our Help, and will at length
  To his own presence lead.

MRS. THOMPSON'S VISITORS.

When thou dost thine alms do not sound a triumph before thee.—Matt. 6: 2.

"Please ma'am, don't you want to buy some matches? ' said a sweet voice.

The lady addressed gazed for a moment upon two little girls standing upon her front porch. They could not have been more than six or eight years of age—such wee things out in the cold November winds —the eldest carrying a packet under her arm, and the younger a purse clutched tightly in her little chubby hands.

"No, we have plenty of matches," said the lady kindly.

"Yes, ma'am," was the meek reply, and the the two little girls had turned down the steps.

How cold they looked, so scantily dressed; and then, their manners, how different from the scores of peddlers which tramped the streets almost daily. Mrs. Thompson could not shut the door.

"Little girls," said she.

"Yes, ma'am," said a quivering voice, as the little girls turned back. Mrs. Thompson saw that the sweet blue eyes of the younger one were filled with tears.

"Aren't you cold?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Come in then, and get warm. I want to talk with you."

The little girls came forward, and Mrs. Thompson led them into the nice, warm dining-room.

"Now let me take off your things," said the lady, and you shall eat your supper while I have a chat with you. Tea is just ready."

"Please, ma'am, we are not beggars," said the eldest one, her pale cheeks flushing.

"Of course you are not," said Mrs. Thompson quickly. "You are my visitors."

The little girls looked shyly at each other and then dropped their heads with a pleasant smile, and permitted to have their hoods and shawls removed.

"Now," said Mrs. Thompson, after the tea had been finished to the satisfaction of all. "I am going to make you a little present to take home to your mamma. My friends often make me presents, and if I can, sometimes I return them; but as many of my friends are very wealthy, very often I can do no more than say 'thank you.' I like to get presents very much, don't you?"

"Once we did, before papa died, but no one makes us presents now," said the elder little girl.

"Well, I am going to, and I love to have visitors, too, very much—and best of all little girl visitors—and so now that I have become acquainted with you, I shall expect you to come and see me often. Indeed I shall be very much hurt if you do not."

"O, we will come!" said the elder one. "I think it is nice to have such a sweet place to come visiting, don't you Gertie?"

The little one nodded her head, and then Mrs. Thompson, with gentle fingers, again robed the little girls, saying: "You may bring the basket back the next time you come and see me."

"Yes, ma'am, they replied in chorus, clutching hold of each other's hands, as they started down off from the porch.

Mrs. Thompson watched them until they turned a corner, and then she went into the house, wondering if she should ever see them again.

But scarcely a week had passed before they came to restore the basket, and after that they became frequent visitors, always meeting with a kind reception.

At last a holiday arrived, and again Mrs. Thompson found them upon the front porch.

"Please, ma'am, said the smaller one, the bright smile breaking out all over her face, "we have come to spend all the day with you."

"Yes, we don't have any matches to sell to-day, said the other.

"I am so glad," said Mrs. Thompson. "Come right in and take off your things;" and taking each by the hand she led them into the parlor full of grown-up ladies.

The little girls hung back, the elder one saying: "Please, ma'am, we didn't know that you had other company."

"O that's no difference," smiled Mrs. Thompson. "Ladies, let me make you acquainted with my two little friends, Nellie and Gertie Harrington."

The ladies smiled and nodded, though some could not conceal their surprise, and Mrs. Thompson, to put the little ones more at their ease, seated them on a sofa with a beautiful book of prints to engage their attention.

They seemed very well contented until they had looked the book through, then Nellie said, "Please, Mrs. Thompson, if you will get our things, we'll be going now."

"Indeed! I guess you will not go without your dinner," said Mrs. Thompson, "after the table is set for you and everything."

The little ones half-smiled, half-blushed, then walked out with their hostess and occupied a position at her right and left.

After the meal, and the ladies were walking back into the parlor, the little one pulled her sister's dress, whispering: "What did you do with it, Nellie?"

"Slipped it back of the lounge," blushed Nellie. "Please, Mrs. Thompson, we brought you a present, but hated to give it to you before all the ladies. If you wait a moment out here I'll go and get it."

Mrs. Thompson took a small packet from the little girl's hand as she returned from the parlor, and very carefully undid the wrappings.

"This for me?" asked the lady, as a beautiful picture came to light.

"Yes; our present to you," smiled Gertie.

"Where did you get it?" asked Mrs. Thompson.

"Mamma drew the picture, and Gertie and I made the frame out of acorn cups; mamma taught us. Do you like it?"

"Like it!" exclaimed Mrs. Thompson, and abruptly turned to her visitors, saying: "Just see what a lovely present my two little friends have brought me; a beautiful pencil sketch by their mother. Is it not beautiful!"

"It took a long time to draw it," said Nellie. "It is mamma's childhood home. There is an old mill close by—grandpapa owned it; and that old building with the ivy clinging to it, was where they went to church."

"I shall prize it very much," said Mrs. Thompson, hanging the picture between two costly chromos, and she would not let the little girls go home until the last lady had gone, and then, just as the street lamps were being lighted, she put on her cloak and hat, and taking each girl by the hand, said: "It's now time for me to visit you. I am going home with you to spend the evening."

The little ones were delighted; keeping up a half skip and jump by her side, now and then pressing her hand lovingly with their tiny fingers.

Mrs. Thompson went into the one neat room, and to the children's introduction to the pale little woman sitting sewing by the window she went straight up to her and throwing an arm around her neck left a kiss upon her cheek, then laughingly throwing off her things, she took up a piece of sewing from the table and seating herself, her fingers flew as swiftly as Mrs. Harrington's, as she kept up a gay chat all the while.

After that Mrs. Thompson visited the poor widow many times, and the latter in return came to love to visit the kind lady as well as did her little girls.

At one time two years later, in conversation with a good clergyman, the widow said: "O, the children do not sell matches any more, but go to school, and it all came through Mrs. Thompson, sir; in fact everything we have almost," and the widow paused a moment to gaze admiringly upon her bright carpet, the snowy curtains, the flowers and bird in the windows, then continued: "I never saw such a woman. Somehow she has a way of doing things that you don't know it until after it is done, and I do not believe she ever breathes a word about what she does."

"No, I guess not," said the preacher, "for I have been her pastor for a number of years and she is my wife's most intimate friend, yet have I never heard from her lips an account of one good action.

"Mrs. Thompson is a lady who does not sound a trumpet before her in doing her alms, therefore will she be rewarded openly by her Father in heaven. 'Blessed are they who know their Master's will and do it."—Presbyterian Witness.

"MISSING."

A correspondent of the Congregationalist of April 12th,—presumably the Rev. Edward Abbott,—makes a startling contribution to the "social question" of the times. A person passing along one of our best streets caught sight of a hand thrust through a broken pane of glass in the upper story of a handsome house, and fluttering a piece of paper which presently fell at his feet. He found scrawled upon it a frantic appeal for instant rescue. Proceeding with the police to examine the premises, he found no less than three terror-stricken girls imprisoned in the cellar. One of them had dropped the paper into the street.

She had been passing the house when a well-dressed woman came out in great haste, saying that her daughter was suddenly taken ill and begging the young lady in mercy's name to go for the doctor, meanwhile asking her to step inside while she got his address. As she entered, the door was closed by a spring behind her, and she realized that she was a prisoner,—for what vile and awful purposes it was easy to conjecture. She had instantly bethought herself of the forlorn hope of arresting the attention of some one in the street, and had succeeded. A fact like this, both for its startling character and for what lies back of it in our social condition, ought to be spread before all the families of the land.—Christian Intelligencer.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS.

TO MEND CARPETS.—When worn into holes or thin places, cut pieces to match; make a flour paste; cover the patches (under side) with paste; lay them carefully on the holes and press down with both hands. When dry you will hardly know where there was a hole in the carpet.

A DISH WASHER.—Tie wrapping thread or tidy cotton around a small round stick until you judge there is enough. The thread should hang down about three inches. This makes a very nice instrument for dish washing, as the mop is soft, and you can use boiling water.

HOUSEKEEPERS will find a bottle of ammonia one of the most useful articles about the house—it is so good to brighten up old garments, by dropping a very little into soft water and giving them a sponging, and it cannot be surpassed for taking spots off the kitchen carpet.

TO SWEETEN SALT PORK.—Cut as many slices as will be required for breakfast the evening previous, and soak till morning in sweet milk and water; then rinse till the water is clear, and fry. The pork will be found very nearly as good as fresh pork.

GET a blank-book or old account-book, and paste in neatly all the useful recipes and wise sayings you are continually finding now-a-days, and wishing they could be remembered, and you will soon have a book worth reading.

TO DESTROY NIGHT-FLYING INSECTS.—A simple apparatus for getting rid of cock-chafers and other nocturnal insects, has been devised by M. Vittellier, of Nantes, and is figured in La Nature. It depends on the attraction of light for these insects, and consists of a lamp placed at the top of a movable frame, and having four square-shaped narrowing cases, with metallic reflecting surfaces in the interior, placed round it. The insects fly into these, and strike against a pane of glass, at the bottom of which is a funnel-shaped aperture leading to a bag hung below; and into this they fall in great numbers.

ANTISEPTIC USE OF BORAX.—In relation to the recommendations which have been made of employing borax as an antiseptic, Dr. Atkins states that for eight years past he has treated all cases of erysipelas by means of a solution of borax in glycerine (one drachm to the ounce), well rubbed into the skin, and applied on linen. In every case it has seemed to cut short the disease promptly, the characteristic appearances beginning to fade in a few hours. Sometimes tincture of iron was given internally, sometimes not. Dr. Atkins has also frequently used borax ointment in the treatment of suppurating sores, the results of cuts, burns, bruises, etc. The strength of the ointment is immaterial, so long as there is plenty of borax in it. In these cases the suppuration is usually checked at once, the redness rapidly paling away. In minor cases it seems quite equal to carbolic acid.

A wealthy clergyman, from a neighboring State assured me that he had spent eight years and thirty thousand dollars in seeking a cure for his dyspepsia. He had traveled everywhere, and consulted all sorts of doctors. I am afraid he will never forgive me for telling him that six months' hard work would make a well man of him.—Dio Lewis.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED WOMEN.

ELIZABETH FRY.

Not quite a hundred years ago, a young lady at Earlham Hall, Norwich, England, wrote in her diary, "I am like a ship at sea without a pilot." She was mistaken; there was a pilot very near her—one that loved her, one that was preparing her for a great work in the world, but she knew it not.

Many a wanderer in this sin-stricken world feels as if he were helpless and alone, and, probably, useless, while all the time the Saviour is whispering in his ear, "Lo, I am with you alway." "He is a chosen vessel unto me to bear my name before the Gentiles." Thus it was with Elizabeth Gurney; but she did not know the voice, and did not wish to hear it, until some years afterward, when she knew the meaning of the expression, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me."

She was born at Norwich, May 1780. Her father and mother belonged to the denomination which we call "Friends." Her father was a man of wealth, and was engaged in the business of banking. But it was to her mother, doubtless, that we are indebted, next to the grace of God, for Elizabeth's noble character.

Of that mother she years after wrote, "I loved my mother dearly. I used to be in constant fear that she would die. Often in my little bed at night this would make me weep. I would go softly and watch her breathing to convince myself that she was alive. We had a dear, good, wise mother, who wished nothing so much as that we might know the love and mercy of God in Christ, and the blessedness of his service." But that dear mother was soon taken from her; but not before her image was deeply impressed upon her heart; but no longer had the brothers and sisters at Earlham Hall the godly example, of their defoted mother, and the Bible was not read so frequently, nor with as serious a manner, as in the days gone by.

But by-and-by Elizabeth discovered that what the prophet wrote was true: "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked;" but how to get a new heart she did not know.

At length, Wm. Savery, a Friend from America, came to preach in the meeting-house at Norwich. He told of a Saviour who wanted to be recieved into the heart—a Saviour that could cleanse it from sin, as well as save from sin's penalty, and she was enabled at least to desire that Saviour to come in and dwell with her, and great was her joy for many weeks in the experience of what she thought was the Saviour's love. But she was now a young lady, and it was thought proper that she should go up to London and be initiated into the ways of the fashionable world. But in these ways she found no enjoyment; deep down in her heart she was desiring something better. So she returned, and commenced a school for the poor in the neighborhood of her home, visiting the sick and supplying their wants—it was a preparation for the greater work she is soon to undertake in London. Soon after, she not only desired the Savior, but rejoiced in him as hers, and after this she became the joy of the home circle as well as the whole neighborhood.

But the poor of Norwich and the school children which she had gathered were soon to be visited with deep sorrow—it was whispered around that Miss Elizabeth Gurney was about to leave Earlham Hall and live in London, and what could they do without her? But God in his providence had a work for her there. Accordingly, Joseph Fry, a wealthy banker, came and carried her away. Miss Elizabeth Gurney became Mrs. Fry, the name by which she is best known. Soon the poor found her in her new home, soon she found the poor in the lanes and the alleys, and, finally, in the asylums and prison houses, and, no doubt, many said of her, "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon her, and she caused the widow's heart to sing for joy."

In the year 1813, some of the members of the Society of Friends went to Newgate to visit certain persons there under sentence of death, and found the prison in a horrible condition. "There were in the prison four hundred women, old and young, with many little children, all crowded into four rooms. They were clothed in rags, with not a comfort apparently—no bedding, not even a pillow, only boards raised from the floor. There they lived day and night, ate, cooked, washed and slept, with no employment, nothing to read, spending the time in swearing and fighting, or clambering at the iron bars, begging from visitors and spending the money for liquor at a shop kept in the prison for their use." Mrs. Fry was appealed to, and soon visited this sad scene and dared alone to enter and counsel with the lost in the rooms. By-and-by she proposed to teach them to read and write and work, so that when their terms of imprisonment should expire, they might become respectable servants at least. But at that period she had few sympathizers. Her best friends would say to her, "Dear Mrs. Fry, what a wild plan you have got in your head. Do you suppose that women who have broken the laws of the land will obey you? If you give them work they will steal it or tear it up. No, indeed, there is not the least hope for such degraded mortals." But they did not understand the power of love as Mrs. Fry did, and so she persevered, and wonderful was her success. These poor depraved women could be reached by the gospel of love, and it began to be the talk, not only of London, but of the kingdom, and one day, while Mrs. Fry was reading the Scriptures according to her custom, Sir William Curtis, Lord Mayor of London, and four Aldermen and the Sheriffs, stepped into the room. Mrs. Fry stopped reading for a moment, and was requested to go on as usual. After reading the prisoners began their work, sewing or knitting, as the case might be. Their neat appearance, obedient manners and happy faces, so different from what these gentlemen had been accustomed to see, perfectly astonished them. The old beer-shop by this time had been quite broken up, and a respectable notion and grocery store had taken its place.

The reading of the word of God was greatly blessed to these prisoners, and many were converted to God by it. In the meantime, Mrs. Fry was receiving letters, not only from different places in Britain, but also from India and Russia, concerning the mode of her work, that it might be put in practice in their prisons. Indeed, princes from the Continent visited her duirng the hours devoted to her work in prison to learn the secret of her wonderful success, and, no doubt, wonderful results followed her work as respects the treatment of prisoners all over the world. Indeed, Mrs. Fry became a power, not only in England, but throughout the civilized world, and when King Kamehameha, of the Sandwich Islands, wanted to have intoxicating drinks prevented from being exported to his dominions, he wrote to her to secure it. And when after a few years she visited various countries on the Continent, kings and nobles vied with each other in an effort to do her honor, and when the King of Prussia visited England, he did himself the honor of visiting her at her own home, and dining with her and her family, and was introduced to her seven daughters and daughters-in-law, her seven sons and her twenty-five grandchildren. And here it is proper to say that she did not neglect the training of her own children for the public work to which she devoted herself. Nor was this all her work. She took quite an interest in the coast guard service, and finally succeeded in introducing libraries into all the stations, six hundred and twenty-three in all, at a cost of $7,500. Then she turned her attention to putting good reading matter on board the vessels which sailed from Falmouth harbor, a work of great value, and which the American Tract Society largely carries on, as far as New York Harbor is concerned. She was far in advance of the majority of professed Christians, also, in her ideas of toleration. Strange as it may appear at that period, and in the years preceding, some of the clearest-headed men could not distinguish between encouraging a religion which they considered false and tolerating it, and because it was not their duty to encourage it, they supposed it was their duty to oppose its toleration, hence the persecution of the Lutherans in Germany and the Baptists in Denmark. And she was successful in aiding both these denominations in their trouble. It was not, however, the actual work which she herself accomplished, so much as the example she gave to the world of how the poor and depraved classes might be helped, which is now largely followed wherever Christianity controls the people, which is now bearing fruit, and will continue to bear fruit until time shall be no longer. Her life shows what noble deeds a woman may accomplish when her heart is filled with a love for Christ and her spirit imbued with the principles of the gospel. But time hastened on, and Mrs. Fry reached her 66th year, and the messenger came October 13, 1845, to take her home "to see the King in his beauty," and to experience the meaning of the text, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. Yea, saith the Spirit, they shall rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."—Christian Press.

SOME "KNOWS" OF THE BIBLE.

JETHRO—I know that the Lord is greater than all Gods. Ex. 18: 11.

MICAH—I know that the Lord will do me good. Judg. 17: 13.

JOB—I know that my Redeemer liveth. Job 19: 25.

DAVID—I know that the Lord saveth his anointed. Psa. 20: 6.

I know that thy judgments are right. Psa. 119: 75.

I know that the Lord is great. Psa. 135: 5.

I know that the Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted, etc. Psa. 140: 12.

SOLOMON—I know that it shall be well with them that fear God. Ecc. 8: 12.

JONAH—I knew he was a gracious God. Jonah 4: 2.

ONE WHO WAS BORN BLIND—I know that, whereas I was blind, now I can see. John 9: 25.

PAUL—I know whom I have believed. 2 Tim. 1: 12.

I know that in me dwelleth no good thing. Rom. 7: 18.

I know nothing by myself. 1 Cor. 4: 4.

JOHN—We know that we have passed from death unto life. 1 John 3: 14.

We know that he abideth in us by the Spirit that he hath given us. 1 John 3: 24. J. D. G.

A LITTLE boy between four and five years old was one day reading to his mother in the "New Testament," and when he came to these words, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head," his eyes filled with tears, his tender breast heaved, and at last he sobbed aloud. His mother inquired what was the matter, but for some time he could not speak. At length he said: "I am sure, mamma, if I had been there, I would have given him my pillows."

ONE BOY'S VIEW OF THE SUNDAY QUESTION.—A boy of thirteen came to this city to seek his livelihood. The first opportunity that offered was a position in a drug store. For a few days everything seemed satisfactory, but after a few weeks experience, he exclaimed earnestly: "I can't stay in that place. I am willing to work all day, to work nights, and to work hard; but to work Sundays, that's what I won't do. If people only came in to buy medicine, that would be one thing; but to stay there to sell perfumery, and soda water and mineral water, things they don't need at all! I never felt so mean in my life."

It was only by a strong effort that the brave little fellow kept back the tears as he felt that his moral nature had received a shock and his sense of right had been outraged.

TEMPERANCE.

Has any of our high licensed Christians ever seen a saloon respectable enough to make it a desirable place for their sons to pass their evenings in?—National American.

The dining cars of the Northwestern Railroad have conspicuously written across their bills of fare, "No orders from the wine list filled while passing through Iowa." And yet they say "prohibition don't prohibit!"

The superintendent of the Galena division of the Chicago & Northwestern road has issued an order announcing that all train men found drinking in saloons, or frequenting them, will be discharged forthwith. The road is determined to employ none but sober men.

The Michigan Legislature has added to their school law a section requiring physiology and hygiene to be taught in the schools, with special reference to the influence of alcoholic drinks, stimulants, and narcotics generally upon the human system, and requiring that after 9 mo., 1884, teachers must pass examination in physiology and hygiene with reference to the same thing. A similar act is in force in Vermont. These results have been produced throught the influence of Mary A. Hunt, of Boston.

A Detroit liquor firm sent recently to Whitall, Tatum & Co., glass manufacturers of Millville, N. J., an order for one gross of bottles for the purpose of putting up samples of liquor for their traveling agents. The Philapelphia house sent the following reply:

PHILADELPHIA, March 20, 1883.

R. BRAND & Co., Toledo, O., Respected Friends:—We are in receipt of your favor of 16th. We cannot fill your order for one gross bottles, as we are opposed to supplying the liquor trade with our goods.

Respectfully,

WHITALL, TATUM & Co.

This is just what might be expected of the consistent temperance men who compose the firm, and is only a sample of what has been their position for a long time past. —Union Signal.

"I SEE IT!"

In a certain city, a laboring man leaving a saloon saw a costly carriage and pair standing in front, occupied by two ladies elegantly attired, conversing with the proprietor. As it rolled away he said to the dealer: "Whose establishment is that?" "It is mine," replied the dealer, complacently. "It cost $5,000; my wife and daughter cannot do without it." The mechanic bowed his head a moment in deep thought, and looked sad; with the energy of a man suddenly aroused by some startling flash, he said:

"I see it! I see it!"

"See what?" queried the dealer.

"See where for years my wages have gone. I helped pay for that carriage, for those horses and gold mounted harness, for the silks and laces and jewelry for your family. The money I earned, that should have given my wife and children a home of our own, and good clothing, I have spent at your bar. My wages and those of others like me have supported you and your family in luxury. Hereafter my wife and children shall have the benefit of my wages, and by the help of God I will never spend another dime for drink. I see the mistake and cure for it."

Who else will "see it" and work for themselves and their loved ones, instead of toiling to buy silks for rumseller's wives and carriages for rumseller's families?—Sel.

however, and instead of making friends he lost some who would have been friends indeed. It is reported that his name has gone into the lodge for the degrees. I am watching, and when I am convinced of the truth will let you know. The Quakers next time.

"Instruments of cruelty are in their habitations. O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honour be not thou united: for in their anger they slew a man."—Gen. 49: 6, 7. E. MATHEWS.

AN ENCOURAGING REVIEW.

ALBION, Ind., May 21, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—During a long interval I have not encumbered your pages, but under the circumstances I think I ought to knock for admission. Albion lodge, A. F. and A. M.., No. 97, is no more. The old canvass, hoodwink, cable-tow, drawers, slippers, gavel, square, compass and Bible, et cetera, are packed in a private room. An elder in the Presbyterian church, I believe, was in at the death. As the remains lay upon the sidewalk the funeral discourse was brief and dolefully repeated in an answer to the frequent inquiry of the gawkish and ignorant cowan as he passed, "What is this?" "It's Cook's work. All Cook's doings."

I take it is but a repetition of the history of the lodge system; it never has and never can continue to live and grow in the light of discussion, as soon as it is thoroughly stirred the order becomes too pungent even for those who are accustomed to such deviltry.

I will now I suppose be expected to devote more time to the living branch, viz., Odd-fellowship. Last year they of the North Star, No. 380, had been telling me that they were flourishing in a high degree, that they had sixty members, and that they had "initiated as high as five in one night." To ascertain the truth I sent a man to the secretary (a member of the Presbyterian church) to obtain the Grand Lodge report for 1881. He reported back they had none in the lodge. I then called on a member who makes no profession of religion. He went up into the lodge room and brought me a copy, from which I learned the following facts. Instead of sixty they had twenty-three members; instead of initiating five in one night, it was only one in the whole year; had expelled one, reinstated one, dismissed one by card and suspended twelve.

They farther boasted that their benevolent work far exceeded any previous year from the same official source. I found that their income for that year in Indiana was $154,746.29. Out of this they paid for the orphans $467.74, making 3-10 of one per cent of their income and about $3,000 for the care of widows. Of the 588 lodges in the State, 501 paid nothing for either the widows or orphans. Surely if that year is in excess of all former ones it does not present a glowing picture of the past. At that same meeting of G. L. they decided that a blind man cannot become a member, and that a lodge is not required to hire a nurse for a sick brother unless the by-laws so specify, and their committee reported not to allow the $15 on the decease of a brother's wife. At the same meeting they reversed the decision of Sullivan lodge (which had expelled a member for keeping a saloon) and had restored him to membership. They declared farther that a subordinate lodge has no power to make a by-law defining what is an offense against Odd-fellowship, and farther decided that there is no law to punish a member for drinking or selling intoxicating liquors or visiting places where it is sold. So much for their progress in good works.

I will mention the numerical progress. Seven years ago when I commenced public work, I find that in Indiana the Masons numbered 31,000, and on the first day of last month according to the Masonic Advocate there are 23,700. The Odd-fellows then were 28,000, now a few over 24,000. I have often thought that if they would fix up one good straight plausable lie and stick to it and all tell it alike it would be better than the way they do.

Respectfully, S. L. COOK.

—Joseph Cook said recently, in Boston: "In Italy now there are 138 organized churches, besides assemblies where service is conducted in English, French, and German. There are among the Waldenses 15,000 communicants, and 8,000 to 10 000 more in the Italian Protestant churches. In France there are more than half a million Protestants, with a thousand Protestant pastors, more than 1,200 Protestant schools, and thirty Protestant religious journals. In Switzerland Romanism had once all, and now has only two-fifths of the population. In Bavaria the Protestants number nearly a third of the population. In Belgium alone does Romanism show vigor."

THE CHURCHES.

—The annual examination at Wheaton Theological Seminary begins on Wednesday, May 30th, in the theological rooms in Wheaton College. The concluding exercises of the year take place on Friday following.

—Last Wednesday evening the Swedish Methodists of this city held a jubilee service in commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of the organization of the first church here of the kind.

—The general church meetings now being held or but lately adjourned are the Presbyterian General Assembly and the Baptist general meetings at Saratoga, the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterians (Covenanters) at Allegheny, the United Presbyterian General Assembly at Pittsburgh, the General Synod Reformed Presbyterians (voters) at Philadelphia, the Southern Presbyterian General Assembly at Lexington, Ky., General Council of the Reformed Episcopalians at Baltimore, the General Council Lutheran Ministerium at Norristown, Pa., the Dunkers at Bismarck Grove, Kans., another general meeting of Lutherans at Springfield, Ohio, the Cumberland Presbyterian General Assembly at Nashville, Tenn., and the Y. M. C. A. International Convention at Milwaukee.

—The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church (Covenanters) of North America met in Allegheny City May 23d. The attendance of ministers and elders was very large. The synod was constituted with prayer by the retiring Moderator, the Rev. Dr. David Gregg, of New York City, after which the Rev. D. S. Faris was, by acclamation, elected to succeed him. An interesting report was read of foreign mission work in Syria, showing largely increased membership, healthy progress in school work, etc. Dr. A. M. Milligan, of Pittsburgh, read a paper on "Systematic Benificence."

—The twenty-fifth annual General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church of North America was formally opened in the Third church, Pittsburgh, Wednesday evening, with a sermon by the Rev. Dr. Paul, Concord, Ohio, the retiring Moderator. The roll-call followed, and nearly every delegate of the 258 responded to their names. The next day the Assembly organized by electing Rev. Dr. W. H. McMillen, of Allegheny City, Moderator. His opponent was Dr. J. G. Carson, of Xenia, Ohio, the vote being 139 to 70. Dr. Carson is at the head of the movement in opposition to instrumental music.

—On Wednesday last the Baptist Bible Convention in Saratoga, N. Y., adopted resolutions recommending that all Baptist Bible work in foreign lands be done through the Missionary Union at Boston, and all the Bible work of this country be done through the Publication Society of Philadelphia, and also providing that the American and Foreign Bible Society nominate three members to the Board of Publication, and that the society hand over its effects and go out of existence. Only thirty-six voted against the resolutions, while 387 voted for them. The former next day withdrew their opposition and made the result unanimous.

—Before the meeting of the U. P. General Assembly a meeting for prayer was held in the Third U. P. church, Pittsburgh, led by Dr. David A. Wallace, late of Wooster, O., "Our need of the Holy Ghost" being the all-important theme. The instrumental music question will again appear in this Assembly.

—In the United Presbyterian General Assembly on Friday the Rev. W. S. Pressly, of South Carolina, delegate from the Associate Reformed church of the South, addressed the assembly, expressing a kindly feeling and hoping the differences between the two would soon be settled. He also congratulated the assembly on the success of the quarter centennial fund, and spoke of the good it would do. The Moderator responded briefly, hoping the time was not far distant when all differences would be wiped out. The committee appointed to correspond with other denominations in relation to the desecration of the Sabbath, reported a resolution protesting against the profanation of the Sabbath, and offering to co-operate with the civil authorities to secure quiet on that day.

—In the Reformed Presbyterian Synod there was on Friday a general discussion on national reform, and a number of ministers made short and eloquent addresses in its favor. One minister thought the principle of God in the Constitution was the only principle that would save the Republican party from disaster. Another said, for fifty-two years of his ministerial life he had given the matter his constant attention, and to-day was satisfied that the Constitution of the United States is a millstone which is dragging the world down into the depths of degradation. It was decided that the present laborers in the reform movement be continued, and three others be appointed at once. The character of the wine to be used on the communion table was discussed, and the drift of the discussion was strongly in favor of the pure and unadulterated juice of the vine.

—The Mennonites in this country now number 410 churches or organizations, 250 ministers, and about 50,000 communicants.

—The Rev. J. H. Brookes, D. D., has just finished the twenty-fifth year of his pastorate in St. Louis, having been called to the Second Presbyterian church, Feb. 18th, 1858, and from that to the Walnut street church, July 8th, 1864. During this time Dr. Brookes has never passed a communion service without some additions, the whole number being 2,143. His church now has two missionaries abroad, and has sent out twenty-four young men to preach.

—As examples of Christian liberality among Chinese converts, an English paper mentions two men who gave $10 each last year to a preaching fund out of an annual income of between $70 and $80. Another gave $6 out of $48 a year. A third gave $7 out of $54; two others, $5 each out of $60, and one $6 out of $36.

—In Turkey, where a few years ago men yoked their wives with oxen, the curriculum in some of the colleges for the education of females compares favorably with similar institutions in America. One of the girls who graduated from Harpoot Seminary is at present engaged upon making a concordance of the Bible in modern Armenian.

—Bishop Riley, Episcopal bishop of Mexico, has never received any salary, and has given about $150,000 during the past ten or twelve years to the Christian work under his care. He has exhausted his private fortune. These facts are now made known by the report of a special committee representing the Committee on Foreign Missions of the Episcopal church and the House of Bishops.

—Six young men, Presbyterians, went to Manitoba to work on a railroad. The contractor ordered them to work on the Sabbath, and they refused. They were dismissed, and brought suit for damages. The court gave them damages, and the Chief Justice of Manitoba said he "was bound to tell them that they were not bound to work. Some people were more strict than others in the observance of the Sabbath. Presbyterians were particularly strict, and these men were Presbyterians. They had a right to be strict; the law gave them that right."

—The latest statistics of the Salvation Army published in connection with preceedings of annual meeting recently held in London are quite imposing. The Army now, it was stated, numbered 491 corps, with 1,500,000 members, whilst the income amounted to £121,000. The rental expenses were £21,000, and the value of the property acquired £150,800, but the mortgages amount to £54,000.

—Mr. Spurgeon says of the Salvation Army proceedings: "It is time that somebody spoke, now that the attempt is made to make men religious by turning all religion into a game of soldiers. Because they would not hinder anything that promised well, Christian men have borne with much that grieved them, but there is a point beyond which long-suffering charity cannot go. That point is nearly reached; even the men ultra-tolerant must feel that hope has been disappointed, and fear now takes its place."

—It is said that Dr. Gladden is frequently asked whether the "Christian League of Connecticut" is a real organization. At the recent meeting of Central Ohio Conference, in replying to a question thrown into the midst of an animated debate on Christian leagues, he incidently remarked that the articles in the Century referred to the "Connecticut that is above, the mother of us all." He did not, however, intend to intimate that the new Connecticut will not descend to earth till she can have the company of a New Jerusalem, for he emphatically affirmed his belief that there would very soon be in many towns and cities thoroughly organized societies for co-operation in local Christian work.

—What is known as the McAll Mission in France, which was recently consolidated with the evangelistic work of M. Saillens in Southern France, has now passed under the care of an organized society composed of eight members, of whom four are French, one English, one Scotch and two Americans. The latter are Rev. W. W. Newell and Rev. Dr. A. F. Beard, the new pastor of the American chapel in Paris. Marseilles and Paris will hereafter be the centers of the mission work, which will be under one administration. There are at present, 32 stations in Paris and its environs, and 48 in other large cities and towns of France, chiefly in the center and south. The expense for 1882, in the field covered by the now united work, was upwards of $60,000—the best investment of the year by the Republic.

—The Gaboon mission in West Africa has been one of the most prosperous stations among the heathen of the Dark Continent. From the church at Benita, which is within the bounds of this mission, two independent churches went out some time ago, and a third is now going out. The total membership of these three churches is about 300, the members being all persons who formerly were heathens.

—The missionaries in the Sandwich Islands having Christianized nearly all the old inhabitants, are now turning their attention to the Chinese, who have settled there in large numbers. They find the Celestials willing scholars, although, like many of their cousins who have made their homes in this city, they are willing to be taught religion principally that they may learn the English language.

—The great religious event in London is the periodical return of the "anniversaries." The term "May Meetings" has become a misnomer. In the current year they extend from April 11 to June 20. There is no diminution in number or in range of topics. The list swells to 132, and includes almost every possible form of benevolent reformatory, educational, and Christian work. Foreign and domestic missions, colleges and universities, Sunday-schools and ragged-schools, tract and Bible societies, agencies for temperance and moral reform, organizations to promote universal peace and the seperation of church from State, societies for the benefit of widows and orphans, of the needy aged and the homeless children, of soldier and sailor, of Jew and Turk, Chinaman and Hindu, African and Arab, heathen at home, and heathen at the antipodes—all have a hearing. Past successes are chronicled, and fresh inspiration is gathered for future effort.

FARM NOTES.

A paper was read before the Academie des Sciences last month giving the results of a long series of experiments on hens' eggs, snowing that jars and shocks produced malformation in the embryo. Even the slight jar of a railroad train was suffieient to prevent incubation in many eases; while eggs placed on a machine that gave them a constant shaking or sudden shocks were sure to produce monstrosities.

GALLED SHOULDERS.—An Illinois farmer gives the following direction for euring galled horses, and says that it is infallible: "Take old leather and burn it to a crisp; rub the ashes on the galled part. A few applications will effect a perfect cure. A new work horse put to the plow this spring received several severe galls on both shoulders. A few applications of the burnt leather made them as sound as if never injured, and no sear is now seen.

POTATOES PLANTED DEEP.—We tried the experiment this year, on several alternate rows of potatoes about thirty rods long, of planting a part about two or three inches deep, and the other part five inches deep. The latter invariably produce from twenty to twenty-five per eent. more potatoes, the treatment in every other respect being the same. They were cultivated flat, which always give more than when ridged.—Country Gentleman.

DESTROYING WEEDS.—It is a well known law of nature that no plant can live any length of time without leaves. The loss of any portion of its foliage is damaging to a plaut. It is for this reason that we destroy the potato bug to save the leaves of our plants. The same law enables us to get rid of all the weeds that annoy us. To kill weeds uothing more is needed than to prevent them from making leaves. The roots are thus smothered, so to speak, and large weeds like the Canada thistle will rot and be converted into plant food, leaving numerous small drains through the subsoil, greatly to the benefit of the land. Though this method is laborious, who can doubt that it will prove profitable, considering the long years of loss and annoyance that must otherwise follow? Anyhow, it is the only way to kill the weeds, and a year's treatment as above will about finish them.

SHALLOW SOWING OF SEEDS.—A knowledge of seed sowing can only come through practice. The time of the year, the nature of the soil, and the nature of the seeds, have all to be considered. It is an art that cannot be completely taught, though a few hints may be given to put the learner on the track. We must first remember that it requires an effort to push the youug growth through the earth, and that all efforts require food. The material in the seed feeds the young plant, and the greater the effort to get through the earth, the weaker it will be when it gets to the top. Many seedlings burn off, because they are too weak to live by the time they get to the surface.

Then we must remember that seeds must have some moisture, and an absence of light. The deduction from all this is the seeds must be as shallow as possible in the ground, consistently with darkness and moisture. How just to do this must be determined by each sower. Light soil is generally the best for seeds, because it admits being pressed down firmly over them, allowing of shallow sowiug. This cannot be done when the soil is stiff, because it then cakes, thus giving the seed hard work to do to push through it.

CHEAP HOEING.

Allow me to give your readers a way I have of destroying weeds in my garden, and at the same time inerease the productiveness of the ground.

I have for about five years made it a practiee of sowing salt on my garden every spring, as long as the crops planted are small, and in no danger of being injured by the salt. It must not be allowed to touch them in the least. Just as the weeds begin to come up so as they show plainly, sow salt on them when the dew is on them in the morning. One bushel of salt used in this way is worth several dollars invested in labor, and is very much easier. The plan works equally as well on field crops, but is not as practical; besides field crops, being planted with more room, can be better kept clean by horse power and machinery. I have in a manner eleared my garden of early-growing weeds, and could also destroy the late-growiug ones if I would keep up the practice later in the season. Market gardeners would find it a good practiee, if weeds are troublesome. I kill docks, sprouts, creepers, etc., the same way; but first eut them off at the ground and put the salt on the fresh eut place. I have effectually killed large locust and other trees by one application of salt.—Trimble County, Ky., Letter.

FINING THE SOIL.

I believe one of our greatest mistakes in farm business is made in our undue haste when sowing and eultivating our crops. We are in so much hurry to get the seed into the ground that we do not take time to properly fit the soil for its reeeption. We plow the land; run a pulverizer or harrow over it onee, sow or plant the seed, and cover it as quickly as possible. Sometimes we do not do as much as this. I have known a man to plow heavy land for oats, and sow the seed on the furrows. Of course the surface was very rough and broken—nothing but a succession of ridges and hollows and large elods—utterly uufit to receive the seed. But the farmer was in a hurry and could not stop to harrow the land before sowing. Planting is very often done on land that is not half fitted. And, as it would be natural to expect, a man who is in too much hurry to get his land iu good order to plant is generally in too great haste to thoroughly cultivate the growing crop. He ruus the cultivator or horse-how between the rows onee or twice during the season, and thinks this is all that he can afford to do. But here he makes a great mistake—one of the greatest mistakes which he ean make in his whole business. By this course he greatly diminishes his crops and reduees his profits for the profit of farm crops lies in a large yield per aere. A small yield only pays expenses. And it is the haste with whieh the land is prepared and the neglect whieh the crop reeeives which occasions the low yields of whieh so many farmers complain, and whieh bars the way to sueeess in their business. I am convinced, both by experience and observation, that it is useless to run over our land. We ought not to plant more than we can cultivate thoroughly. If we have already got too large an area planted, let us hire extra help and cultivate the erop well. Another year we ean plant less. Less planting and more cultivation would be a good motto for the average farmer. The soil eontains many of the elements of plant food, but it must be pulverized before the crop ean readily obtain them. The finer we make the soil, the nieer the bed in which to put the seed, the easier and faster the plants can obtain their food. This is a principle of which we have been slow to take the advantage, but one whieh we ought to understand and apply. It certainly lies at the very foundation of eeonomical and sueeessful cultivation.—Practical Farmer.

The city of Philadelphia now holds in trust for charitable purposes funds amounting to $10,284,027, not counting nine trusts of that nature which are not under the administration of the Board of City Trusts. The Girard estate is the chief trust. The principal is $9,674,269.84. The oldest trust is the Benjamin Franklin fund of $53.500, the income from which is expended in aiding young mechanics to start in business. The total number of such trusts held in and for, if not exactly by, the city of Philadelphia is thirty-seven.

Insanity is startlingly on the increase in the so-called civilized world. In 1870 the insane population of the United States amounted to 37,442, the ratio being 1 to 1,100, while in 1880 the number was estimated to be 89,000 to 96,000, which gives a ratio of 1 to 570 to 1 to 520 of the whole population. As regards the distribution of insanity, the returns show that the disease is most prevalent in the New England States, where the ratio is 1 to 357; then come the middle States, with 1 to 446; the western, with 1 to 570; lastly the southern, with 1 to 780. In rapidity of increase the western come first, the southern second. The asylums are said to be overcrowded to the extent of 10,000 patients, while there are 50,000 for whom there is no accommodation.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.
In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are
COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.
The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.
The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing
FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.
They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means
IN CLUBS OF FIVE OR MORE.

SAMPLE COPIES SENT FREE.
We are prepared to furnish any other Sunday-school papers in the market at publishers' prices, so that schools can order all their supplies from us, and thus save the complication, labor and expense of sending to several parties. We handle a full line of Sunday-school Tickets, Reward Cards, helps and other requisites, which we will furnish at regular publishers' prices.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich, and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete, revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Proceedings of Pittsburgh Convention. Containing Official Reports; Addresses by Rev. D. R. Kerr, D. D., Rev. B. T. Roberts, Rev. G. T. R. Meiser, Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., Prest. J. Blanchard, Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., Rev. Woodruff Post, Rev. Henry Cogswell, Prof. C. A. Blanchard and Rev. W. E. Coquilette. 25c. each; per doz. $2.00.

Minutes of the Syracuse Convention. Containing addresses by Rev. B. T. Roberts, Chas. W. Greene, Esq., Prof. C. A. Blanchard, Rev. D. P. Rathbun, Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Mrs. M. E. Gage, Elder J. R. Baird and others. 25c. per doz. $2.00.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association. 25c. each, per doz. $1.50.

The Anti-Mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 31 Cynosure tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. 20c. each, per doz. $1.75.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McDill, Prest. J. Blanchard and Rev. Edward Beecher. In cloth, 35c. per doz. $3.25. Paper cover, 15c. Per doz. $1.25.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Other Publications for Sale by EZRA A. COOK, CHICAGO, ILL.

In the Coils; or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how individual, domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trammeled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Stearns' Review of Two Masonic Addresses. In this scathing review the lying pretensions of the order are clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Stearns' Letters on Masonry. Showing the antagonism between Freemasonry and the Christian religion. Paper cover, 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 20 cents each; per dozen $2.00.

MASONIC AND ODDFELLOWSHIP WORKS.

(ACKNOWLEDGED STANDARD AUTHORS.)

Sickels' Freemasons' Monitor. Containing the degrees of Freemasonry embraced in the Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery, embellished with nearly 300 symbolic illustrations, together with tactics and drill of Masonic Knighthood. Also forms of Masonic documents, notes, songs, Masonic dates, installations, etc. By D. Sickels; 32mo. In tuck, $1.50.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry. Containing a Definition of Terms, Notes on its History, Traditions and Antiquities, and an Account of all the Rites and Mysteries of the Ancient World. 12 mo., 526 pages, $3.00.

Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, or Monitorial Instruction Book. By Albert G. Mackey, Past General High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, Knight of the Eagle and Pelican, Prince of Mercy, etc. Price, cloth, $1.25; tuck, $1.75.

Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, or Monitorial Instructions in the Degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Mason, with Ceremonies relating to Installations, dedications, consecrations, laying of corner-stones, etc. Price, $2.00.

Mackey's Mystic Tie. A collection of Masonic Anecdotes published for the avowed purpose of showing "the character and tendency of Freemasonry. Such chapter headings as "Freemasonry Among Pirates," "Masonic Courtesy in War," "The Soldier Mason," etc., show it is a very valuable work, especially for lecturers. Price $1.50.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Containing the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.25, paper, 75c. Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an exposition, and not allowed as authority.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the entire ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a standard text-book in the lodge and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though many officers of the lodge make use of it. Price, in cloth, $2.50.

Femals Masonry. Manual of the Order of the Eastern Star. Containing the ritual, symbols, lectures, etc., of the five degrees of "Adoptive Masonry," Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustrated and handsomely bound. Price, $1.50.

Donaldson's Odd-Fellows' Text-Book. Profusely illustrated, containing a sketch of the history, defense, principles and government of the order; the instructions of each degree, principal odes, with music, business forms, funeral ceremonies, list of Bible proper names and their signification, with a steel plate of Hon. Schuyler Colfax. Large 12mo. cloth, $2.00; pocket size tuck, $1.50.

Donaldson's Odd-Fellows' Pocket Companion and Minstrel. History of the order, its teachings, regulations, emblems, etc., profusely illustrated, with the instructions for each degree suited to the work as revised by the Sovereign Grand Lodge in 1880. "The Odd-fellows' Minstrel," comprising a large number of odes of the order, a list of Biblical names etc. In tuck, $1.50.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—With a view to keeping the Indians on their respective reservations and also reducing the expenses of the Indian service, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has issued a circular to agents at non-treaty Indian Agencies, directing them to discontinue supplying Indians with coffee, tea, sugar, and tobacco except as compensation for labor performed.

—The Brooklyn bridge was formally opened Thursday, the President, members of his Cabinet, and other prominent gentlemen taking part. The day was observed as a holiday in New York and Brooklyn, and the surging masses of people that thronged the approaches to the bridge and other points from which the ceremonies could be observed numbered thousands. Business houses, manufactories, residencies, and shipping were decorated with flags and bunting. In the evening a grand pyrotechnic display was made from the bridge, and the President gave a reception in the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

—During a heavy windstorm at Beloit, Wis., Friday forenoon, huge hailstones demolished many windows, and live fish fell in a business street, one of which weighed a pound.

—The recent cold snap extended over the entire country. Snow was six inches deep in some parts of Virginia Tuesday, and was disastrous to growing plants.

—Near Lakeville, on the California shore, the steamer Pilot, bound north from San Francisco blew up Friday morning. Eight persons are dead, seven are wounded, and ten are missing, and are supposed to have been drowned. The explosion sent some of the victims flying from the boat and landed them on shore, where the fall caused death or broken limbs.

—Four hundred riotous miners drove non-union workmen from the colliery at Collinsville, Ill., Thursday, and the proprietors have asked the aid of militia.

—At Guacanope, in the Sierra Madres, General Crook's forces defeated the hostiles in an engagement, in which thirty Indians were killed. The Apaches fled, and Crook started in pursuit.

—The German Emperor has issued a decree assigning Nov. 10 and 11 next as the days for celebrating the 400th anniversary of the birth of Luther.

—At Rosloff, Russia, Tuesday last, a Jew killed a native, when the Russians retaliated by burning and robbing several Jewish shops. The riots lasted during the night, three companies of Cossacks being unable to suppress the disorders.

—Some of the Bolivian frontier customs officials have confiscated some boxes of Bibles sent by a missionary society, which did not bear the proper pontificial warrant. The papers want to know who made these men censors of religion, and what their qualifications for office are. The law does not prohibit the importation of books.

—From Saturday to Monday of last week the high north wind and storm, following the cyclone of the Friday evening previous, was very disastrous to shipping in the southern part of Lake Michigan. Several vessels were driven upon the breakwater and piling along the Chicago city front, the whole crew, except one man, being lost in one instance. Another vessel foundered off Evanston and sank with all on boark.

—The engine and three cars of a Denver and Rio Grande train went through the Gunnison River Bridge in Utah, Friday, and several persons lost their lives.

—Alexander III. was on Sunday crowned emperor and autocrat of all the Russias, at Moscow, with imposing religious ceremonies. A full representation of foreign governments witnessed the coronation. The emperor wore the white uniform of a colonel of the Imperial guard, and the empress was attired in the Russian national costume of black velvet embroidered with diamonds and girdled with a belt of precious stones. The ceremony, which was according to the ritual of the Greek church, was conducted by the metropolitans of Moscow, Novogorod and Kieffe, assisted by a large company of minor ecclesiastics. The cost of the coronation is estimated at $10,000,000. The enthusiasm of the people was hearty and seemingly universal. The royal proclamation has been forshadowed, none of the beneficences promised being of a radical character.

—No political prisoners, save Polish exiles, who must agree to police surveillance for two years, will be pardoned on the event of the Czar's coronation. Some non-political offenders will be released, and fines and arrears of taxes remitted.

—In a sortie from Fort Hanoi, in Tonquin, the French Captain Riviere was killed. An important Chinese officer has been ordered to command the Celestials on the Tonquin froniter, and the tension between France and China is increasing. It is believed the ministers of both nations at Paris and Pekin will soon receive their passports.

Fifty thousand and over of the Weed pamphlet are circulating among the people, and fifty thousand more are now ready awaiting your orders. This document is invaluable as an explanation of how the Freemasons baffled the officers of the law and shielded murderers for fifty years, in spite of the efforts of Hon. Mr. Weed and others to ferret out the criminals, just as the "Invincibles" of Ireland and the "Black Hand" societies of Spain are now attempting to do. You should read it.

BUSINESS.

WILL YOU TRY?

Do you approve the changes in your paper? If so, please remember, solid articles, portraits, biographical sketches, etc., add to the expense and call for a corresponding increase in circulation to make accounts balance. You can get one subscriber at least—IF YOU TRY.

WORK WINS, even in the dry season, for subscribers. Proof, one young man started out resolved to succeed. In two months and five days he sold $175.78 worth of books, and obtained 125 new subscribers from persons very like to your neighbors. He showed his books and papers, and explained the work of the N. C. A., and when the people learned what is going on they wanted the literature. Try this plan with your neighbor. Ten to one you'll get his subscription—IF YOU TRY.

Mr. Weed's clear, concise statement of the facts in the case of Morgan's abduction, is regarded with more than idle curiosity by the lights of the craft, as appears from the fact that a "Sovereign Grand Inspector General" in the brotherhood stained with the blood of murder, replies in a book of 400 pages which he avers to be the result of "assiduous labors," protracted through thirty seven years, aided by "MANY PERSONALLY CONCERNED IN THE ABDUCTION."

Send your orders for a supply of Mr. Weed's pamphlet for yourself and neighbors and read what shakes the Secret Empire and makes its "Sublime Princes" tremble on their thrones.

Single copy, 5 cts; $3 per hundred; or $20 per 1,000.

—Postmaster General Gresham has issued a general order directing postmasters to co-operate with the custodians of public buildings in aiding the Civil Service Commission in all reasonable ways in the discharge of its public duties.

—A graphic paper on the great Chicago fire of 1871 was read before the Historical Society by the Hon. E. C. Larned, who put the number of lives lost in the same at 300 at least.

—The New York Tribune publishes reports of the winter wheat crop from reliable correspondents, and on the whole takes a favorable view of the situation. It estimates the yield for 1883 at between 420,000,000 and 430,000,000 bushels.

—A green-hued insect has caused havoc in the strawberry fields of Southern Illinois, in some instances totally destroying the crop. Caterpillars seriously threaten apples, but the peach orchards are in prime condition.

The Master's Carpet.
BY
E. Ronayne.
Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

DR. JOHN BULL'S
FEVER and AGUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER.
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

Governor Butler finds it harder to get an addition to his titles from Harvard College than from the Masonic order. Last Thursday the Board of Trustees by a vote of 13 to 11 refused to dub him LL. D. An animated discussion continuing four hours could not shake the determination and integrity of the majority. To ordinary people it is not easy to see why Butler, who can write after his name several lines of titles expressing his royal, imperial, chivalric and supreme character as a Freemason of thirty-three degrees, should care for the bauble of a college degree. Probably the thirteen gentlemen who voted against making him a doctor of laws thought the degree would be altogether supernumerary. Its significance would surely be lost in the multitude of magniloquent titles that surround Butler's bald head like a halo of glory.

A grand jury sitting here in Chicago has just indicted the undertaker who had the contract of burying the county dead, for selling the bodies fraudulently to medical students. The Daily News in expressing it satisfaction at the result, uses this remarkable language: "We had come to look upon the grand juries of Cook county as servile agents of the corrupt element now controlling our city and county affairs. We supposed that the Freemasonry that exists between the scoundrels in the Common Council, and the rascals in the in the County Board, and the 'jobbers' of Clark and Washington streets and the Criminal Court building, was strong enough to prove a controlling force in any grand jury that could be named. We admit that we believed the brotherhood of public banditti had a sufficient representation in every department of the city and county governments to protect themselves when attacked."

The Nihilists have for more than a year been boasting that Alexander II. would never be crowned Czar of the Russias. It has been more than surmised that their threats had the effect of more than once postponing the ceremony; and the timidity of the royal families of Europe in answering the invitation to be present with letters of regret, proves that the dread of these secret lodges had its effect outside Russia at least. The firmness with which the Czar undertook the ceremony proves his possession of either superior courage or superior knowledge. Had the Nihilists kept their word the profound impression would have been equalled only by the universal horror. Their failure to carry out the threat is a confession of weakness, which adds contempt to abhorrence.

Yucatan and Central America have for many years been one of the most interesting fields for the modern explorer, at the same time one of the most difficult to penetrate on account of the hostility of some of the native tribes, and difficult to work because of the long rainy season succeeded by the intense heat of summer. One of the most thorough and best authenticated expeditions of this sort was that sent out by the North American Review and the Lorillards of New York, and led by M. Desire Charnay. But another Frenchman turns up lately who claims to have spent nine years with his wife in that severe climate investigating the ruins above and beneath the ground. He claims to have found ruins certainly from 6,000 to 10,000 years old, and others that were built and inhabited by a race of dwarfs that were pigmies to the dwarfs of our modern exhibitions. It is time for another Gulliver story. Dean Swift succeeded so well in his day that thousands believed in Lilliput as much as in China; but this bright Frenchman is apparently confident of greater honor. He has been so long gone from civilization, that he has not yet learned the latest scientific view of these very ancient people is that they did not live so long ago by half as was supposed.

But the statement of this explorer which is of most singular interest is that Freemasonry existed in these prehistoric ages with evidently the same character, symbols, grips, signs, winks and general knavery as at present—a wonderful proof of the antiquity and unchangableness of the institution. We suggest to grand organizer of the conclave Gassette, that his expedition of Knight Templar Masons might turn toward Yucatan with more profit to Masonry than to spend their money in a European carousal. Or Rob. Morris, celebrated for the Masonic symbols 3,000 years old which he cut on the ruins of Palestine, and also for his true story of Morgan—let him hasten to this new field of Masonic investigation. The world is in affliction until a new book comes from his pen. One circumstance gives color to the Frenchman's story. He says these old Freemasons were fire worshippers, phallic worshipers, worshipers of mastodons and elephants' heads; since these religious characteristics are not strange to the lodges of our day there may have been Masons before "Adam delved and Eve span." It is a remarkable fact that whenever the relics of ancient heathenism are unearthed there is always enough Masonry turned up to send a thrill of delight and satisfaction through every true Masonic bosom. What a meeting it will be when all the worshipers of Hiram, or of his predecessors, fire, sun, elephants, etc., etc, are gathered in the "Grand Lodge above!"

The United Presbyterian brethren are being tried and the cohesive power of their relations put to a severe test. After a year's discussion in their papers since the General Assembly at Monmouth passed by a bare majority the resolution for bringing organs into church, the question took up a large part of the Assembly's time at Pittsburgh, and to the final action, confirming the vote of last year by a large majority, Dr. J. G. Carson of Xenia Theological Seminary entered a strong protest in company with some forty others. It has been intimated that this movement meant a general relaxing of conviction upon the distinctive principles of the church, and that the rule against lodge idolatry would go next. We hope not; the United Presbyterians are too logical and truthful to put so fundamental a principle as the distinction between Christ's table and the devil's on a par with the use of an instrument in public worship. The most serious feature of the controversy is the division of feeling which naturally exists for the time being. Drs. Cooper, Wallace and Lytle, all good and true men, have been chosen to address a pastoral letter to the churches upon the instrument question. May the Holy Spirit give them great wisdom in this important commission.

THE MORGAN MYSTERY.

BY E. WENTWORTH, D.D.

Some friend has sent me a copy of the Cynosure, enclosing a copy of Thurlow Weed's dying statement clearing up the Morgan mystery. I was thirteen years old when that foul deed was perpetrated, and, like my father, became an Anti-masonic partizan in the political struggle that followed, until Masonry sank out of sight for the time being, to reappear in Odd-fellowship and ultimately to resume some of its old prestige in this country, in a new generation.

I saw three turn-outs of Masons in earlier boyhood. One was at a celebration of the anniversary of the British attack on Stonington, August 10, 1814, when the Masons of all eastern Connecticut turned out in full regalia in the presence, it was said, of "4,000 people," with a grand procession, dinner in the rope-walk, and an oration, of which I remember nothing but the quotation, from Virgil, of the favorite warning of the craft to outsiders who would meddle with their secrets:

"Procul, O procul este profani."

In November, 1823, I saw the burial of a Baptist preacher, Elder Sterry of Norwich, with Masonic ceremonies, and was impressed with the throwing of slips of evergreen upon the lowered coffin, by the brethren of his lodge. In 1825, I saw the laying of the corner stone of a Methodist church at Norwich Falls by the order, and recollect a boy's disgust at seeing a white-aproned, drunken shoe-maker, who never darkened the door of a church, and who died a few years after of delirium tremens, kneeling and repeating prayers as devoutly as the devoutest!

In August, 1831, a Methodist church was dedicated at Norwich, followed by a protracted meeting at which two local preachers, Bentley and Whittlesey, took part and occasionally preached. Bentley was a Mason, Whittlesey a seceder and lecturer on the Anti-masonic side. Neither would hear the other. I recollect my father, a Congregationalist, telling them bluntly, that, for their unbrotherliness, they "both deserved to be turned out of the church." Whittlesey was cruelly persecuted; cattle and horses mutilated; property burned; if I remember rightly, himself shot at and threatened with violence whenever he lectured.

Odd-fellowship, inaugurated in England in 1809, numbering, in 1864, over 350,000 members there, was imported to this country as a substitute for Masonry, a kind of bastard Masonry, a sort of mutual insurance association, as pretentious as its predecessor in some of its claims.

In 1848 I was called on to officiate at the funeral of a Romanist whose priest had refused to bury him because he was a Mason. The proprietors of the secret order of the confessional will brook no rivalry. "Go and dig a hole in the ground," said the irate priest "and bury your son like a dog."

How dangerous secret fraternities are capable of being is illustrated in Ireland and Russia to-day. I thought the lesson taught Masonry by the Morgan explosion had made it chary of the exercise of its community power, but as late as 1880, I was startled when a young minister, who thought himself seriously injured by an older minister, said to me, "If I knew it was he who slandered me, I would bring a power to bear upon him that should crush him, and he not know whence it came or what hurt him. I suppose you know," said he, "that I am a Mason?"

Though a member of the Phi Beta Kappa, the secrets and symbols which John Quincy Adams and others made public during the Anti-masonic excitement of 1828–30; and of the Psi U's, a college fraternity with chapters, whose influence largely expires with exit from college life, I co-operated heartily with the movement inaugurated by President Wayland thirty years ago to abolish secret societies in colleges altogether. The movement was abortive. The fraternities are more common than ever. Their multiplication in colleges and society is regarded by some as an aggravation of the evil. I do not so regard it. They neutralize each other. With its numberless rivals in show and pretension, Masonry can never be, in this country what it was before 1826. I never see the sign "I. O. O. F." without thinking of the reading given it by a country bumpkin, "100 fools."

Secrecy is useless and dangerous. It is never needed except as a cover to wrong. Many things are private that are not secret and privacy is to be sharply distinguished from secrecy, especially oath-bound secrecy. To private associations there are no objections, and they are all-sufficient. The benefits of secret societies do not compensate for their waste of time and extortion of money. They charge heavy initiation fees and exact yearly payments and fines. They take adult men only, sound in mind and limb, and then parade their benevolence to the disparagement of that of the Christian church to which they bear the relation of the mistletoe to the oak, draining its strength, life and resources. The church takes all that offer, young and old, women and children, halt, blind, sick, without fee for entrance or current taxation. Let the church charge as Odd-fellowship charges and its monies and revenues would surpass those of any secret association! The church's benevolences are out and out, and not a "quid pro quo." As a bond of brotherhood no association in the world equals that of the Christian church.

Troy, N. Y.

WAS MASONRY AMONG THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA?

Modern Masonry began in 1717, but the principle on which it is based has been in existence, as Masons may truly claim, from the time that Satan entered Eden. A translation of "Seven Discourses by G. Tophel of Geneva" has been made by a worthy citizen of Chicago, Dr. Shipman of the Foundlings' Home, in which appear the following remarks, under the head of "Pergamos, or the church seduced:"

"Balaam was the most odious and the most skillful seducer which the Bible portrays....so infernal that....one is tempted to say he was the devil himself....He counseled the king to corrupt them [Israel] by inviting them to heathen festivals. The scheme succeeded only too well....Without an immediate intervention of God the nation would have been lost....near the promised land, in the snares of pleasures and immorality....Those infamous tactics of the aged Balaam Satan invariably employs against those whom violence fails to conquer."

The world had hated and persecuted the church at Pergamos, but "re-appears as a charming woman" who proffers her friendship.

"If an idol is nothing....the Christian cannot get any harm at its feasts if he goes with good motives. What craft! The Nicolaitanes invented this....The Nicolaitanes driven from Ephesus are found at Pergamos emboldened to advance innovations timidly tried elsewhere—they no longer conceal what they scarcely dared avow. The mask is thrown off, the crafty sophisms have cauterized the conscience and perverted the moral sense. Ah! woe to you, Christians of Pergamos, if you lend a complaisant ear to such subtleties!....Woe! if like Eve you parley with the serpent....Christian Balaams....will entice you to heathen banquets. God will not follow yon there ....the descent is slippery....Satan substitutes craft for violence....The friendship of the world is accepted by the church and the consequence is an alliance with idolatry instead of victory over it."

The truth in the preceding picture is as applicable to Masonry in our churches as to the past historical events alluded to by the author, and the consequences must be similarly disastrous if the churches do not repent and thereby avert them.

From "The Church at Thyatira" we take the following paragraph:

"Jezebel, then, is the final victory of the pagan principle over the people of God. At Thyatira it was more especially Nicolaitism....The same terms 'eating things offered to idols,' etc., characterized the evil at Pergamos and the teaching of Jezebel at Thyatira. We find at Thyatira the Nicolaitism of Ephesus and Pergamos, but with this essential difference, that, resisted at Ephesus and tolerated at Pergamos it is submitted to at Thyatira. At Ephesus it insinuated itself; at Pergamos it was installed; at Thyatira it triumphed! It was an intruder, a homeless one at Ephesus; at Pergamos its position was acknowledged; at Thyatira it had prevailed. In a word, in the first of these three churches, it was a timid innovation; in the second, a system; in the third a tyranny! From Ephesus to Pergamos and from Pergamos to Thyatira what frightful progress! What a crescendo in the march of evil!'

It is even so that this power, stranger as it was to the church in its origin and very nature, becomes indissolubly attached to it as dry rot to the tree on which it feeds. "The evil is then without remedy" in this "church of contrasts" Thyatira.

The progress of the corruption of the Christian church culminated in the union of the church with the civil power. That was an impure and wrongful connection, and the Romish church in due time became the persecutor of the true faith. The phases of the temptations vary with events but the spirit which seeks to subvert the authority of Christ is ever at work covertly or openly. Freemasonry is the modern Jezebel, seducing our churches and controlling many of them already, with power even to kill and persecute its own refractory members or its enemies; and is as cunning in its assumed robes of light as that woman Jezebel who calls herself a prophetess and teaches and seduces the servants of Christ or members of the churches.

SENEX.

"IT MAY BE."

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

"It may be"—"it may be"—"it may be"—
Forever and ever the same;
Our philosophers build on a may-be,
And then call it some other name.

It may be in long agone ages,
The sea covered up all the land,
When embryo man was a mussel,
Rolled about by the waves on the sand.

It may be that mighty convulsions
And earthquakes made continents rise,
And the fierce lurid light of volcanoes
Lit up the thick vaporous skies.

It may be the earth took to cooling,
Her hot rugged brows by degrees,
Till out of the cold seams of lava,
Arose the coniferous trees.

It may be the katy-did's grandsire
Came out of his hole about then,
And sang in that lonely pine forest,
Before there were katies or men.

It may be by careful selection
Some crawfish developed a spine,
And the turtle with dignity founded
The far-reaching vertebrate line.

It may be in that primal forest
The saber-tooth yelled as he ran
From a stone-ax, so skillfully hurled
By the hands of a long hairy man.

It may be the cyclone was born
When the pine forests stretched to the pole.
And swept them all down in great winrows,
When nature was making her coal.

It may be the Bible's a fable,
And hell but a mythical hoax:
It may be there's no inspiration
Except in the gravel and rocks.

It may be that mind is but matter,
It may be that life's but a dream,
It may be the dead and the living
Are not what to reason they seem.

"It may be," "it may be," "it may be,"
Ne'er building the fabric amain,
A Babel of doubt and delusion,
Obscuring the true and the plain.

It may be we're turning and turning,
As horses go round in a mill,
In circles of lonely conjecture,
And neither go on nor stand still.

We would not condemn all conjecture,
Nor reject hypothetical proof,
But surely he's mad, whose whole building's
Conjecture from cellar to roof.

Who barters a truth for a "may be,"
The "is" for the idle "perhaps,"
Gets only a small toy pistol
That's used for the snapping of caps.

He leaving the highway of knowledge,
Is lost in a morass of doubt,
A tundra of wide desolation,
From whence he shall never get out.

WANTED, FIFTY THOUSAND SACRED CALVES.

Common stock will not do. Real, churchly breeds only will be in demand and price undisputed. The Aaronic calf is too costly for common uses. Anything used by Egypt, Babylon, Sodom or any modern "Gotham" will be thankfully accepted. But we must have the genuine Vanderbilt stock at the head. They have the "material" of which the most popular saints are composed. "Money answereth all things," is our moral code. Other good laws may come in behind, but this one is our spiritual pivot. Our religion must see her gods. It tolerates no mysteries, no intangibles. So acted our brethren in the camp of Israel, when reason instead of faith came to the throne. "Make us gods," said they, "to go before us. As for this Moses we wot not what is become of him." This is the rational creed.

Said David's enemies, "Where is thy god?" "But our God is in the heavens." answered the Psalmist. Here Faith answers Reason. "No," says Reason, "this will never do. We must have gods we can see, though made of dust and dead at that. To Reason, a dead calf, a clumsy imitation of a calf, is better than "the living God!" Great haste in breaking off the jewelry of Israel's fair ones, for a worse purpose, perhaps, than merely jewel worship. Satan prompted "advanced thought" in this. Now, behold the golden calf! How exquisitely beautiful! "Just lovely!" Now let us have a "grand hop," with the advanced accompaniment not to be named. When the camp was summoned just before, to the worship of the "living God," how tardy! Like the modern prayer-meetings, where lodgery rules and church sprees are in fashion. Moses gone out of sight and no god to be seen. Israel is sleepy till the "new departure" is proposed. Now all is astir in the camp. What lovely dancing and mighty cheering! Even Sinai echoes with the voice of their shoutings—and what more, decency blushes to record. Behold! Moses coming down the steep side of the mountain! See, he halts and looks in a listening posture. What means that abrupt motion? Crash! Down go the tables of the Law of the Lord. Why the people are in a lewd frolic over a golden calf. Give the law of God to such a people? But these are very good folks—stand high in society. They need recreation to unbend their mind. A little mirth—social pleasure—amusement is needed by the best of saints. Why even monkeys can afford this and shall not the saints have some margin for social happiness? Now, dear Moses, do not go into a passion. Don't be so "Puritanic," when we get just a little *Sa*tanic. "You may commit some of your mistakes," quoth "Bob," the camp colonel.

Some of the calves needed by the church may now be specified. We shall begin with 50,000. The times will demand this number multiplied by ten as matters in the church are going. The Vanderbilt stock 10,000. These will represent fancy worship of the church. These bosses will build and equip magnificent temples of worship and seat the occupants according to the laws of caste, excluding such as may be counted unworthy for want of the fashionable attire. The Sensual stock must be largely on hand. These will represent the go-by-feeling class. These animals are excessively nervous and sensitive. To these, propensity is law. Ten thousand of these will be a scanty supply. The Darwinian breed is indispensible to represent "advanced thought." Many of our best members will go out if they cannot find this stock largely represented in both pew and pulpit. Some more of these are needed in Brooklyn, N. Y. Plymouth has a supply. When "Moneron" culminates into calves, by "natural selection and survival of the fittest," some scientists may find a situation in the sanctuary. Hope on. The Opera stock is in growing demand in most of the churches. "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God" abound in our Zion, and must be recognized as a people. These "neck-tie, grab-bag, snap-and-catchem" benefactors of the church are legions. Masquerades, balls, theatres, etc., are all their glory. In these matters they are supremely zealous and self-sacrificing to build up the church.

But we must put away this paper. That old Puritan, Moses, is around and may be taking these calves of ours to mill, where they grind without toll and put our stock into fine dust and then give us unsavory broth such as the rebels of Israel drank. The Col. might put that down as one of "the mistakes of Moses."

The Lodge-calf so abounds in the churches that no more are needed—only to supply the waste. Our ancient brethren have always been represented by a male calf, (See symbols of sun-worship.) The big-headed, stub-horned breeds with some likeness to the human face are best. Now this lodge beast looks down upon us as the sun, the object of supreme reverence. This calfhood should come in with cable-tow and hoodwink (unless born a blind cripple) to symbolize our freedom and wisdom. Ten thousand of these will scarcely meet the increasing demand. A church without this calf is in a worse plight than one without bell, organ, steeple or pastor—just no church. Bring on your calves.

A MORNING'S CHAT WITH THURLOW WEED.

Mr. Weed liked to talk of his last visit in London and Paris. He was sent there, as it is well known, by our government during the civil war, to use his influence with English statesmen in favor of the North; and to oppose Messrs. Mason and Slidell's intrigues with the French and English in favor of the South. This mission, although nominally secret, brought him in contact with the most noted men in both cities; added to his already distinguished social and political standing,—and gave him entrance to the drawing-rooms and salons of the most coveted and brilliant circles. But before going into the particulars of his mission abroad, Mr. Weed spoke of his intimacy with William H. Seward.

"Ah, what memories I have of him!" he exclaimed, "the charmed recollections of years! I could relate every event of his political life. We worked together in many things. How well I remember his defence of the anti-rent law, and his talk respecting the expediency of establishing schools in New York for a class of children too poor to attend the public schools,—the waifs, and strays growing up to be the worst sort of criminals. It made a tremendous talk at the time when Mr. Seward said these Catholic children should have Catholic instruction, and his enemies said it was done to conciliate foreigners. What a worker he was. He became a dyspeptic through his constant labors of mind and body."

"You went to England while Mr. Seward was Secretary of State."

"Yes, and was very well treated by everybody, and the members of Parliament in particular. Sir Edward Ellis,—you see his portrait there over the sofa,—and his son-in-law, Mr. Moffit, were both at the time in the House of Commons, and were exceedingly friendly to me. Sir Edward's town-house was the one where Horace Walpole lived and died, and wrote his famous letters. Walpole's library was Sir Edward's breakfast parlor—an apartment at the top of the house, and lighted by a dome, through which the sky could be seen. Very soon after my arrival in London, I received carte blanche to Sir Edward's Sunday morning breakfasts in this room, and availed myself of this kind invitation many times. Oh, what delightful people I met there!—but let me narrate to you my first visit to the House of Commons. One evening, when a most important topic was in discussion, I entered. It is the custom to show visitors to the right side of the Chamber, but I was to my surprise escorted to the left side, used by the members alone, a compliment to my country, and to the Northern States, of conrse. Messrs. Mason and Slidell were also present, but had been shown to the other side of the House. Numbers of distinguished members came to greet me during the evening, and talked with me of the North, the war, and matters connected with it. But one member greeted the representatives of the Southern States. It was, as might have been expected, the Earl of Beaconsfield—Disraeli—who was heart and soul in favor of the South, and who did all he could to assist the rebels."

"Sir Edward Ellis is dead, I think."

"Oh, yes—he was found dead in his bed, shortly after I returned, and beside him was a letter to me, half-finished. He was a stannch friend of the North during the whole period of the war—a splendid fellow, full of life and vigor, although I did not see him until he was eighty-four years of age—even then an active member of Parliament."

"You went to Paris then?"

"Yes, I was summoned there by a telegram from the American Legation. The gravest trouble was anticipated from an expected speech the Emperor would make the following Snnday, favorable to supporting the Sonth with money, arms, and troops to carry on the war. No time was to be lost in endeavoring to alter the Emperor's opinion. It was vital to our Northern interests. Our Americal Minister at the time was Mr. Dayton, and he had failed to procure an audience either with the Emperor, or those nearest the throne. I asked what I could do, where all such effort had failed. 'You must see the Duc De Morny, the half-brother of the Emperor,' I was told. But how? A happy thonght occurred to me. I remembered a letter of introdnction given to me, for possible use, by an American friend who had resided long in Paris, and was on intimate terms with a number of well-known people. I had never looked to see to whom it was directed. Oddly enough I fonnd it bore the superscription of De Morny's nearest friend—a high official at court. This was on the very Snnday morning that the dreaded speech was to be made. My movements were rapid, and within an hour after my discovery, I had been escorted to the palace of the great French Minister, and my new friend wrote his name beside my own, and sent it in to De Morny, which insured our immediate interview with him. He was seated at a table, and at once proceeded to talk of my errand from Washington to the Old World. Explanatory of the position which his brother was about to take toward our government, he said, 'The French are a manufacturing people. We want the cotton from the Southern States, and are being deprived of our best industry. We have a right to dislike those who have destroyed the harbor of Charleston.'

'Not destroyed, but obstructed,' I ventured to remark, 'and have not the French obstructed the harbors of nations at war with her? And in return, have not the enemies of France obstructed the harbor of Dunkirk, and has it not remained so for over two hundred years, although one of the best harbors on your coast?' The Dnc rang a bell, and asked an attendant to send for information on this subject. 'That is unnecessary,' I said, 'here is the pamphlet from which I gained my knowledge. You are welcome to it.' He took it, looked through it, and appeared surprised at its contents. I then hurriedly implored him for the sake of the harmony which had long existed between France and the United States, to use his influence in keeping it unbroken. In retnrn, he made no promises at all, yet I had a strong hope that his antagonism was changed into a more kindly sentiment toward our government, when he remarked on dismissing me, that if it was necessary, he would again receive me. Of course we were all eager at the American Embassy, to learn the result of my intercession, and the next morning were gratified beyond, far beyond our expectations.

"The Emperor's speech was printed in full, and gave satisfactory evidence of having been altered hastily and clumsily. It was neither favorable or unfavorable to one party or the other, and amounted to nothing at all, much to the chagrin of many people, frequenters at the Tuileries, who were only waiting for the open expression of the Emperor's dislike to our President and his Ministers to carry ont their nefarious schemes and traffic."

"Ah, Mr. Weed, your story reminds me of another American patriot, who was eloquent in Paris when our liberty was threatened."

"But my services were small in comparison with those of Benjamin Franklin. He had hard work to do, and he did it nobly and well. Now that you have made the comparison, I will tell yon that as a lad, it was my ambition in some way to resemble Franklin, and I wanted to be a printer because he was a printer. He saved our Union for three millions, and Providence assisted me in some measure to save it for thirty millions. But come, let us go up to lunch; the bell rang some time since."

This was the last of many pleasant mornings spent with Thnrlow Weed, for it was but a few weeks later that he died.—Good Cheer.

ANECDOTES OF THAD. STEVENS.

HOW HE CONQUERED THE PENNSYLVANIA DUTCH.

Ex-Speaker Grow was telling me, last week, some anecdotes of Thaddeus Stevens, who once, defending the public schools that had with difficulty been legalized, said that the Pennsylvania Dutch cared nothing for educating their sons and daughters, provided they could import and breed fine pigs, cattle and horses. This was made the most of by Stevens' enemies, and he had to defend himself publicly when he went back to Gettysburg, and did it with the argumentum ad hominem. "Isn't it true?" he said. "Yon, Jake Snyder, have got a ram that cost you a thousand dollars, and none of your daughters can read. You, Hans Deitman, paid four thousand dollars for a bull, but make all your sons work winter and snmmer. You, Jimmy Lootman, own Westphalia boars and brood sows, and can't read yourself. Don't you love beasts better than yon do your children and your minds?" The honest Dutchmen began to confer: "That is right," said they; "he only told the trnth." Stevens, instead of Muhlenburg, shonld have a monument in the capital.—Gath, in New York Tribune.

STEVENS AND CONKLING.

Years ago, when Mr. Conkling and Thad. Stevens were members of the Honse, and the latter Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, one morning he reported back an appropriation bill with an item omitted in which Mr. Conkling had some interest. Soon Mr. Conkling presented himself in front of the Chairman and rather preemptorily demanded the reason why. Old Thad. looked the gentleman over in silence for a moment, and then replied: "Young man, unscrew that curl, so that you can get your feet down on the floor, and I will talk with yon."

ROMANISM AND LODGERY.

The Boston Herald of May 21st contains the following synopsis of a sermon in the Roman Catholic Cathedral of that city on the previous day by Father Bodfish, from the text, "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth trnth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." John 2:20, 21. The remarks will deserve some attention as stating with some authority the position of the Romish church:

From time to time, the speaker said, the stability of the holy church had been threatened by secret bands of conspiring men, whose intents were evil. They had assnmed different names, such as that of Freemasons and Illnminati and the Jacobin in France, Nihilist in Russia, Fenian in Ireland, Commnnist in France, but, with all the various names, they always had the same aim and methods. They had always been secret and their members bound by dreadfnl oaths; and, although the rank and file of snch organizations might not know what was intended by the inner ring, still they, by their influence, gave material aid. Therefore it was that the church had condemned such secret oath-bound societies, for she knew the intent of those who organized them was directed against God and the church's divine authority on earth. Thus the church, as the teacher of truth and jnstice, and as the great conservative power on earth, refused to recognize them, but pointed ont the danger and said to her children: thus far shall you go, and no further, on peril of your souls. During his eighteen years' ministry as a priest he had fonnd there was much misapprehension in the minds of persons with respect to this. Some said such things might have happened in other countries or in times gone by, but not here now; others said such societies were only established for benevolent purposes and were perfectly harmless; others, again, said the old fogies at Rome and the holy father were not informed and did not know the intentions of these societies; then, others argned that they were not inclnded in the edict of excommunication, because the society to which they belonged was not mentioned. In order to convey a correct impression, the revcrend speaker qnoted from the writings of an eminent professor at Maynooth College, Ireland, who, after giving the Latin text in extenso, summed up and said that all and every oath-bound secret society was condemned by the church, and, also, the plenary council at Baltimore had not only confirmed that, but called on the clergy to instruct the people to that effect. What, asks the professor, are the specific marks which denote a society condemned by the Holy See? They are, first, the union of men of every or any sect or religious persnasion and of men indifferent to all religion, as the constitution of Benedict affirms snch associations are highly dangerous to the pnrity of Catholic faith and morals; second, the dark, impenetrable veil of secrecy which is thrown over all that passes at their private meetings; third, the oath by which the bond of secrecy among the members is sealed; fourth, the oath taken by members of the higher orders not to divulge their own secret transactions to members of less initiated grades; fifth, their furious and satanic hatred of the vicar of Christ; sixth, their leagne of secret mnrder; seventh, their conspiracy against all legitimate authority in the State as in the church. These hideons and hellish developments, the sovereign pontiff affirms, were made known to him from the most authentic sonrces of information. By the papal decrees, members of societies bearing these marks incur ipso facto the greater excommunication. But here a question arises: Are other secret societies, though not coming under the greater excommunication, nevertheless condemned by the aforesaid papal constitution? We answer it is plain that any secret society in which any one of the marks enumerated is fonnd comes, at least by implication, virtually under the ban of the papal condemnation. It is equally plain that any secret society whose end, means, etc., are in opposition to any laws of God or of the church, whether coming under the description of the secret societies condemned by the Popes or not, is by the very fact under the ban of the church. There was an idea afloat that the church had no temporal power or divine right over such societies, but that was one of the most powerful errors of modern times, for the very fact that these people wished to work in secret showed that there was something behind which both the church and the State ought to be able to inquire into. No man, he said, had any right to sell his manhood by taking the dreadful oaths enjoined by these societies, and he read two of the Masonic oaths to show how repugnant they were. If their purposes were good, what need for secrecy? The fact was as they advanced in the higher degrees of each order they approached atheism. After quoting from Daniel O'Connell and Lord Beaconsfield and Cardinal Manning to show how they deprecated secret societies. he asked if it could be thought possible, for Rome to forget how innocent blood was shed in that city in 1848 and in Paris in 1851. Then he graphically described the assassination of Count Rossi, which he declared to have been the work of such societies, and said the count was one of the most devoted and broad-minded men who ever lived; yet on the decree of these secret councils he was murdered in cold blood.

QUESTIONS IN MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

A set of men get together and form a lodge, to which no one is admitted who cannot make use of certain grips and signs; and they pretend that there is a Grand Lodge above.

Now the question is:

First.—Are not Christians excluded from this Grand Lodge above, since real Christians cannot be supplied with the grips and signs, and leather aprons necessary for admission?

Second.—Can a Christian minister conscientiously preach the doctrine of a Grand Lodge above?

Third.—Can a Freemason occupy a Christian pulpit without bringing discredit npon the Christian religion?

Fourth.—Did the Saviour or any of the Apostles ever say anything abont a Grand Lodge above?

Fifth.—Since the lodge here below was evidently got up in a grog-shop by a set of drunken, infidel aristocrats, is it at all likely that the Grand Lodge above, as apprehended by Freemasons, is any different in character from the lodge held over a corner saloon?

Sixth.—Is not this lodge imposition too gross to be sustained by any Christian man? Is it not a sin against the Holy Spirit?

Some time ago a sacred concert was given on a Sabbath evening and $100 of the proceeds was given to the Society for the Improvement of the poor. At their first meeting the lady managers decided that it would be incompatible with their principles as Christian women to accept the donation, and therefore returned the money. That same evening one of the ladies told her husband what they had done, and asked his opinion. Turning to his desk he wrote a check for $1,000, and turning to his wife handed her the check, and said, "There is what I think of your action. Hand that to the treasurer of the Society. The beneficiaries of your society must not suffer for your determination to act as become Christian women." Comment is unnecessary.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

Pleasure is a rose near which grows a thorn of evil. It is wisdom's work so carefully to pluck the rose as to avoid the thorn, and let its rich perfume exhale to heaven in gratitude and adoration of him who gave the rose to blow.

THE PRESS.

JOSEPH COOK'S PRELUDE AT HIS LAST LECTURE IN CHICAGO.

It is likely that this great city of Chicago will become the great center of newspapers on this continent. It is true that some of the New York papers are talking of having wires of their own connecting them with all the great centers of news, aud issuing the same matter in every large city in the country simultaneously every morning and evening, and so furnish a paper that would be truly a uational journal. We can telegraph whole pages now as easily as we could telegraph single columns but a few years ago. The Associated Press dispatches already make the great heads of public intelligeuce the same in all the leading journals of the land, North, East, South, and West. Should what was proposed be done, aud whole papers be telegraphed and set up at the same timc at different points, we should all of us in all our large cities read the same paper every morning. It is on account of no soreness of mine iu regard to American jourualism that I have been induced to discuss this vexed aud dangerous [a titter] theme. It was recently said that a man who uttered his mind about any one journal would have all of them to fight. I hope the time will come when a powerful political writer will have more influenee thau a member of the Cabinet.

Whitelaw Reed has said that this time has already come, and what minister of the government ever had the influeuce which Greeley and Bennett and Reid have had. We have had to confess that without the press our civilization might soon bccome barbaric. The three formal powers of our government are thc President, Congress, and the Supreme Court, aud the informal, unofficial governing powers are the press, the platform, the pulpit, and the parlor. Give mc a union of these last four great powers, and I will manage all the rulers of the earth. I sometimes say that the five great powers are not England, France, Germany, Austria, and Russia, but the parlor, politics, the platform, the press, and the police. Give me the parlor and the pulpit, and I will secure the right attitude of the prcss. Give me the parlor, the pulpit, and press, and I will bring politics into line. Give me these four, and the police will take care of itscIf. If I should give a list of the excellencies of American journals I should say, first, that I think our newspapers surpass those of the rest of the earth in being willing to go to any expense to get news. They are, secoudly, better than others in getting news, though I think the Euglish papers are superior to ours in the discussion of views. Next, it must be conceded that there is nothing that even corrupt rings fear so much as an independent press, and this pitiless javelin has often been thrust through these evils. I suppose we owe to the courage, the shrewdness, the omnipresence of the reporters in New York City the overthrow of several rings there, especially the corrupt Tweed government by the New York Times. I might give a long list of the exposures of secret iniquity in this country by reporters. There is nothiug that secret iniquity fears so much as a newspaper. It is a crowu of houor to the sheets who are so feared. I may say further that is one of the high merits of the American press, and peculiar to the journals of our country, that there is a union betwecn it and the church, for the papers of no other country report sermons so much or so fully as do ours. This feature in our papers is, indeed, a wonder to foreign travelers when they take up a Monday morning's paper. I must add that it is to the honor of American papers that they are not all under the control of political parties, but the papers that are not so controlled or liable to be controlled can be counted on the fingers of the hand. The principle of independent journalism, if adopted, would tend to the purificatiou of journalism in this country."

In engraving, as represcnted in our best monthlies, we surpass the rest of the world. But the great glory of our press, after all, is that it reflects the inmost heart of our people. I praise that part of the press which rises above the average popular tastes, and loses, and is willing to lose, subscribers by striking too high. We have papers that are starving because they do this. It is to our discredit that we patronize fourth-rate journals more than we do first-class journals. But our journals are far from being perfect. Great Britain, with less thau 40,000,000 population, maintains more quarterlies and more critical journals than we do with 54,000,000. So much for the good side of American journalism.

And now what have I to say as to my soreness. I mean to say that a hotel which rents its rooms or apartments for infamous purposes ought to be trodden under foot. [Applause.] But I say that any hotel which does that is no more infamous than a newspaper which allows its columns to be filled with infamous advertisements. [Applause.] I do not say that it is any newspaper in Chicago that I refer to. I have been waiting for some newspaper to wear the vest. One journal has made an outcry against me siuce I made remarks to this effect. I have called it the howling dervish. [Laughter.] We are governed by news. Therefore, there can be no injury worse than the poisoning of news. There is punishment for those who poison food. But what do we say when, for partisan purposes or for gain, the news, the very food of the soul, is diluted, poisoued, sometimes manufactured outright, and this by journals high in influence? The partisan newspaper is one of the chief curses of our journalism. Among the faults of the American press I must mention there are fourteen. First, mercenary motives. It is said that the object of a great daily newspaper is to amass fortune for it owners. This is Charles Dudley Warner's confession in his little book on the American newspaper. It is uot to reform evils, unless by doing that we cau fill the coffers of the journal. If so, very well.

I ventnre to say that the majority of American journals are for sale to the highest bidder. If that is treason make the most of it. I am not assailing first-class journals in this remark, but there are multitudes of wretched little sheets that can be bought by any political party. Some time ago, though not now, $20,000 would buy one of the leading papers in New York. I will venture to say that the great majority of uewspaper writers can be bought. They write a thing up or they write it down, as their chiefs direct them. Articles ought not to be published anonymously.

If the writers of uutruthful articles put their names under them, their appearance would take the sting from their writing. Let the savage in ambush stand out. Let us see him in his paint and feathers. The next fault of our papers that I would call attention to is their subservience to party, and this is a notorious fault of our high-class journals. I think even Mr. Greeley's Tribune was sometimes inclined to give up to party what is usually meant for mankind. But, thank heaven, our greatest journals are above this subservience; but the great majority of them are ever willing to be the tools of politicians and speculators. One of the chief reasons why the writing of leading articles is dull work is that the writers are held in restraint by the counting-room of the paper. I read articles in the New York papers that are hollow; as resonant as a drum. You can see that there is nothing earnest iu them. Again, among the faults of American uewspapers are distortiou of news, weak discussion of news, pandering to depraved appetite in uews. The American newspaper does not supply us with news of the highest importance, such as we ought to have every morning and every evening.

In the next place, we do not have any real national journals. Chicago newspapers, New York newspapers, are sectional. We have three great tiers of newspapers—those of San Francisco, New York, and Chicago, and two other smaller tiers between thcse three great ones. Now, what I waut most of all is a national daily. I would have, if I could do it, such a paper issued in every great city in the land. I would have such a journal above paudering to party, above pandering to mediocrity. Such a journal would pay in the end. Such a journal we shall have some time. I do not know where it will be published—very possibly in Chicago. I would have such a journal published simultaneously in Chicago, San Francisco and New York, and have it distributed in all three cities in the same circuit of the sun. A dream, you say! Well the present daily was a dream a hundred years ago. But how shall I speak with sufficient severity of the pandering by papers to depraved tastes. The owners say that it is doue in order to get a widcr circulation. Many an editor does this. It is low and vulgar sensationalism to detail indecentness, and renders a paper unfit to be taken iuto a respectable family. I tell any daily to its face that admits infamous advertisements in its columns that I abhor it, and I hope the whole population will do it also. There are dignified journals—dignified on account of their wealth—that are not fit to be touched with a pair of tongs.

Ou the vexed question of Sunday journalism the speaker argued that cditors, reporters, and printers are men, and need one day in seven. Sunday papers he did not regard as works of necessity or mercy, but classed with a jingling list of trades, euding up with candlestick-maker. Sunday journalism he characterized as an industrial and moral nuisance, a step toward the Parisian Sunday, whieh may undermine republican institutions. Sunday is worth preserving, if only as a day to groom the people. He would devote but an hour a day to reading the papers. He himself has a secretary who goes through the press and absorbs the trash, leaving to him the gems and choice bits. Finally he said: "Let us pay the paper due honor, and let us pay books due honor, and let us pay most honor to papers which are fit to make into books."

FROM THE MINNESOTA AGENT.

NEW RICHLAND, Minn., May 29, 1883.

DEAR EDITOR:—I left home the 18th of the present mouth to atteud the meetiug of the Dodge County Christian Association, and spent abont a week in that county. The meeting was held at Wasioja in the Seminary, the 21st and 22nd, and I believe was a success. I eudeavored to show the conflict existing between the Word of God and the lodge, and judging from the expressions of friends I succeeded. It is evideut that a mau canuot be loyal tp both. The spirit of the lodge is not entirely subjugated iu Wasioja, one conservative brother was made to feel the force of their strongest arguments Monday eveuing. He came back Tuesday morning quite radically inclined. I walked iu the midst of the fire aud came out with not eveu the smell of ———— rotten eggs on my garments. Of course it was the boys, but who was back of the boys?

Professor Paine is the wheel horse of the reform. If the many others associated iu the work would stand abreast with him, Dodge county would soon throw off the lodge yoke and be free.

May the good Lord arouse us all.

ROBERT J. WILLIAMS.

—The Telescope of last week opens the leading editorial thus: "Whoever expects that the oppositiou of the United Brethren in Christ to the systeu of secret societies as organized in your country will cease, is doomed to disappointment."

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

"Beeu somebody round here giving us away," said one Mason to another in a street car. The other, cnrsing our publishing house, replied, "They can't hurt us much because we are so popular."

In Providence, R. I., a Jewish lodge meets Sunday night and closes with a banquet. The same lodge iuitiates clubs of young men at reduced rates.

Boys are frequently impressed with the fitness of things. In oue town they turned a goat into the Good Templars lodge.

An Odd-fellow in Uxbridge, Mass., made his boasts that he turned a lawsuit iu favor of a brother Odd-fellow by refusing to agree with the other jurymeu on the verdict.

Some temperance men in Westerly, R. I., agreed to proceed to the arrest of certain saloon keepers, agaiust whom they had evidence, on a certain evening. Onc of the saloon keepers was a Mason and one of the temperance men was a Mason. The Masonic temperance man notified the Masonic saloon keeper what they were doing. When the traitor was asked by his friends, why he did so, he replied that his Masonic obligation required it.

The last number of the New England American, containing a discussion of Odd-fellowship, produced no small stir in certain quarters and called out many contradictory statements. One lady declared that the creed of the Odd fellows was very, very old, and that they always meant to change it but hadn't got around to it yet! She is a member of the Rebekah degree. The Odd-fellows were evidently not aware that the indictment against them was so strong. One man weut to his lodge and watched the prayers and confessed that it was true they omitted Christ's uame.

Those unfortuuate Odd-fellows, who tried to impeach the facts presented, will doubtless be comforted to know that most of the documents made use of were obtained from the Grand Secretary I. O. O. F. at the temple in Boston, and that the Secretary endorsed them all as reliable and authentic.

Rev. Taylor Church, of Westerly, R. I., an adheriug Freemason, related the following fact as occurring while he was himself Worshipful Master of the lodge. A gentleman was initiated by him into the Entered Apprentice degree. He then sent word to Mr. Church, as Worshipful Master, that he did not like the ceremouy and did not wish to proceed further, and was informed that he could stop there. At the conclusion of the narrative Mr. Church was asked by one who heard his story if that mau was still bound by his oath aud must keep the secrets and obey the summons of the lodge? Mr. Church answered that he was uot bound; he was released from all obligation and could divulge the mode of initiation if he saw fit. If this be a correct version of Masonic law there is certainly oue lawful manner in which outsiders may become possessed of the secrets aad the claim that it is impossible for the secrets to leak out is certainly groundless.

The secret socicty meu in Maine, having been defeated in the courts in their endeavor to get their property exempt from taxatiou worked up their case in the legislature and secured the passage of a bill favorable to their designs. It is evident they packed the legislature if the statement of a correspondent of the Odd-fellows Register can be relied ou. He declares concerning one of the men who led the opposition to their scheme, that if his coustituents had kuown he was going to oppose them he would never have been elected! That is the threat of the representative of a society, which never meddles with politics.

A PRIVATE DEBATE WITH IMPORTANT ADMISSIONS.

WESTERLY, R. I., May 22, 1883.

Last night my lecture was given at Thompsonville, two miles south of here. Among those who went out from here to attend the lecture was Rev. Taylor Church of the Advent church. At the close of the lecture this gentlemen came forward to ask some questions and continued in conversation with me for perhaps half an hour. I did not know who he was, but after asking his name I remembered that some of the Adventists had spoken to me about him and had been hindered in receiving the truth by reason of the denials of this man. It seemed good to me, therefore, to make a note of some parts of our conversation for the help of some of our readers.

The subject of the lecture was, "The Entered Apprentice Degree of Masonry." Mr. Church came forward to ask this question, "What did you mean by saying the candidate was led into the room in a nude condition?"

My answer was, "I said a semi nude condition, by which I meant the condition described, viz., having on only his shirt and a pair of drawers, the left drawer being rolled up to the knee and the left arm and breast bare."

"Well," said he, "I have only to say that in Rhode Island Masonry the candidate is not led in, in a nude condition. Your statement is misleading."

"Let me understand you," I said, "do you affirm that in Rhode Island the candidate is not dressed as I have described? Is not his left foot bare and his right clad in a slipper?"

"Yes."

"Is he not deprived of all his outer garments and dressed in only his shirt and drawers?"

"Well, yes," said he, "but what I said was I thought your statement that he was nude was misleading."

Gentlemen who tarried to hear the conversation remarked to one another after Mr. Church had gone that they never thought he would admit so much as that. But this is only the beginning of his admissions; given, too, in a conversation that was wholly deliberate and unimpassioned. Mr. Church claimed that the expression, "the lion of the tribe of Judah," was an allusion to Christ. Admitting that the expression occurs, I affirmed that the use made of it precluded the possibility of calling it an allusion to Christ. He, however, insisted upon his point and I then asked him, "Do you mean to affirm that Blue Lodge Masonry does recognize Jesus Christ, the Son of God?"

To which he promptly replied, "No, it does not; it would be inconsistent with its universality to recognize Christ."

"Then," I said, "we need not dispute about words, for you admit all I have claimed."

Mr. Church boasted that he had been Worshipful Master and Grand High Priest of the lodge.

The conversation next turned upon the Masonic obligations and penalties and in answer to my inquiry as to the fact of death penalties being attached to the oaths, he framed, with evident care the following answer: "I have taken eight obligations and I solemnly affirm that there is nothing in any one of them to compel me to injure my brother Mason."

"My friend," said I, "I am too well versed in Masonic diplomacy to take your answer as a denial of the fact that the oaths have death penalties attached. The simple question is, 'Does the Entered Apprentice swear under no less penalty than that of having his throat cut across, his tongue torn out by the roots and buried in the rough sands of the sea?'"

"Well," said he, "there may be something like that, but it doesn't mean that that penalty will be executed."

"That is, you understand that the lodge does not intend to execute the penalty?"

"Yes," said he, "that is what I mean."

"Then allow me to say that this crime seems, if possible, worse than the other. By your own admission you, as Master of the lodge, have been solemnly swearing young men to do something which you never intended them to do! How long will it take, by this process, to raise up a generation of liars, trained in the art of solemnly promising what they do not intend to perform?"

In some rambling conversation Mr. Church put forth a claim which many Masons have made to me before, and which seems to me to have an important psychical bearing on this subject. He affirmed that I was not in the spirit of Masonry; if I were, things would look altogether different to me. If I were to join a lodge and enter zealously into its rites and ceremonies they would exert an influence over me that would soon dispel my objections. Ministers have told me that it did exert such an influence on themselves and have asked me to account for it. This would seem to demonstrate clearly that there is a spirit-influence, or mesmeric power, in the practice of these rites which leads captive the will of the devotee. Now, if we try this spirit by the test given by the Apostle John, we shall conclude that since the spirit does not confess Christ, it is not of God.

One more point was developed clearly which, as I told Mr. Church, showed him to be under so powerful a delusion and infatuation that it utterly vitiated his judgment. Let me try to reproduce this part of the conversation as accurately as possible.

"I suppose you know the object of Masonry," said he.

I answered, "I do not know whether I do or not; it is slippery in its claims; one says it is for one thing and another stoutly denies that and affirms it is for something else."

"Well," said he "you must have noticed that the idea of searching for light is a prominent feature."

"Yes."

"Well now, I verily believe," said he, "if we could banish the writings of Mackey, Webb, Rebold, Sickles and all others, and set a man to the task of studying out for himself Masonic symbolism, it would make a Christian of him."

While I was eyeing him in silent amazement, he continued, "I don't know but I should modify that by saying that here in this Christian land he would become a Christian!"

"Ah yes," I said, "I catch your idea. You think that while he is vainly searching for light in the lodge he will become disappointed and look outside for it, and thus in spite of Masonry, which rejects Christ he may after all find him elsewhere."

He confessed that this was about the idea he had. I told him, however, that the chances were many to one against his ever finding Christ. The lodge sets him to searching for light everywhere except in the right place and the majority come to the conclusion, after a vain search, that there is no light anywhere and thus settle down into the darkness of confirmed deism.

Mr. Church is somewhat versed in Masonic books, is a man of fair intelligence and smooth address, and has deterred some Adventists from arriving at the facts by seeming, in an oily and plausible manner, to deny what after all he only evades. It is with the hope that this may fall under the notice of some of these brethren that this sketch is given. I challenged him to a public discussion but he stoutly refused.

RHODE ISLAND LARGE ENOUGH FOR REFORM WORK.

WORCESTER, Mass., May 28, 1883.

The work at Westerly, R. I., was very successful. After speaking Sunday afternoon at Armory Hall, as reported last week, we went Monday evening to Thompsonville, a country place with a small church, near Westerly; Tuesday evening the Advent chapal was opened for a lecture in Westerly and a fair number of people were present although the day and evening had witnessed the hardest rain of the season. Wednesday evening the lecture was given in Armory Hall by request of leading citizens of the place who bore the expense for hall rent and printing. The audience was larger than on Sunday and included many more of the best citizens. The lecture was nearly two hours in length and it appeared that at least two-thirds of the audience were friendly to the movement, judging from the frequency and heartiness of applause and from the number who tarried after the lecture for conversation. There were some of the most hopeful symptoms at this place that I have seen anywhere. The reform became a topic of general discussion and men were bolder in their denunciatious of the secret orders than in many other places. Bro. C. T. Melville, who preaches at Thompsonville, has done noble service. Rev. J. W. Morton, pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist church, sat on the platform at each lecture and gave the work his unqualified endorsement and the benefit of his influence. His course is all the more manly and courageous from the fact that there are many secretists in the church of which he is pastor. He is a clear-headed, conscientious minister, and is not likely to let so important a matter rest till the truth triumphs. The wealthiest men of the place are Quakers, who own the bank and who also own (and read) "Finney on Masonry." Some of these Quakers came forward to the platform and pronounced their blessing upon the work. Bro. Melville, together with such brethren as Mr. Stillman and Mr. Champlin, do not propose to abate their labors but have already secured my agreement, (D. V.), to return again and speak there and in adjoining towns.

Thursday night the lecture was at Ninatic, R. I. The church was small but literally packed, and people outside also looking in. A druggist of the town attempted to make capital for the lodge but only succeeded in bringing confusion upon himself to the great amusement of the audience. His friends said he would have done better to have kept still.

The letters from brother O. C. Bailey are full of interesting items gathered in his work. He lectured at Hynesburg and then went to West Halifax, where he had been invited by some Odd-fellows to lecture. He found they had kept their agreement and provided a place for the lecture. There was a large audience present. After giving some of the secrets of Odd-fellowship he turned suddenly and unexpectedly to the Odd-fellow who first invited him to speak, and asked him if what he had stated was true. He nodded his head and said, "Yes, sir"! On recovering his senses he tried to amend his answer but it was too late. The audience cheered and the speaker tendered him his thanks.

At the close of the lecture a middle-aged man came forward and asked him if he would lecture in Jacksonville; so he remained over the Sabbath, preaching at Reed's Hollow and Greenville and lecturing at Jacksonville Monday evening, where he found warm friends of the cause. The last news from him was a card from Montpelier whither he went to complete the arrangements for the convention. He had asked for a reduction of rates on the railroads for the convention with a fair prospect of success and was also hoping to give a lecture, this week, north of Montpelier. Several of the Vermont papers have given notice of the convention. E. D. BAILEY.

LITERARY.

"Echoes from Distant Footfalls," is the latest work of Rev. John Boyes, M. A., of Louth, England, whose timely and welcome contributions have enriched the columns of the Cynosure for two or three years past. It is a condensed but entertaining review of the scientific and Biblical theories of creation, especially designed to place before the reader the arguments for the origin and unity of the race. The Darwinian conjectures of development without an intelligent Creator are answered, and the proofs, from language, physical resemblance and the relics of ancient ages, that the race is one and the Mosaic account the most rational and consistent with all the facts that science is able to discover. The inquiries of our best scholars become thus invested with a new interest, since the more accurate and complete are they, the more do they prove the Bible history true. This is wonderfully developed in the latest studies of Egyptian scholars, who are becoming satisfied that the earliest religion of that country was mono-theistic and of such a character in respect to Jehovah as would be likely to prevail among the early descendants of Noah We note one error, arising from misinformation, respecting the aversion of American women to having families, and that our increase of population is due to immigration and not to national increase. Such a mistake would quite likely occur from the observations of travelers who are familiar only with our large cities; but in our vast country population the unnatural and wicked custom referred to does not, we believe, largely prevail. We should be glad if some enterprising American publisher would enter into an arrangement with the author to reprint this book on this side the ocean.

The Century for June publishes a noteworthy article on the present conflicting relations of England and Ireland from Prof. James Bryce, member of parliament. He discusses these relations with much fairness and an undeniable familiarity with facts. Irish idiosyncrasy and English pride and stubbornness are no unimportant factors in the case. Another article which will be read is by Wm. S. Tomlins, our popular musical director, on the cultivation of children's voices and singing in the public schools. Mr. Tomlins' views are endorsed by so high an authority as Theodore Thomas. Illustrated articles are "Living English Sculptors," "The Great South Gate," and the Franciscan missions in California. A discussion of the jury question is valuable. Published by the Century Co., New York.

About forty copies of Mr. Bosworth Smith's Life of Lord Lawrence have been recently purchased by the Navy Department for its ship's libraries. Since the time of Trevelyan's Macaulay no more interesting or valuable biography has been produced, and the bureau of navigation shows sound sense in putting this book into the hands of its officers and men.

Rev. Dr. John H. McIlvain, foremerly of Princeton College, has written a work entitled The Wisdom of Holy Scriptures, which will be published at once by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons. His book, though thoroughly original, is yet soundly orthodox and contains the best fruits of the author's studies for a life time.

Kansas, its Resources and Capabilities is a pamphlet issued by the Kansas State Board of Agriculture in the English, German, Swedish and Danish languages for gratuitous distribution. It is a well-prepared and attractive document with maps and illustrations giving such general information about lands, churches, schools, etc., as is always acceptable to settlers. Lodge statistics, which the compilers of such documents often think so necessary, are very wisely left out. The pamphlet will be sent on applying to the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, Topeka.

The Pictorial Associated Press which is established for the purpose of furnishing portraits and brief biographies of prominent characters has sent out a portion of their work in pamphlet form, and will continue to issue a part month by month, the subscription price being $2.50 per year.

We have received from Professor Claudio Jannet, of the Catholic University of Paris, a masterpiece of industry, research and erudition, Les Societe, Secretes et la Societe, ou Philosophie de l' Histoire Contemporaine. The title explains the character of the work, which has already passed through six editions, and is universally recognized in Europe as the great authority on modern secret societies. Its authors are Father Deschamps S. J., and Professor Jannet, who brings it down to the actual events of the hour, even the arrest and betrayal of the wretched "Invincibles" hung yesterday. No one who wishes to be familiar with the inner history of political events in Europe can consider his library a working one, unless it is enriched with this necessary work.—Catholic Review.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BAD SEWERAGE.

We knew a house that had a well of pure living water. In course of time an addition was built on to it for a kitchen, which covered the well; and as the well was no longer needed, water being brought in by pipes, the waste waters and slops of the house were poured into the well through a trap-door. This was a very inconsiderate act for an enlightened Christian people to do—to convert a well of pure water into a cess-pool.

Day and night that foul cess-pool breathed up its poisonous odors into the new kitchen and into the house, and in consequence the house came to receive a bad name from the number of fatal fever cases that happened in it. Yet no one suspected the cause until several deaths had taken place, when the source of the evil was discovered and the well filled up.

So in New England several additions have been made to the Old Congregational church, and some of these have been extended out over the spiritual well of living waters. But that well has now become a cess-pool of Freemasonry, which is constantly breathing up foul moral odors into the church, and not one of the innocent church members ever suspects it! The atmosphere of the church is being tainted with Masonic poison and death, and still our decorous church-goers never dream of overhauling and examining into the sewerage that underlies their religion.

Oh, it is a sad spectacle to see church members going to the house of the Lord, to partake of the bread of life from the hands of a Freemason, who is pouring the foul waters of the lodge into the living wells of truth!

KITCHEN GARDNER.

THE PREACHING AND PRACTICE OF HOLINESS.

Bro. Isaiah Reid of Nevada, Iowa, in his paper, "The Highway," of Feb. 24th, makes complaint against certain reformers who insist that the holiness teachers shall espouse their special reforms, and declares that their work is to teach holiness and leave the application of its principles to every man's conscience. He says: "Devotion of time and energy to these so-called reforms seems to be an attempt in the wrong direction, a good thing urged from an impracticable standpoint. God's order is first to get the man's heart right with him. When this is done the old, outer life is sloughed off by the force of the new life inside, like old bark from a live hickory tree."

On this I remark: First, that Bro. Reid utterly discards his own theory. If he were to publish a religious paper which discussed general principles only, and never insisted on their application, it would be a singular paper indeed. No man ever did, or ever could preach such a religion without becoming a laughing stock to bad men and devils. The first article in the above mentioned paper is a remonstrance against the sins of some who profess holiness. All through this and every other number he continually applies his principles to specific sins. The only exception is when the sin is popular and powerful. When serpent-like, it has thrust itself into the house of the Lord, and entwines itself around his altar; when it cries as did the devils of old, "Let us alone;" "What have we to do with thee?" it is then that Bro. Reid would have us keep quiet, and trust to the expulsive power of Gospel grace.

Second, the theory itself is utterly unreasonable and unscriptural.

Confucious taught abstract moral purity. The doctrines of Buddha are replete with holy admonitions, but the practical result is abominable heathenism. Sixty years ago the Gospel was preached and holiness insisted on as clearly and fully as to-day, and yet holy men continued to use intoxicating drinks until their attention was called to the practice as a sin. Forty years ago it was in order for holy men to hold slaves. The great mass of the professed Christians were on the side of the oppressor. Judgment was turned away backward. It was "he that departed from evil" who was declared unholy and profane. It was only by the faithful preaching of God's command to "undo the heavy burdens; let the oppressed go free;" and "break every yoke," that the churches were brought to partial repentance.

Third. From first to last the Scriptures teach just the opposite of the editor of the "Highway." The Lord said to Isaiah, "Cry aloud and spare not." "Show my people their trangressions, and the house of Jacob their sins" (Isa. 58: 1), and the whole chapter is an enumeration of the specific sins of those who professed to be a holy people. So all through the Prophets, the Evangelists, and the Epistles. Everywhere and always the holy men of old were rebukers of specific sins. Oh, that our modern Isaiah had the same holy boldness!

Fourth. There is great need of just such preaching today, and especially here in Washington. One of the leading holiness writers in this same number of the Highway makes himself disgusting to his brethren by the use of tobacco. Here in this city there are preachers of holiness who profess absolute heart purity, that advertise their Freemasonry in religious assemblies, and flaunt it in the face of their brethren with an impudence that is unspeakable. When any seeks after real holiness, repents of this iniquity (as some have done) and humbly makes his confession, he is brow-beaten, insulted, and, if possible, frightened into silence. "They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly" (Amos 5: 10).

Fifth. Silence, in reference to prevalent and popular sins, is pratical complicity with them. This is especially true of those who have been involved in and have full knowledge of such iniquities. God required that the sin of secret and profane oaths should not only be confessed but exposed. Concealment is a sin. "If a soul sin, and hear the voice of swearing, and is a witness, whether he hath seen or known of it, if he do not utter it then he shall bear his iniquity" (Lev. 5: 1, also vers. 4–13). I feel bound in Christian fidelity to rebuke this brother for this sin. He has, I believe, been in the lodge, has taken and heard its profane oaths, and joined in its unholy rites. He does not expose or rebuke its iniquities. He does not like to have others do so. He once intimated to me that this was the work of the devil. He doubtless thinks that his lodge covenant is binding. But hear the word of the Lord, "Because ye have said we have made a covenant with death, and with hell we are at agreement, when the overflowing scourge shall pass through it shall not come nigh us, for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves. . . . And the hail shall sweep away your refuge of lies and the waters shall overflow your hiding place" (Isa. 28: 15–19).

COMMANDMENTS MASONICALLY REVISED.

DELAVAN, Ill.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The following is intended to show at a glance how completely the obligations and teachings of Masonry antagonize the Christian religion at every point.

1. "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me," except thou art a Freemason; then a broader latitude is allowed. The Mason may worship any god that suits his fancy.

2. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." But the Mason may swear in the name of his god the most profane oaths, binding himself under the most barbarous oaths, and hereby the statute, "Swear not at all," is repealed.

3. "Honor thy father and thy mother," unless thou art a Mason, then thou mayest do the lowest, meanest trick the devil has ever invented, to save the craft from exposure by taking vengeance on its exposers.

4. "Thou shalt not kill," unless thou art a Mason, and some one has dared to expose its secrets, then cut his throat, tear out his heart, cut the body in two, smite off his skull, and all is well; provided no cowan or other profane person shall find it out.

5. "Thou shalt not steal," unless some one is about to expose Masonry then thou mayest steal his manuscript, or his person, so that the noble order be not exposed.

6. "Thou shalt not bear false witness," unless a brother Mason is involved in difficulty, then bear such testimony as will "extricate him from the just penalty of violated law.

7. "Thou shalt not commit adultery"—with a brother Masons wife, mother, sister, or daughter, knowing them to be such," otherwise all women are public property and there is no restraint on your carnal passions.

8. "Love thy neighbor as thy self," also, "love your enemy," "love worketh no ill." But, if he has offended Masons in some peculiar way, then thou mayest defame his character, ruin his business by lying, do what you can to make him a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth.

9. Christ says, "I am the way the truth and life, and he that climbeth up some other way is a thief and a robber." But, says Masonry, this is too sectarian and another way of salvation is provided.

10. "Thou shall not covet thy neighbor's house," but if he has violated the obligation of the Knights of the Red Cross, then his house must be torn down and "some of its timbers set up, and he hanged thereon;" leaving the wife a homeless widow and the children orphans! O God, my heart sickens, I am heartily ashamed that I was ever a Mason, but now help me to warn others lest they come into this sink of iniquity. D. VAN DEVENTER.

PENSIONS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—If I am rightly informed the officers and soldiers, sailors and marines of the United States formerly never used to vote, They followed the principle that a man under the orders of a government ought not to vote in matters where he might and must be called on to obey that government.

If this principle is correct, ought not pensioners and retired officers also to come under this operation? If parties buy men's votes with pensions, is not the government endangered thereby? An army that is made subject to a party, or to a secret association, can hardly render faithful and loyal service to the governmeut. If lump sums are paid instead of peusions the principle to which we allude would not apply. Men who live on the bounty of the government, are hardly in a condition to cast a disinterested, impartial vote. Let us examine into this matter. Are men who serve the country, or some party, in the army or navy, any more worthy of pensions than the men and women who belong to our large standing army of school-teachers? CITIZEN.

HOW HE GOT HIS LICENSE.

PHILLIPSBURG, N. J.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am very much pleased with the few copies of the Cynosure I have received, aud may God speed the cause. I shall do all I can to give your paper a circulation in our town, although we have a hotbed of secret societies here. My forefathers were obliged to quit the mother country on account of their religious opinions, and came to this country in 1682 with William Penn, and we have a family record over 200 years back. I am opposed to secret societies because they are undermining the principles of our government, freedom of opinion, liberty of the press, and freedom of speech. We have had a case of this kind in our town. Last spring at our town election the temperance ticket had a trial of its strength and elected the mayor and six councilmen, which made it a tie in the council, and all attempt to get a license failed until a man by the name of Davis was determined to have one. Now this Davis is a Mason and he applied to one of the brother Masons, a dispatcher on the Morris and Essex rail road, saying that he wished a license. Now one of these temperance councilmen was employed under this dispatcher and he wished him to vote thus and so or suffer the consequence. and by this means his brother Mason received his license.

Yours Truly, CHARLES CARPENTER COOK.

THE WEED REVELATION.

On of the papers quotes an M. E. minister as saying: "Thurlow Weed was a dishonest man, or he would have given the world his revelations before his death." Some of our Anti-masonic friends have also censured Mr. Weed for not publishing the Whitney confessions sooner. Two facts seem to be ignored, or not to be known. In the first place, Mr. Weed did publish the Whitney statement, at least eight years ago. He gave a full and circumstantial account of it in the N. Y. Herald under date of August 6, 1875. How much sooner, and in what other ways it was given to the public, I do not know; but this certainly was not the proper way to keep it from the public, if concealment had been his object. In the second place, he informs us that the express condition on which Whitney confided to him the facts, was that he (Weed) should make no disclosures until after his (Whitney's) death. Weed had a right to make a pledge to this effect. He could not have got the confession without it. Having made it, he was not the man to violate his word. It was not a pledge made unlawfully, like the Masonic oath, and made under such conditions as justified him in breaking it. Yet Masons curse seceders for violating barbarous and extra-judicial oaths, while they censure Weed for not violating a pledge, the keeping of which harmed no one, and was required by every sentiment of truth and honor.

OBITUARY.

Died in Bedford township, Monroe Co., Michigan, THEOPHILUS OSGOOD, aged seventy-four years, eleven months and eight days. He was born in Fort Ann, New York, April 27th, 1808. When eight years old his father's family moved to western New York, where, in 1829, he was united in matrimony with Miss Rosiana A. Brightman. In 1833 he moved to Michigan, a pioneer in the then "Far West," where by industry, frugality and the blessing of God, he saw the barren wilderness converted into fertile fields, his rustic cabin into a mansion of stone, and the fireside was blessed with the addition of three sons and seven daughters. At the first township meeting held in Bedford township, he was elected to the office of clerk, and in years following he held the office of supervisor, treasurer, and justice of the peace, at various times. He united with the Free Will Baptist church May 4th, 1844, was elected its clerk, which position he held for twenty-seven consecutive years, and remained a member until death.

When the sin of Americau slavery cursed the land he was bold to speak against it, and the poor colored man, flying from servitude, has often been warmed by his fire, refreshed at his table, aided by his means, and sent on his way rejoicing. He often spoke of Morgau's death, recollected well the excitement caused by it. He was a great lover of the Cynosure, harmonizing with its position on the subject of secret societies, and believed in the doctrine of holiness as taught in the Bible. He died trusting in the Lord. About an hour before his death he was heard to praise God that it was well with him. His funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. Olmsted of the Free Methodist church at his late residence, and although the day was rainy and the roads muddy, a large concourse of neighbors and friends joined in paying to him their last tribute of respect.

THOS. P. HITCHCOCK.

Died at his residence in Roseburg, Oregon, April 24, 1883, ALEXANDER B. GILLILAND, aged 68 years. Deceased was born in Brown county, Ohio, emigrated to Illinois in 1846, thence to Oregon in 1853. He was united in marriage with Miss Mary Willis in the year of 1846, and together they traveled the journey of his subsequent life; and now the sorrowing mother and five children remain, while three children are gone before. Father Gilliland possessed a large share of moral courage, coupled with that most valuable of all human characteristics—honesty. Plain, straightforward, open-handed, unvarnished honesty. Having moral courage and honesty, it is not surprising that his voice was heard and his influence felt in opposition to evil. Especially what he believed to be the great and crying sins of the age in which he lived, such as slavery, secret societies, rum, Sabbath-breaking, profanity, disloyalty to evil government, aud to other rightful authority. He was a reader of the Cynosure, and a friend of the reforms advocated therein. In early life he embraced the Christian religion aud united with the Congregational church, brought his church letter to Oregon, but finding no organization of that church here in the vicinity where he resided, he never united with any other. But we think his daily walk and conversation was such as became one professing godliness, and have reason to hope that he maintained his Christian integrity to the end. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2: 10.

The work one of love to Christ. Matt. 25: 31-46.

"And there came thither certain Jews." With rare exceptions, the Jews stirred up every persecution suffered by Paul. The stubborn jealousy of the race felt that in Paul they had to fear one whose life's work was the breaking down the wall of partition which separated the Hebrew race from the rest of the world. The arrival of these enemies of Paul was no accidental circumstance; the news of the success of the apostles in Lystra had reached Iconium and Antioch in Pisidia, and they came to the scene of his successes to thwart him, and, if possible, to compass his destruction.—Schaff.

"Who persuaded the people." It is not so difficult to persuade some people of their dangers from the Gospel. Its temperance, its honesty, its demand on liberality "will ruin their business;" its morality "will destroy their pleasures." The Gospel does make trouble with bad men who will not repent.—Peloubet.

"Having stoned Paul." Once he stoned another, and once he was stoned himself. What a crowd of memories must have rushed up when he felt his spirit swooning away under the stone shower! This would seem the echo of his own dread act. Stephen's heroic death must have left its mark deep on the heart of the converted Paul.—Arnot.

"The disciples stood round about him." Not to bury him, but as would naturally be the case, in mournful anxiety and regret.—Alford. These disciples show that Paul's work in Lystra had not been in vain. We, who, from scattered allusions, can see that it was here and now that St. Paul first met with the gentlest and dearest of all his converts, may dwell with pleasure on the thought that Timotheus stood weeping in that group of disciples who surrounded the bleeding missionary, whose hearts glowed with amazement and thankfulness when they saw him recover, who perhaps helped to convey him secretly to his mother's house, and there, it may be, not only bound his wounds, but also read to him in the dark and suffering hours some of the precious words of those scriptures in which from a child he had been trained.—Farrar.

"He rose up." That one stoned and left for dead by a savage mob should revive and go about as if nothing had befallen him, must have been a still more striking evidence of the mighty power of God present with these teachers than what the people had seen before in the restoration of the cripple.—Cambridge Bible.

"Confirming the souls." Every church should use all means possible in training and confirming its young converts. Thay should be trained in all the work and worship of the church. They should be taught to speak and pray. They should be instructed in the word of God, and in the best ways of studying it. They should be interested in the home and foreign missionary work. They should be trained in giving, in helping the poor, in inviting others to church and Sabbath school, and in every good word and work. We learn to work by working.—Peloubet.

"Exhorting them to continue in the faith." Not merely in the belief that Jesus is the Messiah, though this belief might be shaken by his failure to protect them from persecution, but in the life of faith, that is, in that life whose present strength and future hope is derived from a personal trust in a personal Savior (comp. 1 Cor. 16: 13; 2 Cor. 13. 5; Gal. 3: 24-26; Col. 1: 23).—Abbott.

"And that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." Tribulation is derived from the Latin "tribulum," which was the thrashing instrument or roller whereby the Roman husbandman separated the corn from the husks. "Tribulation" is the act of this separation, and hence is used for sorrow and adversity, the appointed means for the separating in men of their chaff from their wheat, of whatever in them was light and trivial and poor, from the solid and the true. Therefore, these sorrows are called tribulations, "thrashing," i. e., of the inner spiritual man, without which there could be no fitting him for the heavenly garner.—Trench's Study of Words, p. 15.

"When they had ordained them elders." The word here rendered ordained is etymologically and in classic Greek to choose by a show of hands, a customary method of election in the Grecian public assemblies. One view imputes to this word the etymological and classical meaning of an election by a show of hands, and understands that the elders were thus elected by vote of the church members, as were the deacons in chapter 6: 5, and their choice was then ratified by the action of the apostles, who solemnly set apart the elders to their office, as Paul and Barnabas had been set apart by special religious services for their missionary work (chap. 13: 3). This apparently is Alford's view: "The apostles ordained the presbyters whom the churches elected."—Abbott.

"The work which they fulfilled." The exact time during which the apostles had been absent is uncertain; we have, however, two definite points of time to assist us in determining the length of time taken up in the first missionary journey. Paul returned from Jerusalem to Antioch after having carried the alms from the Antioch Christians to the poor Jerusalem saints (see chap. 11: 29, 30; 12: 25), A.D. 44. In A.D. 51 (A.D. 50, according to Conybeare), Paul and Barnabas went up again to Jerusalem from the Antioch church to confer with the elder apostles on the matter of the circumcision of the Gentile converts (chap. 15: 2). Six years, then, were spent in Antioch and on the first missionary journey: out of those six years the most likely computation seems to be that which allows three or four years for the journey.

"Opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles," i. e. had made faith the ground of admission to his kingdom. It was now no longer through circumcision that men should enter in and be known as God's people, but the Gospel privileges were offered to every one that believed—Cambridge Bible.

It is of the utmost importance to interest the children and youth in the great missionary work of the churches, both home and foreign. (1) Make them feel that the missionaries and their work belong to them; (2) teach them to give for the work; (3) let them take some part in the missionary concerts; (4) interest them in books and magazines about missions; (5) take them to the great missionary meetings; (6) train them in doing missionary work at home; (7) make them feel that it is the noblest work to which God can call them; (8) let them see the marvellous progress of missions in the last seventy years. The Bible translated into 226 languages; 2,500 missionaries, and 18,500 native assistants preaching the Gospel. About $6,000,000 a year given by English and American Christians for foreign missions. Already more than 1,650,000 native Christians. The leaven of the Gospel pervading almost every nation, and silently working marvellous changes, socially, morally, and politically.—Peloubet.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

On what occasion in New Testament history is it shown that the Jews persuaded the multitudes to do great evil? How mnay times does Paul say that he was stoned? What did the great apostle to the Jews testify of the necessity and the value of persecution? What did Jesus say about the treatment of his apostles in comparison with that which he himself received? When first does it seem to have entered the disciples' heads that the gospel was for Gentiles as well as Jews?

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.—No. 9.

WHEREIN MODERN SECRET SOCIETIES RESEMBLE EZEKIEL'S.

1. The idolatrous rites seen by Ezekiel differed from the worship of the true God in being secret.

2. In this respect, however, they resembled the modern lodge.

3. The priests in the ancient mysteries pretended to teach secrets of great importance.

4. Masonry also pretends to do the same. All secret societies claim to confer important benefits and teach valuable moral lessons.

5. None of the philosophers of Greece ascribed their wisdom to being initiated into these mysteries. No great or wise man of modern times has left it on record that he became such through the teachings of Masonry, or any other secret society.

6. Masonic precepts may have a moral and religious sound but as we have shown in a previous lesson it is a false morality and a Christless religion.

7. Ministers and church members are frequently Masons. Masonic funerals are usually in a church. It mixes heathen and Christian rites together.

8. The Masonic lodge filled with emblems of ancient sun-worship are "chambers of imagery."

9. Some authors say that the Jews made an image which they laid out on a bed of lettuce as if dead and then lamented over it, the ceremony being always in the dead of night. When they had lamented long enough a candle was brought into the room to signify the return of the sun.—Master's Carpet.

10. This is similar to the Masonic tragedy of Hiram Abiff, who is supposed to be murdered. His dead body is then sought for with pretended lamentations. See Masonry Illustrated.

11. The rite of circumambulation, i. e., the leading of the candidates three times around the lodge in the direction of the sun is precisely what those five and twenty men were doing. Masons turn their faces to the East in other ways. They station their three principal officers, the Worshipful Master and Junior and Senior Warden in the East, South and West respectively. The one in the East represents the sun at its rising, the one in the South the sun at its meridian, and the one in the West the sun at its setting.

12. Men who are zealous for the lodge are not apt to care much for the services of God's house, and if one interferes with the other it is always the church they give up first.

13. If you ever attended a Masonic funeral you may have noticed that each member carried a sprig of evergreen which he threw into the grave. In all the heathen mysteries there was a sacred plant peculiar to each. With the Egyptians it was the lotus, with the Greeks the myrtle, with the ancient British the mistletoe, and with modern Freemasons the acacia.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Ezekiel's secret society resembled modern secret societies.

1. In being secret.
2. In many of their rites and ceremonies.
3. In being a false worship.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I spake openly to the world....and in secret have I said nothing. John 18:20.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—The example of Christ forbids secret societies.

QUESTIONS.

What is the subject of this lesson? Golden Text? Central Truth?

1. How did the idolatrous rites seen by Ezekiel differ from the worship of the true God?
2. How did they resemble the modern lodge?
3. What did the priests in the ancient mysteries pretend to teach?
4. What do all secret societies claim to do?
5. Did either ancient or modern secret societies really do this?
6. Is there anything good in Freemasonry?
7. How does Ezekiel's seeing them in the temple resemble Masonic practices?
8. What do the "chambers of imagery" resemble?
9. How was Tammuz worshiped?
10. What is similar in Masonry?
11. Ezekiel saw five and twenty men stand with their faces toward the East:—what is there in Freemasonry like this?
12. What in their standing with their backs to the temple?
13. What in the branch of tamarisk which they held to their nose?
14. Repeat the practical truths?

LESSON STORY.

In the middle ages working masons formed unions very much like the trade unions of to-day. At first only masons who actually worked at their trade were admitted, but these "guilds" or "lodges" as they grew more numerous and powerful wished to add to their numbers and wealth. So they began to take in others, and even members of the nobility. Many of these latter were very profligate men, but they were more influential than the common workmen, and in time grew to rule the lodge.

Being already corrupt, admitting such members corrupted them yet more. When Charles I. was beheaded in 1649 they began to plot to bring back a monarchy again. They preferred being ruled by a being however weak and wicked, to a free government by the people. By their secret plottings they finally overthrew the English commonwealth, so Rebold tells us and restored Charles II. But the Stuarts, who were papists were finally driven out and Protestantism established. The lodge died out in consequence and in 1717 there were only four left in the South of England. These met together on June 22 of that year at the Apple Tree tavern, Covent Garden, London, and formed the first Grand Lodge, from which all the lodges of the present day have originated.

In our own country Masonry protected slavery. It is now protecting the rum trade and various other great abuses. It hates the principles of our Puritan forefathers, and if allowed to go on unchecked will destroy all pure religion and true freedom.

LESSON HYMN.

One offer of salvation,
To all the world make known;

A man who will stab at another man's reputation by insinuation or innuendo is far worse than a thief. Goods may be replaced, but character once lost is all but irremediable, and, as a great writer once said, "One word is sometimes enough to ruin a man."—Zion's Watchman.

The wise man changes his mind, the ignorant man will not. The former will acknowledge his error and correct it, but the pertinacity with which the latter adheres to his opinions always bears a just proportion to his ignorance.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1883.

MR. T. F. DOLAN, of the Washington Sword, gives the true exposition of the lodge row at the Ford funeral. It was a repetition of Acts 16: 16. Mr. Dolan is a converted Romanist, and has an original mind. And the Catholics receive Bible teachings concerning spirits more implicitly than Protestants. Burton C. Cook, Solicitor General of the Chicago and Northwestern railway has a habitual saying: "I know that MEN do not govern this world."

STRONG ENDORSEMENT.—"The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State legislatures should be withdrawn."—American Platform, Art. 4.

"Incorporation is a privilege granted to associations on the ground of public utility. It follows logically that it is an abuse and a fiction to incorporate a secret society of any kind."—North American Review, June.

THE BATAVIA PAMPHLET.—Several hundreds remain unsold. They contain pictures of the Morgan monument, of Morgan and of Thurlow Weed. The speech on Christian Politics in that pamphlet was asked for, paid for and complimented by the North American Review. It would have appeared in that Review, if any Mason could have been got to answer it.

"AND HE WAS SPEECHLESS."—Mormons defend polygamy in the North American Review. Ingersoll defends blasphemy and atheism. Free-love, dynamite, poisoning and general assassination find their defenders. Freemasonry finds none though tempted by the columns of the "Mother of American Reviews!" Claudio Jannet, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Paris, in a recent work says: "Freemasonry alone, of all organizations, has obtained the singular privilege of spreading itself without being questioned by the public on which it lives." This "singular" policy is the same with that of brigands, harlots and thieves.

DECATUR, MICHIGAN.—The editor of this paper preached at the Presbyterian church by invitation of Prof. Upton, on Sabbath last. Though the day was rainy the congregations were good and the attention excellent. In the evening the discourse was directly against the lodge, the first given in that pulpit. Prof. Upton said at the close, "I have been shot and have fallen on a battlefield, as was supposed, to die. But I believe it requires more courage to speak as you have done to-night than to face the guns on that field." He says he had made up his mind to spend a hundred dollars in our next Presidential canvass; and though he would have preferred the original nominations, he should go strong for Gen. Pomeroy. The Professor removes soon to the Upper Elkhorn in Nebraska, to his cattle-raising ranch. His coming will be hailed by our friends in that interesting State. We hope they will send him to Congress. Dr. Baker, the leading physician of Decatur, is an estimable gentleman and popular physician. He relies, in his profession, on his merits and not on the lodge. The leading officers of the Presbyterian church, stand with him and his family separate and clear from the lodge; and their combined influence secured a candid and respectful hearing for our cause. Rev. Mr. Abrams of the Free Methodist church was with us in the pulpit, and we have seldom spent a more pleasant and profitable Sabbath.

THE WITHDRAWAL.

THE FACT AND THE MODE.

We are receiving, on all sides, warm endorsement and approval of the proposed change in our Federal nominations. Still, there are some most able and estimable friends of the reform, who demur, some to the fact, and some to the mode.

The advantages of the change are these:

1st. It frees our organ from the imputation of advocating the election of its editor as President of the United States. The retiring of Mr. Greeley from the editorship of the New York Tribune, which he had started and edited, that it might support him for the Presidency, was endured but not popular.

2nd. As Presidential candidate, I was "a prophet in his own house." Matt. 13: 57. And though my "house" had endured penury, proscription and persecution, the envious and malicious, when the battle waxes hot, would have suggested and plausibly, that those of us who embarked in this cause "with the loss of all things," were seeking self-promotion. The cause needed a leader, outside (if one could be found) of the three hundred of us, who stood against foes whose "arrows darkened the heavens." And yet we needed a leader who, as Charles Francis Adams said of himself, "was a rather earlier Anti-mason than we." Such a leader God has lent us in GEN. POMEROY.

3rd. But the grand reason for change was and is, the plain, obvious fact, that, though Mr. Conant and myself were accepted, and he is a gentleman every way fitted to fill the office of Vice President; yet no one had the least hope of our election. Whereas, with Gen. Pomeroy of Kansas, and Hon. Frederick Douglass of Washington, or ex-Senator Bruce of Mississippi, on our ticket, there is a rational hope of their election in November, 1884.

The hope of electing that ticket rests on clear and substantial grounds. First of all, the Republicans have lost their cohesion; and the Democrats, since their slavery-suicide, have had no cohesion but loaves and fishes. The American party certainly has the cohesion of principle.

Then, if we put a ticket in the field, with colored blood in it, the first ever presented to the voters of the United States, the great majority of the human race are colored people and we shall start with that majority on our side, and concentrate on our ticket all eyes, from the China Sea to the Pacific Ocean; and thus strike for the unification of mankind.

Moreover, if we put that ticket in the field, at our convention at Washington, next fall, six or eight months before the other parties nominate, we have a rational prospect of coming into the political arena with a million colored voters; and waking up from their ashes the old slumbering fires of Abolition, from Mason and Dixon's line to Maine and Alaska. The name of Fred. Douglass is a slogan which Abolitionists have all heard; and it will stir us as the cry, "A Douglas! A Douglas!" used to rally the Highlanders—

"Whose swords are a thousand, their bosoms are one."

Since we called on Mr. Douglass, both parties are paying court to him; and their party fears magnified a friendly call of Gen. Pomeroy and Secretary Stoddard on ex-Senator Bruce at the U. S. Treasury, into a Presidential nomination. And on Emancipation day (April 16) the organs of both Republicans and Democrats got down on their knees to the colored voters who paraded the streets on that joyous occasion. Thus both the old parties vote that there is danger of our success in 1884. So much for the fact of the withdrawal and change.

And as to the mode of it:

"If once 'twere done, when 'tis done,
'Twere well it were done quickly."

The butcher's boy, Cardinal Woolsey, was pardoned by that severest of tyrants, Henry VIII., for changing his written instructions when sent to the Continent; because Woolsey made just the change which his royal master wanted made. So shall I be pardoned by the American party, and I predict that we shall together vote and shout for Pomeroy and Douglass!

"But why not wait for consultation?" "Why make your withdrawal peremptory?" I answer; because a cringing appeal to "consultation" would have been coquetry, and inviting my friends, who loved me, to rally and divide our counsels. No man can read Pomeroy's record without seeing that God has called, qualified, and chosen him to head our ticket. The propriety of the change rests on its merits; and these will carry it like Niagara; with only this difference, it will carry us up stream!

THE WEED LETTER.

A question which has agitated many minds since the publication of Mr. Weed's remarkable letter on the Morgan abduction and murder, is the moral bearing of what appears to be the keeping secret an infamous Masonic crime. Those who argue that Mr. Weed should have betrayed the confidence of John Whitney in confessing his part in the Morgan murder must remember that the matter allows of some mitigating circumstances. The bare fact of his confidential and friendly relations with men of whose guilt he had good evidence, and whom he had been pursuing with the law but a few years before, and joining with them in keeping a Masonic secret cannot altogether be excused, yet there are some modifying facts which occur to us in connection with the matter. Whitney and King were both friends of Mr. Weed before the abduction of Morgan. In an interview with Mr. Weed, published in the New York Herald about eight years ago he says:

"I knew Col. King and John Whitney intimately. Both would have shrunk from the commission of a known crime; and yet both, impelled by the delusive plea that they were discharging a duty, participated in the commission of the highest crime. Of all the persons connected with the abduction, arrest, imprisonment and subsequent fate of Morgan, there was not one within my knowledge who did not possess and enjoy the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens. It was not strange, therefore, that facts subsequently established beyond denial were at first very generally and indignantly rejected. The people would not believe that respectable citizens were guilty of open and gross violations of law; and yet none but reputable citizens were thus complicated, none of whom, however, intended or apprehended a catastrophe."

The trials were given up, having succeeded in convicting no one of the murder of Morgan, and no one had at the time probably any idea of re-opening them, if, indeed, that could have been legally possible.

Whitney was giving testimony which would criminate himself and which no court, since the infamous Jeffries and the Spanish Inquisition, could force from him. He gave these facts by way of confession of a sin against God and his fellowman which his conscience, already stupified by the oaths of the lodge, did not hold to be murder.

Mr. Weed was not acting in the role of detective, but in listening to the confession of Whitney was satisfying a natural curiosity, which no doubt every Anti-mason of that day felt more or less keenly. As to the duty of re-opening the case against Whitney, Mr. Weed in his letter to the Batavia convention gives the conclusion which he finally reached. There is no doubt that he felt the force of all the reasons that can possibly to-day be urged why he should endeavor to bring Whitney before the courts, and more even, for the case was yet comparatively fresh and many arguments would appeal to Mr. Weed's mind which would not occur to one less interested personally and publicly in the case. In his statement to the New York papers some eight years ago, he says that he debated in his mind what would be duty to the public in the matter, and seriously questioned whether he should not renew the Morgan trials. But the fact, that to complete the evidence, the direct testimony of Whitney would have to be given, and that he could not be compelled to testify against himself, satisfied Mr. Weed that such an attempt would fail like the others. But as to the moral certainty of the case as given by Mr. Weed, there can be no doubt. He had no earthly object to gain by misrepresention; and his character as a Christian and a representative American are against any such supposition. The vaporings of such a moral pauper as Rob Morris are not to be taken into the account in comparison. He has too often betrayed his character as devoid of truth whenever he can exalt the lodge or slander a Christian opponent of it. He acknowledges the abduction of Morgan and years ago in his cyclopedia wrote that some infatuated members of the lodge made way with him. His last lie drawn out into a book of 400 pages disposes of the case in some way more satisfactory to himself.

The lodge has also of late brought out another witness, a Miss Welby, theatrical performer, who is said to be the daughter of the McNeil who so bitterly attacked Weed and who was afterward put into a government office at Weed's request. Her story is full of vindictiveness against Mr. Weed but is so improbable and unsupported that it is hardly worth notice. It is evident the representatives of the Masonic order have no interest in these contradictions. If they wished to attempt the overthrow of ten thousand witnesses like Weed, Greene, Whittlesey, Bernard and Stone they would surely set to the work some man in whom the lodge itself would have some confidence.

—Rev. M. A. Gault, who was last year appointed lecturer by the Reformed Presbyterian Synod for the National Reform work in Kansas, Missouri and western Iowa, called on the Cynosure last week. He is continued in the same work during the ensuing year. The Synod just met in Allegheny City, Pa., appointed four additional lecturers this year: Dr. H. P. McClurkin of New Concord, Ohio, for Pennsylvania; Rev. C. T. Trumbull of Morning Sun for Iowa; Rev. J. S. T. Milligan for Kansas; and Rev. W. R. Laird for Vermont. These brethren each give three months during the year to lecturing on the religious reform. Rev. J. H. Timmons of the United Presbyterian church, Tarentum, Pa., is also engaged to lecture on this important work in connection with work for the anti-lodge reform.

—Early in the morning of the first day of summer, bright and clear as the blue heavens above, comes to us the Free Press of Olathe, Kansas, published monthly by the Johnson County Christian Association, Bro. B. F. Worrell, editor, and H. Curtis, business manager. This is a cheering note from the South-west, where within a radius of less than a hundred miles from Kansas City there are now three reform papers issued, the American Freeman of Albany, Mo., the Banner of Truth, Baker, Mo., and now the Free Press, of Olathe. God bless them all and make them more daily a power against the enemies of Jesus Christ. Bro. Worrell is an old editor and this first paper shows the work of a practiced hand. The members of all the secret lodges of Kansas, all of them, are earnestly requested to send their subscriptions to Bro. Curtis. An investment of 25 cents will be worth more to them than a hundred times that amount spent in lodgery.

—The Masonic lodges of South Boston have added some new material to their paraphernalia which shows that there has been some change in their ritual not provided by the Grand Lodge. The discovery was made when some thieves broke into their rooms and carried away fifty each of the silver knives, forks and spoons used by this powerful order, and on top of this load they bore off 200 cigars. Do we need a new revelation to cover this part of the lodge performances?

—The aldermen of Fall River, Mass., having attempted to hold secret sessions and exclude reporters and spectators, a Boston daily says of the silly affair, "This sort of secret society business has been effectually put to shame elsewhere."

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

According to its constitution the annual business meeting of the National Christian Association will be held at 10:30 A. M., on the third Thursday (21st) of June next, in Carpenter Hall, 221 West Madison street, Chicago. This meeting is expected to be of unusual importance and requires the attendance of every member of the corporate body and as many friends as possible should be present. JOHN D. NUTTING, Rec. Sec.

COMMENCEMENT AT WASIOJA.

Term examinations at the Wesleyan Seminary, Wasioja, Minn., occur Monday and Tuesday, June 11, and 12.

Annual meeting of the Trustees, Wednesday, 13th, 10 A. M.

Graduation Exercises, Wednesday, 13th, 8 P. M.

Rev. L. N. Stratton, President of Wheaton Theological Seminary, will deliver the annual address.

Next year begins September 5.

WHAT IS REQUIRED OF US JUNE 21.

The recurrence of the annual business meeting of the National Christian Association is an event of too grave importance under any circumstances to be neglected or treated with indifference by any friend of our cause. Not all who desire will be able to attend but there is no one so remote as not to be able to "help together by prayers." The hand of God beyond question, has been with us during the past year, shaping our movements and bringing us on towards this gathering by "a way that we knew not" one year ago. We are compelled to look squarely into the face of great questions, and absolutely forced to confront grave issues, either as Christians or as cowards. The men and women only are fitted for the crisis upon us who will leave SELF at home and bring Christ with them. There is room and ample scope for consecrated ambition and profoundest wisdom to work wonders, and there is a place for the humblest little child that loves Jesus to do something. There is one place where no man is greater and no man is smaller than another and that is the sinners place, at the feet of Jesus. He is to be here, WE MEET IN HIS NAME and whatever may have been your successes in life your present estimate of your importance, or your future prospects as a preacher a politician or a worldly minded man you will not feel at home unless you can look right up into his face and say "Nevertheless, not what I will, but what THOU wilt," Mark 14:36. To all who come being "led by the Spirit," and who "ABIDE IN CHRIST" and in whom "Christ's words abide" there is a "Pentecost" awaiting. Ye shall "speak with other tongues," and your words shall penetrate ears, strangers hitherto to such sounds. The only adequate fitting up for the work of this meeting is THE baptism "by one Spirit into one body" so that sects, creeds, scisms and divisions shall "not so much as once be named among us," when we get where we "Look not every man on his own things but every man also on the things of others," all questions about the past and future of your organ, and about politics, and about Washington, will be quickly adjusted. Don't stay at home to plan and worry about money to run the Cynosure or pay the debt at Washington. God is not bankrupt. He has money enough to carry this thing through. You and I "are bought with a price," we belong to God, and if this is not his cause we are better out of it; the sooner the better, even if it takes starvation to bring us to our senses. Now, brethren, my counsel is, Pray a great deal. Be "instant in prayer," but "Fret not yourself in any wise." Make up your mind to "let God do as he has a mind to" and to "stand in your lot in the time appointed." Read 1 Peter 1. 16, and having obeyed this Divine injunction, if you are "led by the Spirit" to come up to this annual gathering, COME and obey the command in the 15th or verse preceeding, and as God is true and his promises never fail, you shall "return with rejoicing;" and it may be, if he so will, live to see what "wonderous things he hath wrought in the earth."

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

CALL FOR A POLITICAL MEETING.

The Central Committee of the American party is hereby called to meet at the N. C. A. building, 221 West Madison street. Chicago, at 4 P. M., June 21st 1883, to consider the question of calling a National Political Convention at Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, and to transact such other business as may be of interest to the party. A full attendance of the members of the Central Committee and all other interested friends is earnestly requested.

Come and attend the N. C. A. Annual Meeting convening at 10 A. M. and also hear Senator Pomeroy at Farwell Hall in the evening of the same day (Thursday, June 21st.)

EZRA A. COOK,
Ch'n Cen. Com. American Party.

POLITICAL SIMPLICITY.

Harper's Weekly in a recent notice of Senator Edmunds says that his position was not made by patronage, and it does not depend upon a machine. His ascendency is actual, not fictitious."

Now this statement is very simple. Mr. Edmunds would probably never have been in the Senate of the United States if he had not been run in by the lodge-machine. He is a noted, emphasised partisan, and would never be anything in politics outside of his party. Though possessed of ability, his ascendency is due to his Masonic partisanship, and depends upon Masonic fiction. He does not possess the qualities of the reformer. No man who accepts favors from the lodge could ever exercise the office of a reformer. He has remained too silent in his place when the knavish work of the lodge was being done in Congress to represent the interests of reform. He moved a restoration of one of the corruptest privileges that ever seduced the purity of men in office, viz., the franking privilege; and what is singular is, the measure failed! Even his "actual and not fictitious" ascendency, though aided by the other Senator from Vermont, failed to carry that rotten measure through.

No man who serves the lodge can be trusted with a directive part in republican government. The greatest danger to the country at the present juncture lies in lodge-politics. The country must be redeemed from that, and it is extremely absurd to suppose that men whose office and honors come from the lodge, can ever redeem the country from lodge rule.

The American party should make no compromises. We must insist upon a candidate free from every suspicion of lodge obligation. The Republic is being led to its ruin by the partisans of a dangerous, secret party, that shields criminals against all accountability in office. A man may have the tongued eloquence of an angel, yet if he aids a secret organization that renders null all accountability in office, he is helping to hasten the Republic to a rapid destruction.

Harper's publications are excellent instrumentalities for making money, but money-making and reform processes do not usually consort together very well, any more than lodge-membership and service to the Republic do. No man now in public office should be any longer sustained in that position without having his accounts properly examined into and the balance struck. If he has ever served the lodge, or has had any connection with the lodge, the country does not owe him an office; but on the contrary he owes the people an apology. To let a man's accounts run on, placing lodge-work to his credit and not to the debit side of his account, can tend to but one conclusion, and that is disaster to the Republic.

AMERICAN.

DEBT PAYING AND PEACE.

It has often been argued that a national debt is a national blessing, and the example of England always stands for an illustration. But it is now stated that the British government is following our example and is reducing her enormous debt, and prefers to do this to reducing taxation, which benefits traders chiefly while the other relieves the whole community who are taxed for the debt and held for its security. A national debt is always approved by banks, capitalists and trust concerns, to whom it furnishes a safe and permanent investment. The English debt is being reduced at the rate of about forty million dollars a year.

The London Spectator gives among the reasons why this payment is for the advantage of the whole people, that gold is becoming more scarce year by year, that the national resources of England in land, woods, quarries and mines is wasting and that the prospect of decrease of population is serious. But the reason of paramount importance is the deliverance from an immense and costly war preparation. The words of the Spectator should be studied by the politicians who are clamoring that our government should invest ten or fifteen millions in war vessels. They are these:

"The grand reason for paying debt is, however, none of these, but a very different one. We want to strengthen the credit of the State as the cheapest and best of all insurances. That credit is, in truth, a gigantic force, which enables England even now to maintain her position in the world without a conscription, and which may hereafter enable her to undertake great schemes for the internal benefit of the people. The ability to raise huge sums at once rapidly and cheaply is the steam-power in our engine. The Continent smiles at our army, but does not want to provoke us, because it knows that it could be quintupled for defense without the Treasury quaking. A hundred millions of pounds a year would give us a million of men, and we could spend that for five years and still be burdened only with an extra fourpence on the pound on the income tax and threepence a pound on sugar. That is a brutal form of stating the truth, but it is a truth; and in the truth, which becomes more true with every payment of debt, is the most potent application of the principle of insurance. We have not to pay the money, because we could pay it. If any one doubts that let him look at the position of the United States. That grand Republic has no fleet, and on the water could hardly fight Spain. But she has reduced her debt by strenuous paying to a trifling amount, and every one knows that if she wanted a fleet to blow Spain out of the water, or to contest the seas with France or us, she would buy and build one in twelve months. Her payment of her debt is an insurance not only against defeat, but against attack."

The Tribune of this city acknowledges the force of this argument and comments with some pride upon the moral power of this country against war, because in truth the preparation for war which best preserves permanent peace is the immense reserve financial strength which an assiduous cultivation of the arts of peace alone can produce. The Tribune says:

"There is no doubt that this line of argument will appeal with great force to the commercial impulse of the English people. The illustration taken from the American situation is a good one. The reduction of our national debt, adhered to in such perfect faith that debt-paying has progressed more rapidly than was ever promised or expected, has lowered the rate of Government interest more than one-half, for not only has the rate been cut down from 6 per cent to 3 per cent, but Government bonds at the latter rate sell at a premium, whereas at the former rate they were sold at a large discount. The American Government is spared the expense of maintaining a navy, and can impose upon other nations the enormous cost of experimenting with ships and guns because its credit will enable it to buy a modern navy at its actual value whenever an emergency shall arise demanding one. If the United States were to become involved in a war with Great Britain, for instance, it could purchase from Germany, Italy, and France, all the ships of war it would require, and it could raise the money for such purpose at 3 per cent, probably, and certainly would not have to pay more than 4 per cent. If Great Britain, by a policy of debt-paying, can reduce the rate of interest to 2 per cent and curtail its indebtedness to an insignificant figure, it would have the assurance of the ability to borrow $1,000,000,000 at the lowest rate of interest whenever any great conflict should be threatened, and to put in the field the most formidable army on earth. It is almost unnecessary to add that such an assurance of itself is likely to avert any occasion for utilizing the nation's credit for carrying on a war. Other nations will be careful about furnishing a provocation in the face of such ready and colossal resources. There is a disposition in England to recognize the advantage which the United States enjoys from its improved credit and to imitate the policy which has led to it."

THE HOME.

A SUMMER PRAYER IN THE COUNTRY.

Oh for a heart from self set free,
And doubt, and fret, and care,
Light as a bird, instinct with glee,
That fans the breezy air!

Oh for a mind whose virtue moulds
All sensuous fair display,
And like a strong commander, holds,
A world of thoughts in sway!

Oh for an eye that's clear to see,
A hand that waits on fate,
To pluck the ripe fruit from the tree,
And never comes too late!

Oh for a life with firm-set root,
And breadth of leafy green,
And flush of blooming wealth, and fruit
That grows with mellow sheen!

Oh for a death from sharp alarms
And bitter memories free;—
A gentle death in God's own arms,
Whose dear Son died for me.

A SABBATH IN JUNE.

O perfect day! Since God's approving smile,
Kindled on this young world the Sabbath's light—
More loveliness than thine, from morn till night,
No day of June did e'er from heaven beguile?
Offspring of gloom and storm, thy radiant birth
Broke like a dream on my bewildered eyes.
An unwont glory from the sapphire skies—
Chrism'd with sacred joy the common earth.
I knew the lawns, the maples and the pines,
The oriole's crimson breast and golden wings,
The diamond-dew and all familiar things—
That glistened through the 'broidery of my vines;
But all was new and marvellously bright—
O perfect day! June-crowned with Sabbath light.

THE ALLEGED INDELICACIES OF THE BIBLE.

I am opposed to the expurgation of the Scriptures because the so-called indelicacies and cruelties of the Bible have demonstrated no evil result. A cruel book will produce cruelty—an unclean book will produce uncleanness. Fetch me a victim. Out of all Christendom, and out of all the ages, fetch me a victim whose heart has been hardened to cruelty, or whose life has been made impure by this book. Show me one. One of the best families I ever knew of, for thirty or forty years, morning and evening, had all the members gather together, and the servants of the household and the strangers that happened to be within the gates—twice a day, without leaving out a chapter or a verse, they read this holy Book, morning by morning, night by night. Not only the older children, but the little child who could just spell her way through the verse while her mother helped her. The father beginning and reading one verse, and then all the members of the family in turn reading a verse. The father maintained his integrity, the mother maintained her integrity, the sons grew up and entered professions and commercial life, honoring every sphere in the life in which they lived, and the daughters went into families where Christ was honored, and all that was good and pure and righteous reigned perpetually. For thirty years that family endured the Scriptures. Not one of them ruined by it. Now, if you will tell me of a family where the Bible has been read twice a day for thirty years, and the children have been brought up in that habit, and the father went to ruin and the mother went to ruin, and the sons and daughters were destroyed by it—if you will tell me of one such incident, I will throw away my Bible, or I will doubt your veracity.

I tell you if a man is shocked with what he calls the indelicacies of the Word of God, he is prurient in his taste and imagination. If a man cannot read the book of Solomon's Song without impure suggestion, he is either in his heart or in his life a libertine. The Old Testament description of wickedness, uncleanness of all sorts, is purposely and righteously a disgusting account, instead of the Byronic and the Parisian vernacular which makes sin attractive instead of appalling. When those old prophets point you to a lazaretto, you understand it is a lazaretto. When a man, having begun to do right, falls back into wickedness and gives up his integrity, the Bible does not say he was overcome by the fascinations of the festal-board, or that he surrendered to convivialities, or that he became a little fast in his habits. I will tell you what the Bible says: "The dog is turned to his own vomit again, and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire." No gilding of iniquity. No garlands on a death's-head. No pounding away with a silver mallet at iniquity, when it needs an iron sledge-hammer. I can easily understand how people brooding over the description of uncleanness in the Bible may get morbid in mind until they are as full of it as the wings and the beak and the nostril and the claw of a buzzard are full of the odors of a carcass, but what is wanted is not that the Bible be disinfected, but that you, the critic, have your heart and mind washed with carbolic acid! I tell you, that a man who does not like this Book, and who is critical as to its contents, and who is shocked and outraged with its descriptions, has never been soundly converted. The laying on of the hands of Presbytery or Episcopacy does not change a man's heart; and men sometimes get into the pulpit, as well as into the pew, never having been changed radically by the sovereign grace of God. Get your heart right and the Bible will be right. The trouble is men's natures are not brought into harmony with the Word of God. Expurgation of the heart is what is wanted. You cannot make me believe that the Scriptures, which this moment lie on the table of the purest and best men and women of the age, and which were the dying solace of your kindred passed into the skies, have in them a taint which the strongest microscope of honest criticism could make visible. If men are uncontrollable in their indignation when the integrity of wife or child is assailed, and judges and jurors as far as possible excuse violence under such provocation, what ought to be the overwhelming and long-resounding thunders of condemnation for any man who will stand in a Christian pulpit and assail the more than virgin purity of inspiration, the well-beloved daughter of God!

Expurgate the Bible! You might as well go to the old picture-galleries in Dresden, and in Venice, and in Rome, and expurgate the old paintings. Perhaps you could find a foot of Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment" that might be improved. Perhaps you could throw more expression into Raphael's "Madonna." Perhaps you could put more pathos in Rubens' "Descent from the Cross." Perhaps you could change the crests of the waves in Turner's "Slave Ship." Perhaps you might go into the old galleries of sculpture and change the forms and posture of the statues by Phidias and Praxiteles. Such an iconoclast would very soon find himself in the penitentiary. But it is worse vandalism when a man proposes to refashion these masterpieces of inspiration and to remodel the moral giants of this gallery of God.—Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

LUTHER'S COURAGE.

As Luther drew near the door which was about to admit him into the presence of his judges (the diet of Worms), he met a valiant knight, the celebrated George of Freudsberg, who, four years later, at the head of his German lansquenets, bent the knee with his soldiers on the field of Pavia, and then, charging to the left of the French army, drove it into the Ticino, and in a great measure decided the captivity of the king of France. The old general, seeing Luther pass, tapped him on the shoulder, and shaking his head, blanched in many battles, said kindly: "Poor monk, poor monk! thou art now going to make a bolder stand than I or any other captain has ever made in the battles. But if thy cause is just, and thou art sure of it, go forward in God's name, and fear nothing. God will not forsake thee." A noble tribute of respect paid by the courage of the sword to the courage of the mind.—D'Aubigne.

CARD PLAYING AT HOME.

Playing cards for "pastime" or as an "innocent amusement" soon becomes a passion, and when once fixed a man will forego home, family, business and pleasure, and suffer the loss of his all for the exciting scenes of the card table.

That accomplished writer, the late Dr. Holland, of Springfield, Mass., said: "I have all my days had a card-playing community open to my observation, and I am yet unable to believe that that which is the universal resort of starved souls and intellect, which has never in any way linked to itself tender, elevating, or beautiful associations—the tendency of which is to unduly absorb the attention from more weighty matters, can recommend itself to the favor of Christ's disciples. The presence of culture and genius embellish, but can never dignify it.

"I have this moment," said Dr. Holland, "ringing in my ears the dying injunction of my father's early friend, 'Keep your son from cards. Over them I have murdered time, and lost heaven.'" Fathers and mothers, keep your sons from cards in the home circle. What must a good angel think of a mother at the prayer-meeting asking prayer for the conversion of her son whom she allowed to remain at home playing cards for "pastime"?

The late Bishop Bascom, in denouncing all forms of iniquity, speaks of the "gambler who, rather than not to gratify his passion for play, would stake the throne of eternity upon the cast of a die—who, unmoved by the tears and entreaties of her that bore him, the wife of his bosom, and the children of his love, continues to indulge his hated passion, until the infatuated reprobate would table his game upon the tomb of his father, or shuffle for infamy upon the threshold of hell."—Advocate.

In the expression "manly," moral is more conspicuous than intellectual quality. We do not think so much about smartness as conviction of duty, integrity, and honor. When some one in Sir Walter Scott's hearing made a remark as to the value of literary talents and accomplishments as if they were, above all things, to be esteemed, he observed, "God help us! what a poor world this would be if that were the true doctrine! We shall never learn to feel and respect our real calling and destiny, unless we have taught ourselves to consider everything moonshine compared with the education of the heart."

Nelson's column stands in the most conspicuous site in London, with the approval of all men. But it was not simply his daring and reckless courage that gave him this prominence. Others might be named in English history who were his equals in this regard. It was his devotion to duty that lifted him high above all his compeers in England's capital. When Julius Atticus rushed into the presence of Galba, with a bloody sword, boasting that he had slain his rival, Otho, the old barbarian chief simply inquired, "Comrade, by whose order?" His question touches the very pith and marrow of manliness. Who told you to do it? "Our courage," one has said, "can only rise into true manliness when the will is surrendered; and the more absolute the surrender of the will the more perfect will be the strength of this manliness.—Advance.

PREVENTION OF BOILS.—A St. Petersburg physician, Dr. Sieven, commends a very simple treatment for the prevention of this painful form of abscess. A CURE FOR SPRING FEVER.—A correspondent of the Springfield Republican writes that formerly every spring he suffered from "spring fever" in the form of biliousness—dull appetite, heavy eyes, unrefreshing sleep. A doctor forbade his eating meat. He said it was impossible. He couldn't forego it. "Try the experiment," said the doctor. "For ten days eat no beef, mutton, pork or veal. Eat vegetables and farinaceous food, soft-boiled eggs, fish, or milk; a little poultry will not hurt you, or a bit of bacon. In a few days you will find yourself another man." He was well in less than a week. He was like a clogged up fire when the cinders are raked out and the draft turned on. His head grew clear, nerves steady, courage came back; he was ready to smile at Satan's rage, and face a frowning world. The cure was permanent. He renounced meat for breakfast, and if even a touch of billiousness recurred, abstinence at dinner for two or three days put an end to it. The great American sin is meat-eating, he thinks.

TO COLLECT THE ODORS OF FLOWERS.—Roses, and all flowers containing perfumed oils, may be made to yield their aromatic qualities by steeping the petals or flower leaves in a saucer, or in a flat dish of water, and setting it in the sun. The petals should be entirely covered with the water, which should be soft or rain-water. A sufficient quantity must be allowed for evaporation, and the vessel should be left undisturbed a few days. At the end of this time a film will be found floating on the top. This is the essential oil of the flower, and every particle of it is impregnated with the odor peculiar to the flower. It should be taken up carefully and put in tiny vials, which should be allowed to remain open till all watery particles are evaporated. A very small portion of this will perfume glove-boxes, apparel, etc., and will last a long time.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

When the morning paints the skies,
And the birds their songs renew,
Let me from my slumbers rise
Saying, "What would Jesus do?"

Countless mercies from above
Day by day my pathway strew;
Is it much to bless thy love?
"Father, what would Jesus do?"

When I ply my daily task,
And the round of toil pursue,
Let me often brightly ask,
"What, my soul, would Jesus do?"

Would the foe my heart beguile,
Whispering thoughts and words untrue;
Let me to his subtlest wile
Answer, "What would Jesus do?"

When the clouds of sorrow hide
Mirth and sunshine from my view,
Let me, clinging to thy side
Ponder, "What would Jesus do?"

Only let thy love, O God,
Fill my spirit through and through,
Treading where my Saviour trod,
Breathing, "What would Jesus do?"

SOME LIGHTNING ABOUT IT.

Frank had made a discovery. It was a wonderful one, too. This is how it happened. He was trying to put some paper stockings on the cat's feet. The cat failed to appreciate the fun of it. So she got away and ran into the dark closet that opened out of the big bedroom. Frank ran after her and caught her there.

While he was trying to get her out he happened to rub her fur the wrong way, that is, from her tail towards her head. He was surprised when he found that she glistened all over with sparks of light. He rubbed again and again. Every time he rubbed her fur there were bright sparks all over her. Then he thought something, and he spoke his thought aloud; so I know what it was. It was this: "I guess that cat's been eating matches or something."

Then he called Gertie and Will. They were older. Perhaps it was because they were older that they laughed significantly.

"You needn't laugh," said Frank. "I know that cat's afire. I guess its matches."

But the cat did not burn up. She did not act like a cat on fire. In fact, she appeared to be perfectly comfortable. What was it, then?

"Wait a minute," said Will, "and I'll show you a trick worth two of that."

Then he shuffled across the carpet two or three times and held his knuckle within a quarter of an inch of the metallic door-knob. Instantly a spark darted from his knuckles to the knob, with a slight snapping noise. What was it?

Then he called the two older children, John and Kate. He formed them all in a line and joined their hands. John was at one end of the line, Gertie at the other. John held a key in one hand close to the door-knob. Then Frank shuffled across the carpet as before, and touched Gertie's hand. A bright spark flew from John's key to the door-knob. What was it?

Again he shuffled across the floor and applied his knuckle to the gas-jet and lighted it. What was it?

Once more, he took a thread several feet in length, moistened it, attached a key at each end, and moving across the floor as before sent a spark through it to the door-knob. It certainly wasn't matches. What was it? Frank and Gertie couldn't tell, and John and Kate didn't tell. Will told us the best he knew, that he supposed there was some lightning about it. Will was correct, though it is commonly called electricity.

Later in the evening, when their papa came home, they told him about Frank's surprise at his discovery and the experiments that Will had shown them, and he explained to them that the friction of rubbing the cat's fur, and the friction caused by shuffling across the floor, collected electricity (or lightning, as Will was pleased to call it), and that the light and sparks produced in each case were, in reality, very minute flashes of lightning.

"A few years ago," he said, "during a very cold and dry winter, we experienced, for several weeks, considerable inconvenience from this cause. We could not only readily light the gas, and do the other things which you have so successfully done to-night, but as we happened to touch one another the electric shock was so great as to be quite unpleasant, and when unexpected often occasioned a sudden start. The sensation was much like a slight prick of a pin.

"Often, too, this was accompanied by a perceptible report, loud enough to be heard across the room. As Will says, there was some lightning about it."

Then he explained to them that the thread over which Will had passed the electricity from key to key and then to the door-knob, was really a kind of telegraph and worked on much the same plan as the telegraph. All of which was highly interesting to each of the children.—Christian Union.

A SMART YANKEE DOG.

B. M. Prescott is the owner of a large mastiff dog which possesses a great degree of sagacity and intelligence. One day recently a domestic employed in his family went into the wood-shed for some wood and in returning dropped a stick, which the dog picked up in his teeth, and walking up to the stove, deliberately placed his paws on the hearth and placed the stick in the stove as well as any person could have done it. On another occasion a young man in passing through Main street accidently dropped his handkerchief and passed on and entered his house. The dog, which must have seen the incident, picked up the handkerchief and proceeded to the door which the young man had entered, and after making his presence known by several raps the young man opened the door and the dog presented him with the lost article.

ENOUGH TO POISON A PARISH.

A Protestant little girl, being asked by the priest to attend his religious instruction, refused, saying it was against her father's wishes. The priest said she should obey him, and not her father

"O, sir, we are taught in the Bible—'Honor thy father and thy mother.'"

"You have no business to read the Bible," said the priest.

"But, sir, our Saviour said in John 5:39, 'Search the Scriptures.'"

"That was only to the Jews, and not to children, and you don't understand it," said the priest.

"But, sir, Paul said to Timothy, 'From a child hast thou known the holy Scriptures.'" 2 Tim. 3:15.

"O," said the priest, "Timothy was being trained to be a bishop, and was taught by the authorities of the church."

"O no, sir," said the child; "he was taught by his mother and his grandmother."

On this the priest turned her away, saying she "knew enough of the Bibe to poison a parish.

TEMPERANCE.

BODY RUIN FROM ALCOHOL.

Work, fairly proportioned to the powers, is good and healthy for the organism; no matter whether it be brain-work or body-work.

The full exercise of the powers, mental and bodily, is desirable and improves them; so long as the demand is not excessive. But when the powers are called upon too freely, then danger looms ahead. Bodily fatigue manifests itself in lassitude, in unfitness for exertion, compelling rest until the sense of vigor is once more experienced. Certainly, so far so good. But these sensations are not always attended to, and too frequently are fought off by determination; and sometimes by resort to stimulants. Baron Justus von Liebig wrote thirty years ago about the workman who resorts to spirits in order to enable him to complete his task: "He draws, so to speak, a bill on his health, which must be always renewed, because for want of means he cannot take it up; he consumes his capital instead of his interest; and the result is the inevitable bankruptcy of his body." The system contains a reserve fund of energy upon which we can draw in emergencies; and this is known by the term "physological capital." The body-income is paid in daily from the food we eat; the body-expenditure is the daily out goings. The excess of income over expenditure is the body-capital. When the outgoings are less than the incomings an accumulation of capital takes place in the body-bank; just as is the case in the money-bank, when more is paid in than is taken out an accumulation follows. The excess is termed a balance. Now when business firms reduce their balance too far they are in danger of failure if any sudden and unforseen demand be made upon them. In fact if their balance be unequal to the demand they may become bankrupt. They usually meet the demand by drawing a bill payable at a certain date. In the mean time they set to work to provide the means to meet the bill when it falls due. If they succeed all is well. If their outgoings just equal their incomings Such accumulation of means is impossible, and they become bankrupt unless they succeed in practically staving off payment by meeting the bill coming due by drawing another. Yet the debt remains; and bill-drawing is a costly device which means absolute ruin at no very distant period. But during all this time there is the grave danger of some new demaud, for which no similar scheme will or can provide; for their credit is already mortgaged up to the hilt. Smash then they must. Bankruptcy is the natural end of trading upon fictitious capital.

Now this illustration will make clear to the reader what is here meant about physiological bankruptcy. It means the exhaustiou of the body-capital, and collapse before some new demand. Daily we pay into the body-bank so much; and every day we draw out so much. Some days the paying in is far in excess of the withdrawal; then we feel energetic. Many persons so circumstanced feel a craving for something to do. A walk, a row in a boat, a game of tennis; anything that will safely take away the surplus energy is acceptable. Animals are just the same. After a day or two in the kennel the dog delights in a long day's hunting. So with the horse; after a day or two in the stable he is "fresh," as it is termed, and quite frolicsome when first taken out. The cup is brimming over! On the other hand, man and animal alike enjoy a rest after severe and prolonged exertion. But when the horse must work every day, his owner feeds him up; gives him more stimulant food. This, however, cannot go on forever. The horse is at last found unequal to his work; the veterinary surgeon is called in, who pronounces him "used up," and prescribes a course of "grass." That is, the horse has to have a long holiday, a rest in the country until he is strong again.....

The manufacturing population, along the backbone of England, is seriously deteriorated as compared with the rural population of the English agricultural counties. In the Black Country and in the potteries the same degeneracy can be seen. True it is that improper food in infancy, the vices of manhood before growth is complete, are not without effect in the production of these deplorable results. Still, early toil beyond the powers has a great deal to answer for in the production of this degeneracy.

The consumption of ardent alcoholic drinks by such population is notorious. The monotony of their labor is answerable to some extent for the craving after alcoholic stimulants; that must not be overlooked. But it is not the complete or full answer to the question—Why do these town-populations crave after spirits? Beer is the drink par excellence of rustics, of the inhabitants of small towns, and even of the cockney who follows light pursuits. Liebig has something to say on this subject well worthy of deep consideration. "The use of spirits is not the cause but an effect of poverty. It is an exception from the rule when a well-fed man becomes a spirit-drinker. On the other hand, when the laborer earns by his work less than is required to provide the amount of food which is indispensable in order to restore fully his working power, an unyielding, inexorable law or necessity compels him to have recourse to spirits. He must work; but in consequence of insufficient food a certain portion of his working power is daily wanting. Spirits, by their action on the nerves, enable him to make up the deficient power at the expense of his body, to consume to-day that quantity which ought naturally to have been employed a day later." His physiological capital is clearly being exhausted; and it is no wonder that, under such circumstances, he dies comparatively early, and certainly prematurely. Not only is such a plan essentially and radically bad, but alcohol is a terribly dear form of food. Alcohol in such concentrated form is a potent aid to the already existing tendency to tissue-degeneration. When overwork calls in alcohol to its help the unholy alliance quickly works the most disasterous results, and brings the organism swiftly to general decay. Even when the evil results of the deadly combination are not so marked, general deterioration is manifest in impaired power of labor, in inferior work, in lessened hours of toil. The tendency is to saunter away working hours in the alehouse; partly because work is found so irksome that it is pleasant to do nothing—perhaps worse than nothing; partly because the capacity to labor has been undermined. Of course here again there is not uniformity; one organism yields more readily than another. Toil and alcohol, and sometimes the alcohol with very little toil, soon reduce one man to the condition of a social pariah; while in another case a hale old man will be found who works hard every day—"never misses any time," his fellow-workman say—yet who drinks daily an amount of spirits which would soon tell sorely on an average person. But such a case does not militate against the general soundness of the statement that overwork, combined with alcohol, is a sure and certain road to body-ruin.—Good Words.

BEER.

Below we give a few of the ingredients of beer so commonly reckoned a healthy beverage in this country.

The adulteratious found to be most commonly used are quassia, gentian, and wormwood to give bitterness; ginger, orange peal, and caraway to impart pungency; alum and blue-vitriol to preserve the frothy bead; coculus indicus, nux vomica, and tobacco to intoxicate, and salt to promote thirst.

Better poison need hardly be sought.

—All intemperance commences by moderate drinking, commenced too without the remotest idea of becoming drunkards.

—The coat on the drunkard's back is generally bad enough. How much worse think you, is the coat of his stomach?

—The first law God gave to man, prescribed what he should not eat. Was that law wrong?

—The Journal of this city in its issue of May 11th, said: "It is estimated that the people of Dayton were saved $5,000 by the closing of the saloons last Sunday. At that rate the saving would amount in money directly to $260,000 per annum—quite a handsome fortune for a number of families.

—The Cincinnati Gazette, which delights in statistical blows against the liquor traffic, has been taking notes as to the amount of taxes contributed by this "sum of all villainies" to the support of the government It finds that eighteen brewers and two thousand saloon-keepers pay tax on only $548,000 of personal property, which is not equal to the amount upon which one dry goods house in the city pays taxes.

Five districts in Ireland are exempted from the operations of the act closing liquor saloons on Sunday. The year's comparative statistics of drunkenness and crime are such that the bill extending the act to the whole of Ireland will doubtless be passed.

Sir Rutherford Alcock: I have lived the last twelve years in this great city of beer and spirit drinking people, after more than twenty years passed in China, and I aver that I see more degradation and brutality in a single day in the streets of London than I ever saw in twenty years of life in China.

NOBLE SENTIMENTS.

The proprieties of personal correspondence are not violated by publishing the following noble sentimeuts just receeived with a promise to attend our next annual meeting if the Lord will: "If not Providentially prevented I shall be there. . . I am a natural pioneer, was never a late convert to anything. When I see the clear pathway of duty or of testimony, I say, 'Here, Lord, send me. I am ready.' It is no concern of mine whether it be popular or uupopular. I never see 'a lion in the way.' Sueh has been my course through life, and cannot now be changed. . . I value my eouvietions of great truths and their utterance above all else. I have lived too long and suffered too much to eompromise myself by advoeating simply popular things. Worldly ministers and mere politieians can do enough of that disgusting business. 'Have any of the Pharisees believed on him?' is no question that coneerns me. . . I know my grounds, I have studied every point, and what is now rejected, I leave for the verdict of posterity.' . . Great changes are before us. Knowledge is running to all the nations. The Atlantic is now only like the Brooklyn Ferry, and before we die, I think we shall literally speak into the ear of all enlightened nations." This sounds like a bugle call "to the front" and should be echoed along the line of moral conflict until a man who has convictions which he dares not maintain for fear of personal consequences, shall blush with shame to call himself a Christian or even an American in this free country. THE CHURCHES.

—President J. Blanchard spent the Sabbath in Decatur-Michigan, where he was invited to preach in the Presbyterian church.

—Bro. C. W. Hiatt, formerly of the Tonica church, will spend his summer vacatiou with those brethren to whom he has become much enderared. A sad message called him from Oberlin Theological Seminary, where he has been studying during the year, shortly before the close of the term, to attend the funeral of Mrs. Burge, an older sister, who died very suddenly at her home in Toulon, Ill., and was buried from her father's house in Wheaton on Saturday amid universal sorrow.

—Rev. A. Ethridge has accepted the call of the Streator church and will soon remove thither from Iowa where his family is suffering from ill health. The young brother Ferris, we learn, had too much regard for his sect to preach to a people not fast bound with Congregational cords and did not remain long.

—Rev. M. A. Gault, of Blanchard, Iowa, returning homeward from the Reformed Presbyterian Synod at Allegheny City preached on the Sabbath for Dr. Meloy in the United Presbyterian church of Chicago. Rev. Wm. Johnston of College Springs occupied the same pulpit in the morning.

—H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston, attended the Y. M. C. A. International Convention at Milwaukee. A correspondent of the Advance speaks of him as a "real prophet in appearance," and says that he won all hearts by his exposition of the Scriptures and sermon on Infidelity.

—Ivan M. Martincheff, a Bulgarian who has studied three years at Oberlin, two in Yale Seminary, and two in the New York Medical College, has been ordained at New Haven. He will leave for home in June and hopes to organize a church in the city of Sophia.

—The Hon George Harlow wants to change the name of the Protestant Epispocal Church to that of the "Holy Catholic Church," and he offered a resolution to this effect in the Chicago Diocesan Convention last Wednesday, but it was just at the close of the session, when half the delegates had left for home, and Bishop McLaren asked that it be withdrawn. When Mr. Harlow refused to withdraw the resolution, the Bishop took the floor against it, and there was such opposition that the paper was withdrawn rather than have it defeated. The two most ardent supporters of this change were Mr. Harlow and S. Corning Judd, Chancellor of the diocese.

—The general stastics of the United Presbyterian church for the past year show nine synods, 60 presbyteries, pastors and stated supplies 525; total ministers 730; elders 3,288; congregations with pastors and stated supplies 641; total congregations 839; congregations dissolved 6: mission stations 92; new stations during the year 13; houses of worship erected 26; total cost of houses reported $91,150 members received on profession 4,122; members received on certificate 4,320; deaths and removals 7,472; total members reported 85,443; number of Sabbath school scholars reported 77,300; contributions by Sabbath schools $40,560; salaries of ministers $475,967; congregational purposes $285,971; to the boards $141,441; general contributions $42,671; quarter-centennial $107,322; total $1,053,373; Average per member $13,02; average salary of pastors $915.

The annual report of the Consistory of the Kingdom of Saxony on the State of Religion paints a gloomy picture. Only half of the Lutheran population partakes of the Lord's Supper; divorces reached 486, suicides, 1,248; illegitimate births, 14,867; and the petition against the observance of the Sabbath received 41,737 signatures, there being 5,000 signers in Halle alone.

The need of Christian work in Russia is earnestly presented by Dr. Baedeker, who having labored in that country is now pressing its claims on the Christian churches of Europe. At a large meeting in the rooms of the London Y. M. C. A. Dr. Baedeker spoke of the growing power of the Germans in the towns of Russia, of the zeal shown by the German Baptists, of the wretched condition of the Jews in the villages allotted them, of the blessing he received among the people in the Baltic provinces, and said that everywhere there is a desire to get the Gospel.

THE AMERICAN BOARD AND THE ARMENIAN MISSION.

Rev. Leonard W. Bacon, D. D., of Norwich, Conn., contributes an artiele to the Independent, April 26th, reviewing the action of the Executive managers of the Board and the Western Turkey missionaries toward the Armenian churches and the young men of those churches who have come at different times to this country for education. He says:

Thirty-two years ago, when I traversed the whole breadth of the Turkish Empire in Asia, visiting every station of the Amerieau Mission then established, it was the fairest and most fruitful field in all the vineyard of the Lord. In the lands of the patriarchs and of the apostles and martyrs were renewed the triumphs and the graces of the apostolic churches, and the sowers and the reapers were rejoicing together. How warm the mutual love that prevailed everywhere, between the missionaries and their multiplying flocks! What mutual confidence! What hopes of progress, which, nevertheless, were overtaken year after year, by the beautiful reality.

How is it now? We do not fully know. It does not seem that we have been frankly dealt with by the agents whom year by year we have put in charge with our work, with instructions each year to report to us the condition of their trust. But we begin to find out that for these many years the great and hopeful work, in some most important parts of the field, has been brought to a standstill; that the mutual love aud confidence between the missionaries and the Mission-churches has been changed into a relation of mutual distrust; that in the very metropolis of Turkey there has been exhibited a miserable scandal—the missionaries going to law against their own converts before an unbelieving Turk, for the possession of a paltry bit of real estate; that the building of churches at that great center has been inexplicably hindered, even when funds have been provided by individual enterprise and self-denial; and, finally, that young men of unimpeached standing in the churches of the Mission, coming to this country on their own responsibility, and in the exercise of their unquestionable rights, to seek the highest education, have been pursued by missionaries with detractions and efforts to defeat them in their undertaking. And this course, involving not only detraction but dissimulation toward the young men, has been countenanced at the Mission-House in Boston. The situation may be summed up in the sorrowful declaration of Dr. Cyrns Hamlin, that the work of forty years is in danger of being lost.

The distress of mind with which I recount these facts before the public is not relieved by the thought how easily the necessity of this discussion might have been avoided by a different course on the part of the Board's Executive. If only they could have apprehended that their business was only to manage the Missions, and not also to manage the Board, but rather to let the Board manage them; if, instead of turning the business meeting to which they should render full account and look for their instructions, into a four days' prayer-meeting and praise-service varied with a pious auction for raising gifts with the sounding of a trumpet, they had simply rendered their account without reserve and stepped aside to give the Board the fullest opportunity to examine, discuss, decide, with whatever additional light they could get, from whatever quarter; then the discussion might have been confined to its proper forum and the Administration would have been relieved of grevious responsibility for a sorrowful failure....

The missionaries do not like to have young men go from their churches to America or England for a higher education; and they have a right to entertain that preference. They do not think it wise; and they have a right to their opinion. They give no aid nor encouragement to such enterprises, and no one can justly demand that they should give it. Some of them have taken pains to write to people in this country, dissuading them from aiding Armenian students—a more dubious right. In some cases, letters of personal detraction have been written concerning these young Christians in a strange land, privately impunging their character in such a way that they could confront neither the accuser nor the charge. And this is, I was going to say wicked, but it is worse—it is mean. And in one instance a missionary has allowed his zeal for hindering these young men in their quest of education so far to run away with his discretion and his conscience as to involve them, together with the whole communion of the Mission-churches, in one sweeping charge of habitual mendacity. And this is not only shameful but suicidal. If this is the fruit of forty years of missionary labor, we might have saved our money for a better use; we had better recall the Mission and abandon the field. But what, even then, should we do with our thirty years' boasting of the graces of sincerity and truth that adorn our converts, making the name of Protestants the synonym of integrity wherever a Mission-church is found? But this accusation of the brethreu is unjust; and the author of it owes it to his own character, as well as to the outraged feelings of an insulted people, to make apology.

But whether they have a right or not to attempt to hinder Armenian young men from coming to America for education, there can be no doubt that this is most fatuous folly. Here have these excellent men for forty years been deepening the impression in the Armenian mind that America is an overflowing fountain of power and beneficence, of civilizalion, of Christian learning and piety. They have trained up a generation of earnest young men in their high-schools to desire knowledge and the power of doing good, more than gold; and have done all this within easy walk of a seore of seaports: and now they think that by saying No, they can preveut these young men from seeking an Amerieau education. Expedient or inexpedient, this current to and fro has got to flow, and the missionaries might much better be occupied in wisely and kindly directing it than in a futile attempt to resist it. It has got to flow, and as the return-current begins to be felt, the missionaries must make up their minds, however reluctantly, to lose that prestige of being the sole depositaries of Western learning, which has given them a more than prelatic influence over the Protestant Armenian churches, and must have faith to witness the unquestionable dangers incident to the transfer of direction and control to the hands of their own disciples.

GRAIN GAMBLERS AND Y. M. C. A.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of this city has held for nine years in the Farwell Hall lecture room a prayer meeting for reformed men, and especially those who might desire to reform. Ladies of culture, wealth and refinement, have nobly given their time and energies to this work, and have rejoiced in the knowledge that they did not labor in vain. Many were lifted out of the horrible pit of drunkenness and vice and their feet placed on the Rock through the agency of these meetings. Somewhat over a year ago complaint was made by the Y. M. C. A. that these meetings brought a very uninviting class of people about their rooms, and wished the ladies to withdraw, but a compromise was made and the work continued. Last year the Farwell Hall building was remodelled and fine rooms fitted up for Y. M. C. A. parlors, reading room, offices, etc., and the ladies were soon told they must go. On their last meeting in lower Farwell Hall the Union-Signal remarked:

"A farewell meeting of more than usually painful character was held in lower Farwell Hall last Monday. It was the last of the three o'clock gospel meetings held in that hall without interruption for the last nine years. The W. C. T. U. has, during that time, been in a certain sense the guest of the Y. M. C. A. The building of the latter association, given them by the Christian people of the city, for the accommodation of all forms of Christian and philanthropic work, has been considered by these benevolent douors as the proper shelter also for the society whose work it is to reform the drinking classes and to remove the dram shops from our streets by law.

"Little by little however in the past few years the Y. M. C. A. has given us to understand that the work of the two societies is so diverse that they cannot be consistently housed together. Within the past year their building has been, by the liberality of the Christian men and women of Chicago, improved and beautified till it has become a fit home for all good ministers, but the present management of the Association is opposed to bringing into these newly decorated halls and stairways any of the degraded beings who of all others need the salvation of Christ, consequently the W. C. T. U. has been notified that their meetings attract too many of this class and that they must seek other quarters.

"The farewell to this home of so many hallowed memories was made doubly sad by the thought of this unworthy action on the part of the Y. M. C. A. This organization has no raison d'etre, no excuse for being, if its aim is not to seek and save the lost. In its fine surroundiugs it has become like the fashionable churches it was organized to supplement, and now it needs that a new society be formed to do the work of the Y. M. C. A. Bear this in mind also, gentlemen of the Association: the very class whose presence you deplore at a gospel meeting, is the class which governs Chicago to-day, which out-votes you at every election, and remands good Christian citizenship to the background whenever a public choice is made of rulers. Convert them or they will make your home a Pandemonium. If you enact the dog-in-the-manger policy at this juncture, your house may be left unto you desolate, and that speedily."

Last week Mouday the first prayer-meeting was held in the room of the Call Board, a hall opeued on a narrow street to accommodate grain speculators after the regular Board of Trade is closed for the day. This is the place where is offered a home to this prayer-meeting which the Y. M. C. A. has cast out. A Mrs. Stevens of San Francisco was present and says the daily press report some scathing words for the Y. M. C. A., in their resent action in driving the women from Farwell Hall. She believed that the angels wept at that sight. Was it not a terrible thing for Christian young men to be compelled to pass so near the place where noble women were praying with fallen men, trying to lift them out of their low place and make them men once more! Yes it was humiliating that the members of the Y. M. C. A. who professed to be doing the Master's work, should have to meet near their rooms a ragged, dirty drunkard who was seeking help to save himself from himself aud his curse, drink. She praised the ladies for their work, and spoke in most complimentary terms of the members of the Call Board, who had opened their rooms for the meetings. She spoke of the work of the ladies in San Francisco, and promised to hold up for commendation aud as a model the brokers of Chicago, who stood by the temperance women here in their time of need.

BREVITIES.

—A law has just come into force in Italy which prohibits the sale of patent medicines throughout the kingdom, unless the precise composition of the medicine is stated. This important decree has been promulgated by the Minister of the Interior, the Customs, and the sanitary authorities.

—During the last few years, it is said, the habit of opium eating has been making terrible progress in Denmark. The Dansk Nationaltidende. states that there are only here and there families in which the consumption of this drug and morphine is not habitual with one or more of the adult members,

—The name of foolscap, as applied to paper, is said to have originated in this way: During the protectorate, Cromwell had all government paper stamped with a liberty cap. After the restoration Charles II. one day asked for some paper in order to write a letter. When it was brought he noticed the stamp and asked what it meant. On being told, he said: "Take it away; none of your fool's cap for me."

—A gentleman took his little son on a railway excursion. The little fellow was looking out of the window, when his father slipped the hat off the boy's head. The latter was much grieved at his supposed loss, when papa consoled him by saying that he would "whistle it back." A little later he whistled, and the hat reappeared. Not long after, the little lad flung his hat out of the window, shouting:

"Now, papa, whistle it back again!"

A roar of laughter in the ear, served to enhance the confusion of perplexed papa.

—One of the largest ropes in thickness and length ever produced in England is that recently manufactured for service in New Zealand, where it is to be employed in hauling up ships when they run aground on the soft mud bottom there, which is occasionally the case. The rope in question is a twenty-one-inch white manila hawser, 120 fathoms long, and composed of nine strands of 316 yarns to the strand. Another rope, intended for the same purpose, is a fifteen-inch hawser of the same material and length, and composed of nine strands with 164 yarns to the strand. Twelve-inch ropes are the largest size ordinarily made.

—An intelligent canary, which belongs to a Nova Scotian damsel, one day found the water in its glass too low to reach, and, after several unsuccessful attempts to drink, hopped on its perch and sat quietly for a few minutes. Suddenly it turned round, pulled a loose feather out of its tail and dipped the tip into the water, putting its claw crosswise on the feather, and wetting its beak in the moisture. The canary repeated the trick several times, till its thirst was quenched.

A kind-hearted she-elephant, while walking through the jungle where the spiey breezes blow soft o'er Ceylon's Isle, heedlessly set foot upon a partridge, which she crushed to death, within a few inches of the nest containing its callow brood. "Poor little things!" said the generous mammoth, "I have been a mother myself, and my affection shall atone for the fatal consequences of my neglect." So saying, she sat down upon the orphaned birds. MORAL.—The above teaches us what home is without a mother; also, that it is not every person who should be entrusted with the care of an orphan asylum.

A very extensive mine of rich iron ore has been discovered in the south end of Cache county, Utah, and about 75 miles east by northeast is a mountain of coal, named the Mammoth coal bed. The projected route of the Utah and Wyoming railroad passes in close proximity to both. These coal beds are said to be the largest beds of coal discovered in America. The veins lie at an angle of 22 degrees, dipping to the west, with white sandstone intervening. There are sixteen veins of coal in sight, the smallest being six and the largest seventy feet thick, altogether about 400 feet in thickness, and eight miles in length, running north and south. The coal is very bright, free from slate and dirt, and is pronounced cannel coal. This coal has been tested in various ways, and is said to excel, for steam and heating purposes, any coal yet discovered in this western country.

Dr. W. G. K. Fritzgaertner, geologist and mineralogist to the government of the Republic of Honduras, has supplied some very interesting information as to the mineral resources of the country. Among other things he says: "Whole mountains of fine magnetic iron ore exist both near the coast and in the interior. The natives use clean and fine ore directly in their forges. The iron produced is of a very superior quality, and greatly resembles steel in all its characteristics. Coal is very abundant on the Atlantic coast near the river Ulua, the quality being a semi-bituminous kind. As the quantity seems to be quite considerable, this mineral will in the near future become a valuable article of commerce along the Caribbean coast. Mining property is not taxed, and there is no duty on the exportation of ores or bullion; while the government is so anxious to encourage the industry that it will render all assistance in its power for the transportation of machinery, and will free it of import duties."

The old question which has been hotly disputed for centuries, as to what becomes of the pins, is now in a fair way of being solved by science. Mr. Irving Bishop, the English thought-reader, recently accepted a challenge to give a proof of his attainments with a result which opens a large field for possible effort in the future. A Liverpool gentleman secreted a pin within a radius of five hundred yards of a certain hotel, and Mr. Bishop agreed to discover it. He was put in charge of a clergyman while the challenger went off and located the pin. At the appointed time the gentleman in question was blindfolded, and Mr. Bishop, connected with him by a piece of piano wire which acted as a thought conductor, began to look for the pin. After exploring a number of streets, the thought-reader entered the hotel, climbed several pairs of stairs, and found the pin in a window sash of a balcony. There is, of course, a link still missing in the chain that will make pin-finding an exact science; it will be necessary for the pin-finder to make his explorations without the help of another person. Perhaps this may be done by attaching him to a pin cushion by a piano wire. The marvels of science are apparently inexhaustible.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

FARM NOTES.

HOW TO FORETELL THE WEATHER.

A. J. DeVoe, of Hackensack, N. J., sends to the Farmers' Club of the American Institute the following nine rules, by which, it is said, a person in any part of the northern hemisphere (north of fifteen degrees of latitude) can form an accurate opinion of the wind and weather for a hundred miles around him:

1. When the temperature falls suddenly, there is a storm forming south of you.
2. When the temperature rises suddenly, there is a storm forming north of you.
3. Wind always blows from the region of fair weather toward a region where the storm is forming.
4. Cirrus clouds always move from a region where a storm is in progress toward a region of fair weather.
5. Cumulus clouds always move toward a region where a storm is forming.
6. When cirrus clouds are moving rapidly from the north or northwest, there will be a cold rain storm on the morrow; if it be winter, there will be a snow storm.
7. The wind blows in a circle around a storm, and when it blows from the north the heaviest rain is east of you; from the south, the heaviest rain is west; from the east, the heaviest rain is south; from the west, the heaviest rain is north of you.
8. The wind never blows unless rain or snow is falling within 1,000 miles of you.
9. Whenever a heavy white frost occurs a storm is forming within 1,000 miles north or northwest of you.—Selected.

A FEW FACTS IN RAISING CORN.

Corn can be raised successfully throughout forty degrees each side of the equator, except on the summit of high mountains and some parts of the torrid zone. A few simple facts about its production are worth remembering. The land for corn should be plowed deep and the earth pulverized. Start the plant as soon as the ground will permit. Use none but the best seed.

In its reproduction the flower is separated into two parts, the tassel, the male part, at the top of the stalk, and the silk, the female flower, located intermediately on the stalk, arranged thus in nature so that the pollen from the tassel might fall upon the silken flower and make it fruitful. On the isolated stalks of corn the silk receives so little of the pollen from its own tassel that but few grains come to perfection; hence the importance and necessity of having a number of stalks near by or in the same field, in order that perfect ears and a full crop may be made, Some farmers still assert that there is nothing in these facts.

The roots of corn grow much faster than the stalk at first, measuring sometimes a foot long before the stalk is half that length. The brace roots should not be broken in working, as they support the stalk, and when broken they make a heavy draught on the plant to reproduce them.

The distinct varieties are the white flint, the yellow flint, the gourd seed, sugar corn and pop corn. The first is regarded the best for bread, while the yellow corn is regarded most nutritive and answers the best for stock.—Western Rural.

A correspondent of the New York Herald suggests that persons owning shade trees that are infested with worms at once bore a hole in the trunk of each tree, extending to the center or heart, and then fill up the hole with pulverized sulphur and plug it up tight. In a short time the sulphur will spread through all the branches, and the worms will soon disappear.

A writer to the Prairie Farmer tried the experiment of flat and hill culture on vines. This year squashes, pumpkins, melons and other vegetables were planted, part in hills and part flat. He recommends the level cultivation as the best, as hot weather did greater damage in the hills. In ten days the difference was very marked. Although the flat cultivation was superior for a dry season, the hill system is preferable for a wet one.

Mr. Isaac Page, of Lowell, has an apple tree which never blossoms, and yet is loaded every year with fruit. Grafts from it blossom. The seeds are frequently partially or wholly exposed to view at the outside of the "blow" end of the fruit, while the center of the fruit is as compact as that of a turnip.

Another fraud that has been practiced is worked as follows: A farmer receives a circular through the mails, stating that a new variety ot winter wheat has been discovered, and the seed will be furnished free of charge, until a good crop of said wheat is raised, on condition that he sends $1 to pay for packing, etc. The dollar is sent, and nothing more is heard of it.

The quality of wool is tested by taking a lock from the sheep's back and placing it on a surface representing an inch in length. If the spirals count from thirty to thirty-three in that space, the wool is equal to the finest "Electoral" or Saxony wool. The staple is inferior accordingly as it takes a lesser number to fill the same space.

An Illinois farmer, in a communication to the Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph, says that fresh, clean hog lard, rubbed three or four times on any kind of warts on horses or cattle, will remove them. I have removed the warts time after time, and had never been able to find the wart for the fourth application. If I should send the Latin name for lard and tell men to pay fifty cents to the druggist for about two cents' worth of good lard, this remedy would be oftener used. For all wounds and bruises, cracks on cows' teats, etc., it is better than any patent linimcnts or ointments.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN THE COILS;

—OR—

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D.D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

MASONIC OATHS,

BY

E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

A masterly discussion of the Oaths of the Masonic Lodge, to which is appended "Freemasonry at a Glance," illustrating every sign, grip and ceremony of the Masonic Lodge. This work is highly commended by leading lecturers as furnishing the best arguments on the nature and actual character of Masonic obligations of any book in print. Paper cover. 207 pages. Price, 40 cents,

The Master's Carpet.

BY

E. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity ☐ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commaudery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Sunday trains on the Housatonic Railroad were stopped by the Massachusetts authorities. The clergymen of Berkshire county, Mass., presented a petition against the running of trains Sunday, but the railroad company disregarded them

—A crush and panic occurred Wednesday afternoon at the New York side of the new Brooklyn bridge at the short flight of steps leading to the main footway. For some reason those coming from Brooklyn halted near this spot, but were pushed rapidly forward to the edge. Suddenly those in front were precipitated downward, and persons in the rear were tumbled on the victims three or four deep. The cries, shrieks, and the moans of the throng were appalling, and in the struggle the clothing of hundreds of persons were torn to shreds. Fifteen were killed and hundreds were wounded.

—At Schuylerville, N. Y., Monday of last week Nicholas Vandenburgh, who went to the aid of a laborer suffocated by gas in a well, perished, and his wife, who tried to help both men, also died.

—In the Belleville (Ill.) mining district a band of women 300 strong went to the Rose Hill and Reinicke mines, and prevented the men from going to work. In the latter mine thirty-five persons were kept confined in the pit, and Colonel Reinicke, the proprietor, was imprisoned in a little shanty. A train containing a company of militia rolled up at this juncture, and the striking miners fired several shots, wounding one of the soldiers. The troops were ordered to fire, which they did, and pursued the rioters, who fled. One of the latter was shot through the head and killed, and many others, it is thought, were wounded. The women quickly dispersed, ond several of their husbands and brothers were arrested.

—Striking miners at Des Moines, Iowa, offended at the action of Scott Davis (colored) in not joining the strike, blew up his dwelling with powder early Thursday morning, injuring all the inmates, none fatally.

—A special, June 3, from Toronto, Ont., says: Fires were started in eight different parts of this city within one hour tonight by fire-bugs, and it was thought at one time tnat the whole city would soon be in flames. After raging several hours all the fires were extinguished. Several tramps were arrested in the act of firing places to secure plunder.

—Senor Castelar, at a banquet in Madrid, Friday night, attended by statesmen of Spain and Portugal, advocated a union of both countries; but the Portuguese Viscount Almendinka said there could be no union betwcen a distracted nation like Spain and a tranquil state like Portugal.

—The Pope's Peter's pence are decreasing so rapidly that he has addressed a note to the bishops urging them to exhort the faithful to more hearty support the Holy See.

—A riot occurred on the evening of the 28th, among the crowds assembled on the streets, and the mob assaulted the Director of Police, who was endeavoring to restore order. Detachments of Cossacks were called out and dispersed the rioters, a hundred of whom were arrested. The riot did not arise from political causes. The mob was composed of drunken men, who capsized a private equipage and tore down and trampled on the imperial colors. It was in consequence of this riot that the illumination was prohibited on Tuesday night.

—The outbreak against the Jews, which occurred at Rostoff, Russia, on the 22d, on account of the murder of a Russian by a Jewish publican, was quelled the same night, after 130 houses belonging to the Jews had been destroyed. Fifteen of the rioters were killed by troops.

—The six indicted dynamite conspirators at London are to be tried June 11, by a special court, over which the Lord Cheif Justice, Coleridge, will preside.

—It is reported that the hostile Apaches have evaded Gen. Crook's expedition on the Mexican border, owing to the failure of the Mexican forces to cooperate.

—Thomas Caffrey, another of the Phœnix Park murderers, was hanged at Dublin Saturday, making the fourth of those convicted of that crime, who has now suffered the extreme penalty.

—A dispatch to the Dublin Mail from Rome says the Pope will, if necessary, follow up his recent circular to the Irish Bishops, in relation to the agitation in Ireland and the Parnell fund, by suspension from their functions of all ecclesiastics who disobey the commands of the circular.

—A cyclone struck the town of Greenville, Hunt county, Texas, early Saturday evening, destroying 150 houses and injuring many more. One person was killed and a number were hurt severely. A heavy rain followed the wind-storm, and considerable damage was done to exposed property.

—In addition to requiring that the queen of Madagascar recognize the protectorate of France and concede the right of Frenchmen to hold property in her country, the French government will demand an indemnity of 1,500,000 francs for the expense of the expedition to Madagascar.

—Incendiaries in eastern Indiana are continuing the policy of burning the barns of farmers who have supplied themselves with self-binding reaping-machines.

—On the occasion of the grand fete in celegration of the coronation, at Petroffsky Park, near Moscow, on Saturday, five persods were crushed to death in the crowd. The emperor and empress drove through Moscow unattended.

Mr. Weed's clear, concise statement of the facts in the case of Morgan's abduction, is regarded with more than idle curiosity by the lights of the craft, as appears from the fact that a "Sovereign Grand Inspector General" in the brotherhood stained with the blood of murder, replies in a book of 400 pages which he avers to be the result of "assiduous labors," protracted through thirty seven years, aided by "MANY PERSONALLY CONCERNED IN THE ABDUCTION."

Send your orders for a supply of Mr. Weed's pamphlet for yourself and neighbors and read what shakes the Secret Empire and makes its "Sublime Princes" tremble on their thrones.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to oure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to oure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medioine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be suffioient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on eaoh bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deoeived.

HON. S. C. POMEROY

Of Washington City, twelve years U. S. Senator from Kansas, will speak in Farwell Hall, Thursday, June 21st., at 8 o'clock P. M. on the

"MISSION OF THE AMERICAN NATION TO MANKIND."

He will discuss the danger of the sentiment "No God in human affairs," of secret societies, and monopolies in a Republican nation; and advocate prohibition, arbitration versus war, and right of all to citizenship, including Chinese and Indians. SEATS FREE.

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

Those who can be at the annual business meeting June 21st, should need no special invitation or urging. Notice has been given, attention called to the important interests to be considered and the address in the evening of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, and this should be sufficient to insure a large attendance at 10:30 A. M. in Carpenter Hall, and at Farwell Hall in the evening.

GOOD

for all readers will be found the articles by Prof. E. D. Bailey and General Phelps; and it is not detracting from the excellence of other contributions to mention them. Neither should any put down this number until the article on President Finney written for the Advance by the pastor of the old First Church of Oberlin, is read and well digested. But especially is attention called to the extract from Mackey's Encyclopedia which shows where centers the tremendous power of the Masonic lodge. Every candid Mason should read and carefully ponder this article.

DAVID EDWARDS

will be remembered in our next with a fine portrait and biographical articles from Prof. Lewis Davis, D.D., ex-Bishop Milton Wright and the editor. Gen. Phelps' speech and the proceedings of the revival convention of Vermont will make a grand number.

The "Inquisitor Commander" and "Sovereign Grand Inspector-General" who is personally conducting the investigation of the Massachusetts State almshouse at Tewksbury has probably a powerful Butler squint towards the White House in his management of the affair, since the inquiry is conducted so as to make the greatest political effect and does not avoid making unjust impressions upon distant readers. The institution is for the accommodation of paupers of a low grade who cannot be supposed to be the most elegant in manner or person. Butler's witnesses are represented as of moral character corresponding to the appearance of the inmates. The tanning of human skins which has horrified the country was done by the medical students whose dissecting rooms were supplied from the poor-house—an offense which has been practiced for many years. The management at Tewksbury are doubtless far from perfection in many respects, but the editor of the Golden Rule of Boston, after a careful personal inspection, believes there is far more to praise than to blame, and the condition of the establishment, all things considered, was thrifty and wholesome.

The managers of Perdue University, Lafayette, Ind., have found a successor to Pres. E. E. White and other members of the faculty of that institution who would not be "boycotted" by a Masonic State legislature and give up for the sake of a portion of the public funds their convictions of duty toward the students put under their charge. They had put secret societies out of the institution as bound by conscience to do, as well as by their pledge of office; the lodge retaliated by law suits, and these failing, by refusing an appropriation to a public institution. A new president, James H. Smart, and two other members of the faculty have been chosen, men whom the circumstances mark as tools of politicians and Freemasons, who will not hesitate

"——To bend the pregnant hinges of the knee
That thrift may follow fawning."

Governor Porter was present at the meeting and signified that there would be no trouble in securing a temporary loan of funds to carry on the institution until the legislature should meet. No doubt of it. Every lodge in the State will contribute to swell the fund. But what kind of a place will it be to send young people?

Timothy Kelly was hanged in Dublin on Saturday, making the fifth execution for the Phœnix Park murders. Several young men in the crowd outside the jail precincts created some sensation by falling upon their knees and praying for the curse of God upon James Carey, the informer, whose testimony convicted these assassins of lodgery. Fagin, the third member of the "Invincibles" who paid with his life for obedience to the unknown superiors of his secret clan, on mounting the scaffold told his priest that he hoped Irishmen would avoid secret societies. Wretched man! Too late he learned how fatal may be such an alliance. But the lesson of the fatal gallows of Kilmainham jail will not be lost upon living Irishmen. Order and law are superior to the blind and headlong desire of mad men; and no boon of liberty or peace is likely to be gained in an enlightened country by the dagger.

The French nation has a fit of Jingoism. The "brilliant" foreign policy of Beaconsfield, that precipitated England into two wars of conquest in remote corners of the world, and against comparatively feeble governments, was a failure and a disgrace; but Frenchmen may follow the same counsels and succeed for they have as much enterprise as the English with much less conscience. So French gunboats have been bombarding ports in Madagascar, and French armies are threatening to overrun and possess in the name of the new Republic the kingdom of Anam, lying between Siam and the China Sea, with a population of five million and an area larger than Great Britain. China has an interest in these regions, and is resisting the French invasion of Tonquin. But then there are likely to be more formidable antagonists. The Christian queen of Madagascar has sent embassadors to this country and several courts of Europe, who have gained much sympathy for the island kingdom so lately sunken in idolatry. The property of English residents has been destroyed in the bombardment and German commerce is threatened in the Chinese waters. England, Germany and our own country will it is believed join in an emphatic protest against the short-sighted, ambitious and unjust policy of France.

It is time for another spasmodic anti-Mormon movement. The priests of that vile system are working with unchecked and impudent boldness. Some thirty missionaries are preaching among the poorest and most ignorant classes of England; and Brigham Young, Jr., said the other day in Denver that they expected 30,000 immigrants in Utah this year. They are planting colonies in Colorado and Idaho, confident of their power to hold Utah. In western North Carolina they have induced a large number of women to join them, and the baptism of their new converts is said to be attended with horrible orgies. Public indignation was so roused that at one time lynching was very properly feared by these emmisaries of infamy. We need not wait longer to prove the Utah Congressional Commission a failure. The project was perhaps all that could be expected of a Congress so largely controlled by lodge influences. It proved that something could be done with the ostensible purpose of uprooting the Mormon evil. But no one who realized the nature of that evil believed it could be cured by the means proposed; and Mormonism was never apparently so aggressive and prosperous. Let the agitation be renewed.

The relation of the papacy to the United States army through Mrs. Gen. Sherman is made a matter of public note again. A correspondent writing from a Western Indian agency, charges that the Catholic church is getting large sums from the government besides buildings at the agencies where it can get a foothold. Abandoned army posts with brick buildings and barracks and thousands of acres are turned over to a few sisters who are employed in teaching a score or two of Indian children. The Interior speaks plainly upon this evil: "The wife of the commanding-general is a devout Catholic, and it has been charged for some time past that her influence has been widely felt. Certain it is that the priests enjoy special favor in the military department of our government, and that other things being equal, they get the preference. In fact they get it in cases where their claims are not equal. The Romish superstition, like Mormonism, is more a business capital than it is religion. Its purpose is to grasp property and power. The evangelical denominations are devoted to doing missionary work for the good of the people. The hierarchy are devoted to schemes of personal and ecclesiastical ambition, for their own aggrandizement. Each succeeds best in the line of its purposes and labor. The priests must be watched as persistently as any other class of schemers. They are perpetually plotting for power and gain."

OBJECTIONS TO SECRETISM.

BY E. D. BAILEY.

These objections are not urged against the common privacies of life, which are everywhere recognized as lawful and right, but against all organized secrecy, against secret societies, whose true character is sought to be covered from public scrutiny by pledges of secrecy required of initiates. The characteristics of these orders are (1) a pledge of concealment required before initiation (2) a pretence of mystery in the various degrees (3) pledges of fidelity to one another (4) a mock pretence of imparting important religious and moral lessons.

If the things done and proposed by any society are themselves commendable and if the instruction given is of any real worth, there can be no apology for resorting to sworn secrecy. The scientist does not resort to secrecy in teaching science, the moralist in teaching morals, or the Christian in teaching religion. The value of the things taught is relied upon to impress the lessons.

The leading objection to secrecy is that, in fact, the secrets themselves are objectionable. In all secret societies every commendable thing is made public and the secrets are things which, if made public, would bring the societies into disrepute. The initiatory ceremonies are objectionable, the obligations are productive of clannishness, the secret signs of recognition allow the evil-minded to appeal secretly to sworn "brothers" to help them escape from justice and the whole system is exempt from public scrutiny and public criticism on the ground of secrecy. Each of these objections is weighty.

The existence of one secret society opens the door for others. Laws and public sentiment which tolerate one must tolerate all, for in the nature of the case, they all claim exemption from public examination, they all profess good purposes and, in theory at least, they must all appear outwardly alike. The same difficulty exists in fastening evil upon any of them, for, whatever their deeds may be, they are under cover of secrecy. The Illuminati by which the French Revolution was promoted, the Fenians, under whose shadow the Invincibles have kept Ireland in a turmoil and reddened her soil with blood, the Knights of the Golden Circle by which treason was promoted in our own country, the Ku Klux Klan, whose masks and bloody weapons spread terror in the South, the Molly Maguires, foul plotters against labor and industry in Pennsylvania—all these were innocent looking secret societies, modeled after Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, professing good works, brotherhoods exempt from public criticism by the cover of secrecy, but all contained in themselves the dynamite of human depravity by which the safety of the people was endangered and the stability of government was shaken. The principle of secret societies is evil and every patriot should oppose them. There arguments bear against Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship. Do these societies teach pure morals? Then why conceal their teachings? Do they exist to practice charity. Charity needs no concealment. Do they teach pure religion? Pure religion has no occasion to be hidden. Do they require only lawful co-operation among their members, enforced by no sinful obligations? Then there could be no apology for maintaining such a pretence of mystery. Are they patriotic? Patriotism has no occasion to blush when brought to light. Are they Christian societies? Christ was light and Christianity has always done its work openly. What good deed needs concealment?

Let us question again. Are the teachings of these orders impure? Then they would love secrecy. Do they practice selfishness? Then they would prefer to cover it by a mantle labeled charity. Is their religion deistical and not Christian? Then they would seek to conceal the fact from the public. Do they expect their members to help each other, right or wrong? Such an agreement would demand the greatest stealth. Do they combine together to promote the political preferment of their members? The fact must not be known, for the purpose would be defeated by publicity. Are they anti-Christian societies? The Christian church must be kept in ignorance of the fact.

No good cause, no good institution ever sought to cover its good deeds by obligations of secrecy; no bad cause, no bad institution, ever coveted publicity of its deeds. Men who feel that their deeds are covered from the public are under a temptation to give the reins to sin and cast off restraint. Secret societies are no exception. Every member knows that things are done in secret which would be condemned if made public.

A VIRTUAL ADMISSION.

BY GEN'L. J. W. PHELPS.

If New England clergymen and statesmen remain quiet any longer respecting an evil so monstrous as Freemasonry, it is a virtual admission on their part that their original institutions, and the Republic which is based on them, are supposed to have need of that privileged institution for their maintenance. That is, popular liberty is possible, so long as there is a secret privileged class of men to keep it in order! The church and the school-house alone, will not answer this purpose; there must be a hidden deposit of State secrets, an oath-bound organization, a legion of honor, a kind of titled nobility, beyond the reach of the people, which is to shape their government and direct their destiny.

This privileged class of men are to escape the odium attached to the idea of privilege in a Republic by the concealment of secrecy. They can walk and act freely among the people, taking a selfish advantage from every popular movement, and at the same time be screened from all responsibility by membership with a conspiracy which though infamous in its character, impudently passes itself off as ancient and honorable. Such is the character of the conservative institution which New England is tacitly palming off upon the country as essential to Republican government! It is an institution that can be maintained only at the expense of both the Christian religion and a moral education.

The original free institutions of New England, when finally ratified by the Revolution, reacted upon France and Europe with a most tremendous force, and while breaking asunder the ligatures of an old, corrupt society, these at the same time roused into new life the principle of secret associations. This principle in return reacted upon the United States, and aimed all its secret spite against Washington and the men of his class. It has not only destroyed Federalism, but is trying to destroy every other conservative element of society except its own. And it is now acting from the United States upon Europe through Ireland, with dynamite and the assassin's knife. Our New England divines and statesmen by sustaining Freemasonry, are inciting Jacobinical efforts against the open acknowledged political institutions of England, and against Christian civilization everywhere. It is in vain that a New England man as Minister from the United States, takes a stand against dynamite as a political force, so long as New England favors the associations that employ such forces. It is an empty mockery, a wretched farce, for a New England man to array himself against the fruits of secret association while harboring and sustaining the associations themselves. Nothing is so shallow and pitiable as the man in office who does not see the logical consequences of his own position. General Butler, of the thirty-third degree, is not the only New England man who must substitute impudence for statesmanship so long as such an institution as Freemasonry is held as ancient and honorable.

The Minister in Europe from the United States at the present day who represents our government as a free Republic and not as a Masonic lodge, worked and sustained by a secret, titled class of men, is simply engaged in misrepresention. It should be remembered that while the houses of Parliament have at one time been threatened with a blow-up from Jesuits, the threat that is now made to level them with dynamite comes from secret associations of the United States. The noise that was made in the political world by the attempted exploit of the Jesuits is not forgotten yet, though after an interval of centuries, while the Masonic Guy Fawkes that is plotting the destruction of Christian civilization—is quiety harbored and encouraged by pious New England men while our American Ministers in old England empigrammatically deprecates the use of dynamite in politics! Masonry in New England religion will do, but dynamite and bowie knives in politics are really almost too bad!

To say that these modern Brutuses are not bred and fostered in the Masonic lodge, is as much as to say that Christians are not reared and fostered by the church. The lodge is a political institution that teaches threats, vengeance, and murder as a sacred religion, better even than that of the church. Why, therefore, should it not teach the use of dynamite as a work of charity?—as an evidence of the brotherly love that is secured by the obligations of a barbarous oath? Where the Jesuitical virtue of obedience is made the first of duties, as it is in the lodge, a train is laid that may easily lead to the blow-up of houses of Parliament, or to any institution however valued or cherished by men.

The late civil war against our government could hardly have been inaugurated without the aid of the Masonic lodge. And after surrounding our Capitol with more skeletons, probably, than surrounds any capital of Europe, what has it accomplished but what the world already knew before, viz., that slavery is not permissible or possible under free institutions and Christian civilization? The church of New England was formerly the agent under which our free institutions were established at home and recommended to Europe; but it is now the Masonic lodge that from our midst commends to the nations of Europe that terrible instrument of intimidation and ruin, dynamite. The lodge religion that abolishes hell from the future world, substitutes dynamite in this.

It is time that these men of New England who bear the title of Reverend and Honorable should be classified, in order that the people may know who it is of them that are giving active support to the Masonic lodge. Whoever they are, they are teaching the people to look to the devil for getting possession of the kingdoms of the earth; or at least of the government of the United States.

Massachusetts is no longer the republic of former years. Its government is Masonic; and General Butler of the thirty-third degree is a proper and fit head for that government. And the question is soon to be decided whether he will not be found as fit a head for the United States, owing to its Masonic condition, as he is for Massachusetts.

WHEN SHALL WE WIN?

BY DAWSON BURNS.

When shall we win? Why, when we fire
Straight to the mark, and never tire;
When we hold fast, as we've begun,
And still work on till all is done.

When shall we win? When filled with zeal,
We face the foe of human weal,
And flinging to the wind each fear,
God's trumpet call alone we hear!

When shall we win? When we're content
To die, nor to retreat consent;
Resolved to shun the recreant's shame,
And rather choose a martyr's name.

When shall we win? 'Tis best to say—
"What can we do, from day to day?"
With truth, and faith in truth, we dare
Not faint, or falter, or despair.

The cause of right is charged to win—
Omnipotence is not with sin—
Since God is King, his cause will see
The light and crown of victory.

Be this our care: that we endure,
'Tis this will keep our conscience pure,
And when the righteous cause has won,
We, too, shall hear the words, "Well done!"

HOBBYISTS.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

"Don't want to make a hobby of it" defines the popular hobby of a time-serving generation of the dignitaries of the church and of the State. When one living issue, most important of a dozen very important questions, is studiously kept in the background, on the above plea, we are led to ask, do not these men get astride of a very popular and very cheap hobby and thus ride around duty? Were they half as fearful to offend God as they are to offend men, and so meet with crosses in the course of plain duty toward both, this plea never would have been thought of. When men, through fear and worldly policy, select the most popular from among the moral issues, and carefully evade the unpopular question, though of paramount importance, they make as many hobbies as they ride popular questions. While such people ride on the popular hobbies, the man of conscience and of principle goes on foot and bears the cross beside.

According to these modern Solons Elijah was a hobbyist, and, indeed, all the real reformers that ever lived. When a popular evil gains a firm footing in the church, in the State, and in every avenue of our social system, and only a genuine hero like a Wycliffe or a Luther dares attack it, he is always a hobbyist in the eyes of a catering, cringing coward. One of the most abused of maxims is that "discretion is the better part of valor." Were true discretion a personal intelligence, he would blush to hear his name pronounced by the skulking time-server, who calls moral cowardice by his fair name. It was modern discretion that prompted the disciples in time of danger to follow Jesus afar off, and Peter to deny his Lord.

One of the special injunctions of Jesus was, "Fear not them who kill the body and have no more that they can do." The fear of man is as much forbidden as lust or profanity. It "bringeth a snare," and makes a man contemptible and weak. It is very convenient to one of these fearful souls to skulk from the pending conflict, and parrot like cry hobby, while the faithful "endure hardness as good soldiers" of the great Captain of their salvation. Men (?) without either courage or discrimination can do this, while men of souls "wrestle against wicked spirits in high places; against the rulers of the darkness [lodges] of this world." Shame on the echoes of our times, who, in the heat of combat, cringe behind fat livings, great reputations, and unscriptural, if not profane titles, gotten by catering to Ahabs and Jezebels, to the grief of the Elijahs now on the field of conflict. You may put to their credit, however, the great ability to pronounce the word hobbyist in the most scholarly way.

"If," said the late Daniel Webster to a friend, "religious books are not widely circulated among the masses of this country, and the people do not become religious, I do not know what is to become of us as a nation."

The thought is one to cause solemn reflection on the part of every patriot and Christian. If truth be not diffused, error will be; if God and his Word are not known and received, the devil and his works will gain the ascendancy; if the evangelical volume does not reach every hamlet, the pages of a corrupt and licentious literature will; if the power of the Gospel is not felt through the length and breadth of the land, anarchy and misrule, degradation and misery, corruption and darkness, will reign without mitigation or end. Religious papers are as valuable as religious books. Who will try to scatter them before the month passes away?—Y. M. C. A. Monthly Bulletin.

MASONIC INSURANCE.

This peculiar kind of insurance is worthy of special scrutiny because it requires its beneficiaries to wade through a sea of human depravity in the shape of degrading initiation ceremonies in order to enjoy its blessings. The last annual report of the "Masonic Mutual Relief Association of Central Massachusetts" is before us and furnishes us figures to judge of the good of this particular kind of insurance. Since its organization 2,827 persons have joined it, 113 have died and 129 have been dropped for non-payment of assessments. From this it appears that while 113 persons were fortunate enough to die before they got tired of the heavy assessments, 129 wearied of the business before they died and now must lose all they have invested, i. e., the 113 have profited at the expense of the 129. During the past year 14 died and 26 withdrew. The present total membership is 2,585 and they were assessed during the year $32,697.55, an average of $13 per member for an insurance of $2,000. There is certainly nothing in such figures to tempt one. If we add to this expense the initiation fee for joining the lodge, the annual dues in the lodge and attendant expenses, we shall find that Masonic insurance is of the most expensive kind and is the least desirable.

HUMBUGS.

BY MRS. L. R. DE WOLF.

This is an epoch remarkable for its many and various deceptions. Every wonderful thing, good and bad, is bruited abroad on the wings of the wind. We have astonishing machines for every department of business, they come to us under such flaming recommendations that we think they surely must be valuable. We buy them and sometimes find out that their chief merit consists in being in our way.

Or we are ill. We look over the long list of medicines advertised in all the papers and decide that this one, or that one, is adapted to our case. We try it; perhaps for weeks, or months, and wonder we are not well; but still the old difficulty remains. We grow discouraged and desist, leaving nature to have her own way, and recover.

If deceptions ended with machinery and patent medicines it would be well—but when once the fever of progression begins, it will have its run through every department of trade, and even infect morality and religion. It is not enough that purity be chastity, it must be modified and mixed up with just a little flavor of sin "for a relish," and there is a remedy ready for every ill of life. And then the good old Puritan ways of keeping the Sabbath are too close, so we must break loose enough to attend the concert in the Opera House, or to visit our best friends, it will be "all right," for the minister says this, and conscience can step aside just for this once.

Nor does it stop here. We have been too rigid in our theology, have required that men should know when they passed from "death unto life," and from "sin unto holiness;" now if they subscribe to the articles of faith in our churches it is getting to be sufficient evidence of piety. Not long since I listened to the questions propounded by a pastor in an M. E. church to some converts. He rattled them off hastily and heartlessly—telling on the end of the question what the answer was, in the same ding-dong, jolly tone.

"Was this a religious rite?" I was asked.

"No!" I replied, "It is a mock initiation."

The pastor was a devotee of the lodge. Was it this lodge worship that had spoiled the young pastor? He boasted of his power over the hearts of his lady friends, as if to gain their love was a regal thing. And what matter that his wife looked on with a frown. Was he not a prince in his own house!

So goes the world to-day. Will it be improved in eighteen hundred and eighty-four, or five, or six? Will God's laws then be better kept, or his great principles of right be more observed? Will men love light instead of darkness, and holiness rather than sin? Or shall we, as a nation, still rush on with the tide of error, to our greater condemnation. Let us stop and think—then return to the old landmarks where alone there is safety for us.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT.—But the chief priests and the scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy him.

MY BRETHREN: The high priests and scribes of the lodge and the leading politicians are aiming to do to-day precisely what they were doing eighteen and a half centuries ago: the entire frame-work of the lodge by which these men gain office is as well calculated for destroying the Christian religion as if it were especially designed for that purpose.

My friends, these members of the lodge, who claim to be very righteous, "good men," while they call Christians dogs and traitors, are nothing but a modern edition of the Pharisees whom the Lord, while upon earth, in bodily presence rebuked above all other men.

My brethren, can you really believe in your hearts that an American man who would accept the title of Grand High Priest, Grand Scribe, Grand King, or any other of the grandiose titles of Freemasonry, can still be a man of character and worthy of trust and confidence?

My friends and fellow citizens! the vote is a prayer, and if you pray for Masonic priests, scribes and politicians to rule over you, your paryer will be like that of the frogs in the fable, which brought them a Grand King that devoured them.

SO MOTE IT BE!

PRESIDENT FINNEY'S RELATION TO MORAL REFORM.

It is a surprising fact that Mr. Finney, so far as we can discover, preached no sermons, delivered no addresses or lectures, exclusively devoted to the promotion of the special moral reforms of his day, with the exception of the subject of Anti-masonry, to which he gave a very thorough and exhaustive discussion. Let no one infer from this, however, that his heart and soul were not in these reforms. Neither must we infer that he regarded Masonry as a worse evil than slavery or intemperance. That, certainly, was not the case. His method was to meet, squarely, any question which came directly in his way. Masonry suddenly crossed his path in the regular line of his Christian work, and he turned aside long enough to give it a searching analysis and exposure. Mr. Finney was not a temperance lecturer, nor an anti-slavery lecturer, nor an Anti-masonic lecturer; and yet the country knew him as one of the most pronounced and powerful friends of all these reforms. Throughout his life no man's position was better understood on the subject of slavery and intemperance than his. He accepted his place at Oberlin as an anti-slavery position. When Mr. Willard Sears purchased the Marlboro Hotel of Boston as a place where free discussion of slavery and religion together might be had at a time when such reform meetings could find entrance nowhere else, Mr. Finney was urged to take the place as preacher and lecturer. He accepted for a time; but even there his preaching was not distinctively against slavery. His life illustrates the fact that a man can be a great reformer without making any one special reform his life work. He did, of course, in a multitude of instances speak out strongly on both slavery and intemperance, but it was in a detached and incidental way. Thus in his Systematic Theology he defines slave-holding as one of the "attributes of selfishness," "A denial of all rights but our own." In 1841 he used the most searching and scathing language against the abuse of the Indian by the national government, urging repentance and reform. He spoke with equal distinctness and power against the national desecration of the Sabbath, and the great sin of intemperance. On the subject of slavery he said, "The nation never had a right in their Constitution or in any other way, to recognize the lawfuleess of slavery, and guaranty the protection of States in holding their fellow-men in bondage. The compact was an utter abomination. The union was a league against God. Admitting that the Constitution does expressly contain such stipulations, can they be binding? Can a man render it lawful for him to commit murder, by promising to murder?"

As early as 1835 Mr. Finney argued that one great hindrance to revivals was the negative or compromising attitude of the churches on the subject of slavery. He said: "Their testimony must be given on this subject. They are God's witnesses. They are sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. They cannot be silent without guilt. Two millions of degraded heathen in our own land stretch out their hands, all shackled and bleeding, and send forth to the church of God the agonizing cry for help. And shall the church in her efforts to reclaim and save the world, deafen her ears to this cry of agony and despair? God forbid." At the same time, referring to the subject of temperance, he said: "The time has come that it can no longer be innocent in a church to stand aloof from this glorious reformation." The time was when this could be done ignorantly, but now, 'The man's hands are red with blood who stands aloof from the temperance cause." These noble expressions, however, all came out incidentally in Mr. Finney's regular efforts to lead men to Christ, and are all the more significant for that reason. He did not turn aside from evangelistic work to make special efforts by public lectures or otherwise to reach the general public on the subject of slavery or intemperance. The reasons for this fact are not far to seek.

I. Mr. Finney's conception of the Christian church and life involved in them all true moral reforms. The church that did not take sides with God and array itself against all forms of sin, all evils that afflict humanity, was not a true church. It was false to its divine commission. The Christian man who tampered and compromised with either organized or individual wrongs, after light had been thrown upon them, was not a true Christian. On the other hand, a man or church wholly consecrated to Christ was essentially a reformer of the most radical sort. The church of Christ is itself a reform society, and every Christian is born a reformer when he is born again. This conception of the Christian church and life springs necessarily from the essential, aggressive hostility of the gospel of Jesus to all sin. Therefore, to promote moral reform, is to promote personal righteousness. To make men true reformers is simply to make them real Christians. In this way Mr. Finney, by devoting his life simply to the winning of men to Christ, and illuminating the great truths of the gospel in their application to life, became indirectly one of the most powerful and radical Abolitionists and temperance advocates of his time. This great principle is stated in his Systematic Theology: "Saints differ from sinners" in that "saints are interested in, and sympathize with every effort to reform mankind and to promote the interests of truth and righteousness in the earth." "The good of being is the end for which the saints really and truly lives. This is not merely held by him as a theory, as an opinion, as a theological or philosophical speculation. It is in his heart; and precisely for this reason he is a saint." "The cause of peace, the cause of anti-slavery, and that of the overthrow of licentiousness must lie near the heart of every truly benevolent man." "The true saints in all ages have been reformers. The spirit of the whole Bible breathes from every page blasting and annihilation upon every unholy abomination, while it smiles upon everything of good report which promises blessing to men and glory to God. The saint is not sometimes a reformer. He is always so."

Who that believes in the gospel at all, can doubt that this is the true philosophy of reform? Mr. Finney was making temperance advocates, Abolitionists and Anti-masons, in every sermon he preached on the total self-surrender of the heart to God.

II. It must not be inferred that President Finney did not believe also in attacking special evils, or in organizations for special work, or that it was the duty of legislators and governments to suppress public wrongs. He himself was an evangelist, called of God to do a more fundamental work than lecturing against slavery and intemperance, but he was in heartfelt sympathy with all true men in that undertaking. There can be no doubt that if he were alive to-day his voice would be heard in thunder tones against the specific and intrinsic evils of the liquor league of this land, and the time-serving, imbecile timidity of our political managers on that subject. He abhorred the image of men whose summum bonum is political party triumph. The liquor-dealers of to-day, the country over, have, by their attitude toward law, placed themselves fairly and squarely within the lines of the "criminal classes." It is impossible that any Christian man could do otherwise than antagonize them at every point. Mr. Finney felt all this, but he also saw that mere outward reform would be of no avail. The one hope of the nation is to crucify selfishness. That was the sublime work to which he set himself. No moral reform could be successful without that. On this point he says:

"Do you ask, then, what shall we do? Shall we do nothing but let things go on as they are? I answer, No; by no means. Do if possible ten times more than ever to put away these and all the evils that are under the sun. But aim not only at the outward reforms, but also at the annihilation of selfishness; and when you succeed in reforming the heart, the life cannot but be reformed. Put away selfishness and oppression and war is no more. But engage in bringing about any other reform, and you are building dams of sand. Selfishness will force for itself a channel, and who can say that its desolations may not be more fearful and calamitous in this new modification than before. Attempting to reform selfishness and teach it better manners is like damming up the waters of the Mississippi. It will only surely overflow its banks, and change its channel, and carry devastation and death in its course." * * * *

In 1846 Mr. Finney said: "It is melancholy and amazing to see to what an extent the church treats the different branches of reform, either with indifference or with direct opposition. There is not upon the whole earth an inconsistency more monstrous, more God-dishonoring. The great business of the church is to reform the world—to put away every kind of sin. The church of Christ was originally organized to be a body of reformers. The church was designed to make aggressive movements in every direction; to lift up her voice and put forth her energies against iniquity in high and low place alike. Now, when we consider the appropriate business of the church, the very end for which it was organized, and for which every Christian vows eternal consecration, and then behold the appalling inconsistencies everywhere apparent, I do not wonder that so many persons are led to avow the solemn conviction that the nominal church is apostate from God."

"The church," he goes on to say, "with a great many ministers, has resorted to the plea of using only moral suasion to rid the world of intemperance, licentiousness, slavery, and every other legalized abomination. And pray, what can be meant by the sickening cry of moral suasion? Moral government is surely a system of moral suasion. Moral suasion includes whatever is adapted to influence the will of a moral agent. Law, rewards, punishments, are the very heart and soul of moral suasion. But if the church will not lead, if Doctors of Divinity, ecclesiastical bodies, colleges and seminaries will do nothing but get together and pass resolutions condemning the movements of reform, what shall be done? My soul is sick and agonized with such a state of things. The position of the church is one of the greatest wonders of the world, and yet we are gravely asking, 'Why do we not have revivals of religion?'"

Mr. Finney's theory of reform, comprehensively stated, was this: (a) to make men true Christians is to make them true reformers; (b) there is no true and permanent reform that does not crucify selfishness; hence (c) the church must be reformed. "First cast out the beam out of thine own eye."

V. The holding of these principles, urged as they were both by President Finney and President Mahan, led to the laying of perpetual and heavy emphasis upon the spirit of reform. It must be the spirit of Christ. The spirit and temper with which we regard other reformers who do not agree with us as to methods is of greater importance than any special effort which any party may put forth. It was this Christian principle which enabled Mr. Finney to so impress his influence on Oberlin, and which rendered his name so dear in this place. On the other hand, the fact that he made the Bible and personal religion the supreme thing, as including the germ of all moral reforms, and the fact that he confined himself to that line of work, not identifying himself with special organizations or making speeches before great anti-slavery gatherings, sufficiently accounts for the fact that he does not figure largely in the secular history of the times.

It is indeed possible that had Mr. Finney made more direct anti-slavery or temperance addresses, and attended more political and reformatory conventions, with his brethren who were engaged in the same cause, he might have widened his influence for good. And yet the wisdom of his more quiet course seems to be justified by its fruits. He, more than any other man, breathed into Oberlin the spirit of radical moral reform. True moral teachers of youth always stand nearer to the sources of power than any other class of men. Multitudes who have gone forth from Mr. Finney's influence here have gone as moral reformers and they caught the hot spirit of reform, not so much from his public attitude, as from the contagion of his godly life.—Rev. James Brand in the Advance.

—The Wesleyan informs us of the death of Rev. W. S. May, for years conference evangelist in Iowa, and a steadfast earnest friend and co-worker in Christian reform. His home was at Clarence, Iowa, but with his wife he was traveling much of the time by their own conveyance from place to place confirming the churches and preaching the everlasting gospel of the Son of God. He has been sick, we learn, for a year and a half, and a great sufferer during the time. Many will remember him as frequently attending the conventions of our reform, earnest in prayer and wise in council his strong foreign accent arousing curiosity and attention which aided the impression of his words. May the Lord raise up many in Iowa who shall follow him as he followed Christ.

A RENUNCIATION OF MASONRY.

LEAVENWORTH, Ind., May 23, '83.

MR. EDITOR:—If the following communication should be deemed worthy of a place in the Cynosure please do me and the cause of truth the favor of its insertion.

I can assure you that I am actuated by a Christian motive to obtain "more light," and if possible to obtain the unbiased judgment of your readers on the facts herein stated. I will not garble nor misstate anything.

Nearly ten years ago I became a Mason from motives of curiosity and the belief that I could be no loser in being identified with a moral (?) institution. Now, I am out of it; the how and the why will follow. I am trusting for forgiveness in the merits of a Saviour who declared, "In secret have I said nothing;" and now concieve it my duty to warn young men never to join the Masons.

"HALL OF PAOLI LODGE, No. 119, F. & A. F. M.
PAOLI, INDIANA, Jan. 5th, 1883.

The undersigned in performance of his duties as Junior Warden of this Lodge presents the following charges against Bro. Henry Gregory, a Master Mason and a member of this lodge. He charges him with unmasonic conduct and contumacy:

Specification 1st.—Bro. Henry Gregory is guilty of unmasonic conduct in failing to pay his annual lodge dues for the years 1876, 1877, 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, and in becoming delinquent to the lodge in the sum of nine dollars as shown by the Secretary's books.

Specification 2d.—That the said Bro. Henry Gregory is guilty of contumacy in this, that after the lodge had given him further time in which to pay his dues he refused to pay said dues and treated the demand of the lodge with contempt by sending the following contemptuous communication to said lodge in reply to a citation to appear before the lodge and show cause why his dues were not paid to wit.:

LEAVENWORTH, INDIANA, Dec. 16th, 1882.

"BRO. SEC'Y:—Your communication of recent date came to hand and is the only reply I have to a letter sent by me to the lodge sometime in 1877 or 1878, wherein I set forth that I had been unfortunate in losing all my money by bankruptcy of other parties and also the failuse of my health at that time. The lodge saw fit to give NO REPLY and to allow NO commiseration. I didn't think this very Masonic and I shall not imitate the example by repaying contempt now. If the lodge had answered my letter of 1878, I should have answered them by asking for a demit as soon as fortune favored me; but at that time I resolved to quit the lodge, especially as it had remission for one party I knew was not more unfortunate than I was at the time I speak of.

"I do not wish to utter recriminations, but I cannot feel under obligations to the lodge for treating me with contempt, retaining my name presumptuously on the books and rounding the matter up by demanding over $10 under penalty! Down went the gavel on me, and so mote it be.

Very truly, HENRY GREGORY."

And the said Junior Warden says that the above mentioned letter is contemptuous and in coutempt of the authority of the Paoli Lodge, No. 119, F. &. A. F. M., and of Masonry in general."

C. PRO, Jun. Warden.

I, Wm. J. Throop, Sec'y. Paoli Lodge, No. 119, F. & A. F. M., do hereby certify that the above is a full and true and complete copy of the charge on file in said lodge against Bro. Henry Gregory as the same appears aforesaid. Witness my hand and the Seal of the Lodge.

WM. J. THROOP, Sec.

I answered this by saying that if Mr. T. would state what was the amount the lodge would not remit, I would send it, but in regard to the balance of $10, I did not propose to buy at a premium their good opinions, but I would do right and all that was right in my judgment about the matter. Well, they expelled me and as chance affords, Throop & Co. are ready to do me underhanded Masonic (!) injury. They write to the lodge in this place, as I am informed, and unjustly represent me as an unworthy man. This is Masonic justice! I am now committed to the grand reform, and my voice and pen shall henceforth declare the secret abominations, the contemptible, undermining scheming of Masonry, and if I could believe myself entirely absolved from my horrible Masonic oaths I would do more. I want to know how I can be absolved from my oaths. It seems as if I am absolved anyway, since that lodge has wronged me and since I would not, at the sacrifice of manly principle, buy their sunshine friendship.

If I am wrong in being unwilling to pay them what, after waiting nearly five years to let me know (especially as they learned I was making $80 per month), and even then holding me for a sum beyond that they refused to remit, I would be glad to know it. So mote it be!

HENRY GREGORY.

Prohibition does prohibit. In proof of it, Illinois pays government tax on distilled liquors, per capita, $6.50; Ohio, $4.50; Kansas only twelve cents.

THE SOVEREIGNS OF MASONRY.

ALBERT PIKE AT THE PINNACLE OF POWER IN THE ORDER THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

The Cynosure has printed nothing that brings out with such terrible emphasis the character of the Secret Empire as an agent of despotism as the following quotation from Mackey's "Encyclopedia of Freemasonry and its kindred Sciences;" article, Supreme Council. It will be seen that the Masonic body over which the scalper of Union soldiers, Albert Pike, presides is the first and highest in the whole realm of Masonry. Its jurisdiction is the whole United States, except the States north of Mason and Dixon's line and east of the Mississippi river. Its headquarters are at Washington. Its secret mandates control the whole Masonic system, either directly or by overmastering influence. Every Mason is sworn to obedience to this Council and its head, for they must all obey their Grand Lodge, and we have yet to learn of a Grand Master who is not sworn into the higher degrees, where he falls under the power of the Sovereign Grand Commander of these Sovereign Grand Inspectors General. Let candid Masons read this article and reflect upon the fearful and despotic nature of the order to which he has sworn allegiance:

Dr. Frederick Dalcho, who, I think, may very properly be considered as the founder in the United States, and therefore in the world, of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite in its present form as the legitimate successor of the Rite of Perfection or of Herodem, has given in the Circular written by him, and published December 4, 1802, by the Supreme Council at Charleston, the following account of the establishment of Supreme Councils.

"On the 1st of May, 1786, the Grand Constitution of the thirty-third degree, called the Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General, was finally ratified by his Majesty the King of Prussia, who, as Graud Commander of the Order of Prince of the Royal Secret, possessed the Sovereign Masonic power over all the Craft. In the new Constitunion, this high power was conferred on a Supreme Council of nine brethren in each nation, who possess all the Masonic prerogatives, in their own district, that his Majesty individually possessed, and are Sovereigns of Masonry."

The law for the establishment of a Supreme Council is found in the following words in the Latin Constitutions of 1786: "The first degree will be subordinated to the second, that to the third, and so in order to the sublime, thirty-third, and last, which will watch over all the others, will correct their errors and will govern them, and whose congregation or convention will be a dogmatic Supreme Grand Council, the Defender and Conservator of the Order, which it will govern and administer according to the present Constitutions and those which may hereafter be enacted."

But the Supreme Council at Charleston derived its authority and its information from what are called the French Constitutions; and it is in them that we find the statement that Frederick invested the Supreme Council with the same prerogatives that he himself possessed, a provision not contained in the Latin Constitutions. The twelfth article says: 'The Supreme Council will exercise all the Masonic sovereign powers of which his Majesty Frederick II., King of Prussia, was possessed."

These Constitutions further declare, (Art. 5,) that "every Supreme Council is composed of nine Inspectors General, five of whom should profess the Christian religion." In the same article it is provided that "there shall be only one Council of this degree in each nation or kingdom in Europe, two in the United States of America as far removed as possible the one from the other, one in the English islands of America, and one likewise in the French islands."

It was in compliance with these Constitutions that the Supreme Council at Charleston, South Carolina, was instituted. In the Circular, already cited, Dalcho gives this account of its establishment.

"On the 31st of May, 1801, the Supreme Council of the thirty-third degree for the United States of America was opened, with the high honors of Masonry, by Brothers John Mitchell and Frederick Dalcho, Sovereign Grand Inspectors General; and in the course of the present year, [1802,] the whole number of Grand Inspectors General was completed, agreeably to the Grand Constitutions."

This was the first Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite ever formed; from it has emanated either directly or indirectly all the other Councils which have been since established in America or Europe; and although it now exercises jurisdiction only over a part of the United States under the title of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, it claims to be and is recognized as "the Mother Council of the World."

Under its authority a Supreme Council, the second in date, was established by Count de Grasse in the French West Indies, in 1802; a third in France, by the same authority, in 1804; and a fourth in Italy in 1805. In 1813 the Masonic jurisdiction of the United States was divided; the Mother Council establishing at the city of New York a Supreme Council for the Northern Jurisdiction, and over the States north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi, reserving to itself all the remainder of the territory of the United States. The seat of the Northern Council is now at Boston; and although the offices of the Grand Commander and Secretary-General of the Southern Council are now in the city of Washington, whence its documents emanate, its seat is still constructively at Charleston.

On their first organization, the Supreme Councils were limited to nine members in each. That rule continued to be enforced in the Mother Council until the year 1859, when the number was increased to thirty-three. Similar enlargements have been made in all the other Supreme Councils except that of Scotland, which still retains the original number.

FROM OTHER EDITORS.

Secret societies for treasonable purposes have received a death-blow in Ireland in two ways. First, it has been made quite clear that those secrets cannot be kept from the Government. This lesson has been several times repeated in history, but never before so emphatically as in the conviction and execution of the Phœnix Park murderers. The new law also makes it as criminal for British subjects to plot treason in a foreign land as to do so on British soil. Second, the Pope has denounced secret societies with more emphasis than ever before, and required all bishops and priests to do the same. He means to have a monopoly of the secret business. His religious orders, and especially the Jesuits, may, or we might say must, be secret societies to all but him; but there must be no secret societies that he does not control. Third, their grand mistake is made clear to all of the poor dupes who take oaths to obey blindly, even to the extent of committing murder, leaders whom they do not know, only to be given up by those leaders to be hanged when the time of trial comes; and such dupes are likely to be scarce in future.—N. Y. Witness.

Two independent military companies of Washington have recently held what they termed fairs, in public halls, to which admission fees were charged, and the attendance of the people was so large that the "National Rifles," realized a net profit of $12,000, and the "Light Infantry Corps" $30,000. The last named company ran a lottery in connection with the fair, which accounts for its larger success. It being a violation of law to conduct a lottery in the District of Columbia, the captain of the company was arrested, but the court put the fine at the nominal sum of $10, for the reason "That the law was violated in a good cause." The cause of snobbery and barbarism.—The Council Fire and Arbitrator.

Even among the Methodists the secret society question cannot be kept down entirely. Notwithstanding all their liberalism and antipathy to agitation that might disturb the quiet of easy-going congregations, occasionally conscience will compel some to speak out and insist upon being heard in opposition to these deistic institutions. This occurred recently in the Apologete; and now comes one of the lodge men with a crushing argument in the same paper to defend the lodge and annihilate all opponents. The point of this Goliah's powerful proof is this, that he, the Goliah aforesaid, is as earnest a Christian as there is one in the country, being treasurer of a Methodist congregation, and yet he is a member of the lodge and treasurer thereof also. The demonstration is overwhelming. How can a society be bad when one who belongs to it avers that he is unquestionably good?—Lutheran Standard.

The Ritual of the order of Good Templars was writen by a high Mason, Daniel W. Bristol, D. D. He died recently and Masons attended his funeral in a body. Any one familiar with Freemasonry can see its ear marks through the entire Good Templars ritual. Freemasonry is the father of the numerous secret societies, and they were brought into existence to pave the way for the oath-sworn villanies of the higher secret order.—Am. Wesleyan.

—In Leesville lodge of Henry county, Missouri, one night a few years ago, a Baptist minister who is a member of that lodge got up in a lodge meeting and began to talk about the inconsistency of Masons professing to reverence the name of God, and at the same time being guilty of gross profanity. He had not proceeded far when the Worshipful Master, who was a regular and public violator of the third commandment, ordered the reverend gentlemen down and gaveled the lodge up and abruptly dismissed it. After dismissing the lodge the Master remarked to the brethren that if any of them wanted to stay and hear a lecture on profanity they were now at liberty to do so. An eye witness says they all of one accord absented themselves from the room. A very natural action, when we remember that profanity was the very thing that made them Masons—for every oath administered in the Masonic lodges is a vain use of the name of the great God who has said, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." It is surely not right for ministers of the Gospel to bind themselves by a wicked oath to a power that enables an enemy of Christianity to make them desist from reproving sin. Brethren, better get out of the synagogues of Satan and be Christ's free men again.—Banner of Truth.

The exposition of railway appliances now being held in this city serves to call to mind how recent have been all the important improvements in the transportation of passengers, merchandise, and intelligence. The engineer is here, still hale and vigorous, who ran the first locomotive in America. So, too, is the engine he managed, yet intact and serviceable. Men are living on the banks of the Hudson, still strong and healthy, who witnessed the trial trip of the first steamer constructed by Robert Fulton. One of them remembers how he ran a race with it and came out ahead. The vessel from whose deck the first Atlantic cable was paid out is still staunch and seaworthy. The poles are yet standing, sound and erect, to which the first telegraph wires were attached. The wire that conveyed the first telephone message is yet in place and untarnished. All the great improvements in transportation have been made within the recollection of persons who are comparatively young. Queen Victoria, it is said, in making her first visit to Balmoral castle, made the journey in the same way the queen of Sheba did when she went to visit King Solomon. A historian informs us that citizens of Oxford who contemplated visiting London, two centuries ago, generally made their wills and took formal farewell of their friends. The custom of offering prayers in churches for the protection and safe return of persons undertaking so long a journey was common. Not unfrequently there were thanksgiving services on their return. There are persons in Illinois to-day who remember when more time was needed to go from Cairo to Galena than is now required to pass half-way round the globe.—Times.

FROM MISSISSIPPI FRIENDS.

COLUMBUS, Miss., May 28, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Yesterday I preached at the Hamilton church in this county and circulated reform literature. I was told that none of the young men had been drawn into secret orders. I was much pleased with their quiet and good behavior, and remaining in the house during services. The illustrated cards and printed Scripture verses sent for the Sabbath-schools by Northern friends were gladly received by them. While the county churches and individuals gave for the relief of the cyclone sufferers more than $1,300, the State Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows, convened at Columbus, gave the small sum of fifty dollars, but I see no record of any contributions from the Masons of Columbus. Now there were several Masons who suffered greatly from the storm. Where were their charitable brethren? However, they were not doing as wrong as they usually do in such cases, boasting much and giving little. I handed a Masonic minister Weed's account of Morgan's abduction. He assured me that Masonry had gone down, and I have been told since, that "it is killed dead out." Some may be deceived, but, friends, the Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias and the many secret orders now trying to push to the front are all the unholy brood of the Masonic order. The Knight Templars are only Freemasons of a higher degree. The penalty of breaking the wicked oath of this degree is to have the head struck off and placed on the highest spire in Christendom. The secret temperance orders are in reality great hindrances to the cause of temperance. To many, and I am sorry to say, even many who are Christians who are giving their influence to one or more secret organizations, it may be said, "When wilt thou cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?" E. TAPLEY.

The Chicago Legal News reports a brief note of a case before the Superior Court at Montreal, Canada, in which a plaintiff recovered $300 damages for being called a Freemason. The case was Lareau vs. La Compagnie D'Imprimerie de la Minerve. The plaintiff, Lareau, was falsely charged by the defendant's newspaper with being a Freemason, on the eve of an election in which he was a candidate. In some parts of Canada such an announcement is not received with favor, and is much the same as if a candidate in the heart of England should be charged with connection with the Invincibles. It was intended to injure and did injure Lareau's candidature before the people, and the court held that he was entitled to recover damages, and an assessment of $300 was sustained. This case should be made note of. Membership in the Masonic lodge is just as reprehensible in Chicago as in Montreal, and just as truly damages the character of public officers. We hope to see the day when public sentiment in this city will as truly endorse the propriety of such a suit and sustain such decisions.

—At the Reformed Presbyterian Synod meeting, at Allegheny city, the Committee on Temperance reported resolutions on tobacco which were unanimously adopted: 1. All officers of the church are advised to leave off the evil habit of using tobacco, as their bad example renders it difficult and discouraging to preserve youth from its use. 2. All members are admonished to abstain on the ground that it defiles the body; is a useless waste of money, and often renders a man offensive to his neighbors. 3. Its manufacture and sale is prohibited.

—The Society of Orthodox Friends held a meeting in New York during the last week in May. The subject of the education of Indian youths was discussed and it was resolved to pursue the work of Indian advancement with renewed vigor. A communication was received from the Secretary of the Interior informing the Society of Friends that the government would be pleased to send seventy-five Indian youths to the White's Manual Labor School, which is under the immediate supervision of the Society of Friends. The government will pay $167 per year for each Indian's schooling.

—Of the baptism of Ahmed Tewfik Effendi, the Church Missionary Intelligencer remarks: "This baptism is a great event. No convert of equal eminence has, it is believed, ever been won from Mohammedanism. He was in the very front rank of the Turkish hierarchy in learning and reputation." The prayers of Christians are asked that he may, like the Apostle Paul, "increase the more in strength," and prove a chosen vessel to bear the name of Christ, by voice and pen, to the followers of the false prophet.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

VERMONTERS, TAKE NOTICE!

It is suggested that every friend of reform in Vermont should send in at once to the Cynosure office for as many copies of next weeks' paper, containing the proceedings of the Anti-masonic Convention at Montpelier, June 5–6th, as he can afford to pay for and distribute. Extra copies will be furnished at 25 cents per dozen to all who may send for them.

By organizing the distribution of these copies, assigning to one man one town, and to another man another town, and so on, a large part of the State might thus receive authentic and reliable information of what the American party of the country is really doing; and thus break through the trammels which the Masonic press is fastening upon the public mind with regard to our movement. Send in your orders, friends in Vermont! The number of the Cynosure containing the report of your convention will be a rare one.

THE CONVENTION AT CAPITOL HALL, MONTPELIER.

PRELIMINARY.

MONTPELIER, Vt., June 5, 1883.

On the train coming hither yesterday were General Phelps and wife who, like myself, felt it important to be on hand early. The railroads give us free return passes, a courtesy which we receive gratefully. O. C. Bailey has been energetically stirring the waters hereabouts. The papers gave voluntary notices of the convention and there is good evidence of an interest in the movement. Persons were found on the train who rejoiced to hear of the proposed convention and one woman was so interested as to stop over to attend the meetings. She says her father who lives thirteen miles from here will be happy in hearing the news for he has always opposed the lodges.

We attended the chapel exercises of the M. E. Academy this morning and the Principal is expecting to be at the convention, as will also many of the students. The weather is beautiful and we are hoping it may continue so, to allow friends to drive in with their teams. Elder Barlow is to arrive this afternoon.

Vermont has never rescinded her laws forbidding the administration of extra-judicial oaths—laws which were passed fifty years ago for the express purpose of preventing the revival of the secret lodges. Hence every lodge is a violator of law in this State.

We learned a curious fact about the State government here this morning. There is only one of the State officers who resides here or can be found here at the capital at any time except during the brief session of the legislature once in two years. The Governor, Secretary of State, Treasurer and other officers except the Sargeant at Arms, do not pretend to keep up offices in the capital but are at their homes in remote parts of the State, and apparently have no State business to demand their attention. Vermont would seem to be the least governed State in the Union. E. D. B.

THE OPENING—VERMONT LODGES ATTEMPT A FEEBLE DISTURBANCE.

MONTPELIER, Vt., June 6, 1883.

Over a hundred people assembled inside of Capitol Hall last night to attend the opening exercises of the convention. We have no means of knowing how many assembled outside to hear an Italian band which, through the generosity of the lodge, discoursed music at the front door of the hall. If we had been consulted about having a band we should have proposed that it cease from playing during the speaking, but not being consulted we took it as philosophically as we could. Several times an effort was made by those in the hall to drown the speaker's voice, but as no heed was paid to it the high-toned gentlemen engaged in the effort desisted. The number of delegates from abroad is fair and others are expected to reach here this morning.

The convention organized by choosing Rev. D. C. Faris temporary chairman and O. C. Bailey, secretary. Brethren E. D. Bailey and J. L. Barlow addressed the meeting. Committees on permanent organization, political action, resolutions and finance were appointed. It is perfectly manifest that the lodge does not enjoy this invasion of its province, but they will doubtless become accustomed to it hereafter and submit more gracefully. E. D. B.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DECORATION DAY IN OUR VILLAGE.

This all-saint's day of the Masonic lodge was celebrated this year with as much pomp as any Popish ceremonial could be. It was a Methodist priest, I believe, who performed high mass over the bounty-jumpers and others whose graves were strewn with flowers by politicians and pension frauds. Old men and young, maids and matrons, descendants of the Puritans, all came in from the country round and wondered and admired at the grandeur of the demonstration. The veterans were as proud of their new caps as are the Knights of St. Patrick of their regalia.

Amidst the throng whose "good deeds" were blared forth to the world by a band of trumpets or other wind-instruments, went side by side the Congregational and Episcopal ministers to hear the Methodist priest say mass. Now it is my opinion that these gentlemen would never have so violated Protestant doctrines and habits if they had not been bull-dozed into it by the Masonic lodge. And what renders their servility more oppressive to sensible men, and bitter to themselves, one would suppose, was the fact that the Masonic lodge was not present in a body! It was lying back in order to escape observation. Ministers of the Protestant church had to be present as representatives of the Christian religion, while the lodge, the originator of these Popish ceremonies, was free to remain absent. That these Protestant ministers were forced to go to these oft-repeated funeral prayers and speeches by the Masonic lodge, and not by their churches, we have no more doubt than we have that these ministers knew they were violating the established usages of their respective churches. Never before since the days of Luther have such strange mummeries been practiced over Protestant graves.

Of all the sleepers in the church yard, why are soldiers alone thought worthy of these prayers and ceremonies? Why are soldiers of one war and not of others thus distinguished? Why is no distinction made between bounty-jumpers and others? To all these pertinent questions the lodge, like Iago in the play, will never answer a word, but keeps its jewel, and rejoice at the success of its trick.

Odd-fellows were present in a body, but the main-spring of the whole thing, the Masonic lodge, was not there. Too much light has been thrown upon it of late years to render its presence politic or safe. But ministers of the church of Christ consented to be present and give the holy sanctions of religion to lodge-knavery. Once admit the pious pretensions of Freemasonry. and there is no end to Decoration-day extravagances.

OBSERVER.

IRISH NATIONALITY.

SABETHA, Kans.

In an article under the above heading, also in an article on the Philadelphia Irish Convention, the Cynosure sets forth views which are evidently in favor of self-government for Ireland. I beg leave to differ.

Ireland's wrongs may be "facts," but they would not be removed by the fallacy of self-government. It is safe to say that any race that do not govern themselves individually are unfit to govern themselves collectively. It is a well known fact that Irishmen, as a race, are governed by their passions. The work of the Irish Land League, the speeches of O'Connell and Parnell, the resolutions of the National League of this country, are all one blind appeal to passion. Suppose the National Leagues were to gain their object, and Ireland were to have a democratic government with the same right of suffrage as in the United States. It could not exist. The only permanent foundation on which popular government can rest is the intelligence and morality of the constituency. This Ireland lacks. It is the intelligence and enlightenment of a country that an elective legislature should represent. Should Ireland have any large extension of her suffrage the intelligence of her constituency would be swamped by mere numerical majority, as has already been done in the large cities of this country where the foreign element rules.

The only self-government which Ireland, with the same suffrage as U. S., could establish to-day, would inevitably end in anarchy. They would learn that the step from anarchy to tyranny is natural and easy, and that "arbitrary power is most easily established on the ruins of liberty abused to licentiousness." Milton truly described the Irish agitators when he wrote:—

> "They bawl for freedom in their senseless mood,
> And still revolt when truth would set them free.
> License they mean when they cry 'Liberty!'
> For who loves that must first be wise and good."

Ireland may be "the saddest country the sun ever saw," but it would be well to remember that there is "an indissoluble union between virtue and happiness," and that "the propitious smiles of heaven can never be expected to rest on a nation which disregards the eternal rules of order and right, which heaven itself has ordained."

As long as Ireland is ruled by Rome and rum, her wrongs will never cease. When she casts out these twin evils, turns to Christ and takes his law of love and peace instead of hate and revenge, she shall indeed receive her enfranchisement; and until then the efforts of the National League will prove futile. W. C. COLEMAN.

MORE ABOUT THE BENNETT EXPULSION.

STRAWBERRY, Kansas, May, 1883.

Poor Bro. Bennett feels crushed on account of his expulsion from the M. E. church here of which he had been a faithful and efficient member for some twenty-five years.

When Shults, the preacher, first came on the circuit, a reception was given him at Bennett's, and during the evening as he and Bennett were discussing various things pertaining to the interests of the church, as fairs, festivals, etc., Bennett brought up the subject of secret societies. Said he, "And there is Freemasonry, which is a great injury to the church; but I suppose the best way to do with that is to let it alone till harvest, and then burn the tares and gather the good seed into the garner"—not knowing, of course, that Shults was a Mason. But from subsequent events it would seem as if that thrust at the lodge sealed his doom, as far as the M. E. church is concerned.

Things seemed to run smoothly, however, till Shults was returned the second year. Then it was not long till strange things were whispered through town about Bennett, and it was wondered if, after all, he was a bad man and a hypocrite. Nearly everybody seemed to think or speak disparagingly of him, and yet no one seemed to know anything particularly against him. But after public sentiment was moulded against him, mole-hills became mountains, and hard tales about him began to be circulated, which, coming to his ears, he denounced as false. They were traced toward's the minister's door, and in quarterly conference Bennett spoke of the matter, publicly accusing Shults of falsehood and slander, and threatening him with the civil law if he did not straighten matters. If he (Bennett) had done anything wrong, there was a more honorable way—to arraign him before the church. Shults proceeded with the trial spoken of in the Cynosure of Nov. 23rd, 1882, which took place Aug. 25th preceding, and mysteriously resulted in Bennett's expulsion, as aforesaid.

The minister hunted up evidence and went to a brother and got help to arrange the charges and specifications; appointed a committee of five, his personal friends, three of whom were Freemasons, one sympathizer, and one a member of another order. One Mason not appearing, a member of another order and the minister's very warm friend was chosen to fill the place. A member of a secret order was chosen as counsel, and a Mason for chairman; and that remarkable Anti-mason, Elder Wake, wrote to Shults as follows: "By no means allow Bro. B. a public trial, especially not in a public house, as school-house or church, for then the doors could not be closed against any one. If he were tried by a Freemason or Odd-fellow lodge could he expect a public trial?" This was a private letter, but it was providentially publicly read in the trial. A few weeks after this trial there were several fights among Shults' members, in so much that a prayer meeting had to be discontinued to stop them. Now Shults declared that it was for the good of the church that he brought charges against Bennett. Why did not the good of the church prompt him to take these cases in hand. But no, these were never noticed, seemingly. Bennett tried for a new trial, but was ruled out of order. He was then going to appeal to Annual Conference, but despairing of justice at the hands of the Masonic Episcopal church, gave it up. S. HART.

OBITUARY.

DANIEL LITTLE, one of the truest friends of reform in Illinois, died near his home in Genesee, Ill., on the morning of May 26th, 1883, aged sixty-five years and two months. His disease was of the heart, and for two years has caused him much suffering, and laid him aside from ordinary activity. He always welcomed the agents or lecturers who visited Genesee to further the cause of Christ against the secret lodge, was an attentive reader of the Cynosure, and frequently assisted by his means in promoting the work of the National Christian Association. The Genesee Herald of the 1st inst., speaks thus of the events of his life: "He was a native of Campton, N. H. At the age of nineteen he removed with his parents from that place to Seneca county, N. Y. In 1839 he removed from there to La Salle county. Ill., where two years later he married Mary L. Jones, who with five children survives him. He came to Henry county in 1855, where he has since resided. Soon after he was chosen deacon of the Congregational church, which office he held until the time of his death—an active and valued member of the church and society. He was a good and true citizen, a kind and obliging neighbor and a reliable friend to all who sought his advice and help. In his daily life he strove to serve and honor the Saviour whose name he loved, and in whom to the last he trusted. During all his long and painful illness he displayed much of Christian patience and resignation to the will of the Master. The last words he uttered were: 'Lord Jesus,' after which he passed peacefully away as though into slumber. Truly his end was peace."

BIBLE LESSONS.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.—No. 10.

THE FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF CHRISTIANITY.

1. By the "fundamental principles of Christianity" we mean those doctrines and duties which lie at the foundation of the Christian religion. They are like the stones which form the under-pinning of a house; taken away the house falls. So the whole fabric of our religion falls when we take away any essential doctrine or duty.

2. We must believe that Christ is the Son of God; that he became man and died on the cross to redeem us from the punishment of our sins.

3. We must believe that we are sinners and need a Saviour.

4. Mere belief will not save us. If we throw a rope to a drowning man he may believe that the rope is there, but he is not saved unless he grasps it.

5. We cannot be saved without belief. A man who has swallowed a deadly poison must know his danger and believe in the antidote offered him or his life cannot be saved.

6. We must do as well as we believe. It is a law of nature. The drowning man must grasp the rope. The sick man must seek a physician. The farmer must sow his seed. We must work to secure any important result, but we must work with God—not against him.

7. We must trust in Christ to save us as a child in danger trusts the strong arm of his father, and then we must be very careful to walk in the way he has told us to go.

8. Obedience is a very fundamental part of Christianity. We must not only believe its doctrines—we must practice its duties.

9. The great foundation principles of Christianity may be briefly summed up in these two—faith in Christ as a Saviour, and obedience to his example and precepts.

10. The practicing of these principles has reclaimed the vicious, made the miserable happy, and raised to usefulness and honor many whom otherwise we never should have heard of. Bunyan, had he continued a godless, profane man, would never have given us the Pilgrim's Progress—next to the English Bible the greatest religious classic in the language.

11. Just in proportion as nations observe these principles, they increase in knowledge, make advances in science, art and literature, and increase in general happiness and prosperity.

12. Christianity does this by lessening the amount of crime and suffering through its numberless benevolent agencies, by spreading a knowledge of the Bible, by reforming evils and abuses, and in various other ways.

13. Nations are made up of individuals. Every one who becomes a Christian adds his mite towards bringing his country more completely under the sway of Christian principles.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Believing in Christ is the fundamental doctrine of Christianity.

Obedience to Christ is the fundamental duty.

The religion of Christ brings light, knowledge, happiness.

He who serves Christ best will serve his country best.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved. Acts 16: 31.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—Truth in Christ is the corner stone of Christianity.

QUESTIONS.

What is the subject of this lesson? Golden Text? Central truth?

1. What do we mean by the fundamental principles of Christianity?
2. What must we believe about Christ? John 3: 14–16.
3. What must we believe about ourselves? Ps. 14: 2, 3.
4. Will believing these things save us? Jas. 2: 14.
5. Can we be saved without believing them? Jas. 2. 17.
6. What must we add to simple belief?
7. What must we do? Repeat Golden Text.
8. Is obedience a very important part of Christianity? 1. Sam. 15: 22; Mark 12: 33.
9. What in brief may be called the great foundation principles of Christianity?
10. What have these principles done for individuals?
11. What have they done for nations?
12. How do you account for these facts?
13. How will our being Christians help to make our country happier and better?
14. Repeat the practical truths.

LESSON TALK.

Many people think faith is a hard doctrine to understand. Young persons, when urged to trust in Christ, will sometimes say they don't know how. A converted Indian once used this simple illustration: He built a fire of chips around a worm, which, roused by the heat, saw its danger and tried to escape. But the fiery ring enclosed it on all sides. Then the Indian stretched out his finger and the worm crawled up on it and was saved.

"That worm like poor Indian," he said, as he laid it gently in a place of safety. "Christ come along, stretch out his hand; poor Indian take it and be saved."

The truest patriots, the greatest philanthropists, have been men of Christian faith and principle. Our country needs Christian rulers and statesmen; it needs Christian farmers, and merchants, and mechanics; it needs Christian editors and writers and teachers, but it cannot have them if the boys and girls of to-day do not become Christians. But if they choose Christ now their future usefulness is assured. There is a grand work waiting for them. We cannot tell exactly what it will be for all do not have gifts alike. But Jesus has work for every willing heart and hand, and all work is grand that is done for him.

LESSON HYMN.

"Saviour, teach me day by day,
Love's sweet lesson to obey."

A MAINE PASTOR RENOUNCES SECRET SOCIETIES.

The following is an extract from a sermon preached in the Baptist church, Sabattus, Maine, by Rev. E. Dennett, May 20, from the text: "What meanest thou, O sleeper; arise and call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us that we perish not." Jonah 1: 6.

"We have many organizations to-day among us that in secret perform their rites and ceremonies, and you have often heard men say that if a man lives up to the principles of this, or that, or the other order, he will be good enough. Now I used to say that, but I have found out by my Bible that every time a man says that he slanders the Lord Jesus and denies the need of the power of the Gospel. I used to say such things but I never will again. It is all a dream of the Evil One. When a man says that, what does he mean? Why, he means, of course, that he is good enough without Christianity, and saying that he denies the Bible which teaches that there is not the least chance of a man's salvation unless he utterly renounces all faith in his own good works as a means of salvation and relies wholly on the Lord Jesus Christ. When a man tells you to live up to the principles of any order and you will be all right, he is offering a substitute for the religion of Christ, while the word teaches us that nothing can take his place.

There are men to-day who are making these things their religion and in rites and ceremonies and forms and obligations, which leave out the name of Christ, they are resting, thus relying on their allegiance to their order and not on Christ. They are dreaming—dreaming on—expecting in some way, without the aid of a Saviour, to reach that home "where all good brethren hope at last to arrive," when there is really no more power in any of these organizations to save a man and regenerate him and give him a home in the kingdom than there is power in the arm of yonder little child, asleep in his father's arms, to overturn Sabattus mountain into yonder lake. Societies which have good for their object are well enough in their place but when they offer themselves as substitutes for the religion of Christ then Christian men and women should beware of them. There are thousands to-day sleeping over these things and giving their money by thousands of dollars to build up grand temples, where mystic rites and ceremonies shall be performed. There must be an awakening by and by, and to-day I thunder forth the alarm, be the consequences what they may."

POINTS FROM GRAND LODGE REPORTS.

TEXAS.

Among the items of this report as found in the Voice of Masonry for June, 1883, is the following: "By reason of the proximity of a lodge to a drinking saloon the lodge room was no longer safe for Masonic purposes; that the Worshipful Master was unable to enforce discipline, that a large number of the lodge were addicted to the habitual use of intoxicating drinks, gambling, and profane swearing, that whenever charges were preferred on trial the offenders were always acquitted, because a majority of the members being themselves guilty of the same offense would vote for acquittal. On account of the few good and zealous members in the lodge it was permitted to surrender its charter instead of having it arrested."

This is a bad showing for the lodge. It is common for friends of Masonry to claim a morality and benevolence equal, at least, if not superior, to the churches, but whoever heard of a church that "by reason of its proximity to a drinking saloon—was unable to enforce discipline,' "when gambling and profane swearing as well as drinking were habitual, and where trial for these offenses always resulted in acquittal by reason of the complicity of a majority of the members." In the judgment of a "cowan" such a state of things would be quite impossible except behind tyled doors and amongst those demoralized by the blasphemies of Masonic oaths and penalties, and that the whole matter illustrates the great fact that "men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The following from the Grand Lodge report of South Carolina, as given in the Voice of Masonry for June, pages 5 to 9, shows Masonry in a different light from that in which it is often presented:

"We insist that those who come into Masonry with the idea that they are thereby obtaining life insurances or joining a mutual benefit society, which will pay them or their families a pecuniary return for the money they invest in it, will find sooner or later that they do not understand the first principles of Masonry."

"Masonry is an institution organized for the promotion of friendship, morality and brotherly love," etc. Now it strikes a "cowan" that these are most important objects, and that no plan was ever devised so well calculated to secure them as that presented by the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in fact any other plan than this is a sham and a fraud. Most people enter the lodge with the idea of pecuniary advantages to themselves or families. If they sought moral improvement the lodge is the last place to which they would go. The confession of the Grand Master of South Carolina is that men who put money into the lodge put it into a bag with holes.

HOW A CYCLONE LOOKS.

Upon the State line of Wisconsin and Illinois, we saw the first sad work of this aerial monster, whose breath so suddenly blows out the light of home and the spark of life, A Mr. Smith and his family, wife and son, were about to sit down to supper when they were warned by the terrible voices of the air that danger was coming. There being no cellar on the place their first thought was to escape to a neighbor's for refuge, about twenty rods distant. Mrs. Smith lingered awhile trying to persuade her husband to abandon everything and go with her, but finally started alone. When she reached the neighbor's yard she turned to take one more look at the storm, and became transfixed by its awful grandeur. She says she heard the neighbor call several times to her to come on or she would be killed, but she could not turn or take her eyes from the spiral monster that came circling on. The first breath of the storm caught her up as though she were a feather and dashed her against an oak and thence to the ground. At the same instant the oak, about two feet in diameter, was snapped as though but a pipestem. She was again lifted from the ground and carried some distance, and when again lowered to the earth she was whirled like a top round and round upon the turf. The force of the wind was then over, and she got upon her feet and, bleeding and torn, entered the house without assistance. The flesh of one side of her head, face, and shoulders was torn to shreds. During this time Mr. Smith, who had stayed within a few rods of his dwelling, had passed through an experience and seen sights which will be vividly before him through all the years of life. He says he seemed to lose all care for everything except to see what that awful funnel of darkness would do. When within a few rods of his house it took a large shagbark hickory and tore it to shreds, as a common wind would bend a willow twig. Then he became conscious of danger, and throwing himself upon the ground he grasped a log that formed the bottom of the fence and hung on for life, still keeping his eyes upon his dwelling. When the cone of the storm struck the house it was raised about twenty feet in the air, turned roof downward, and dashed to the earth, it was then repeatedly raised and dashed to the earth until not an article of clothing, furniture, or household utensil was left whole. Of a comfortable home, good furniture, and plenty, this family is reduced to a span of horses, which escaped injury, although the stable was blown down over them, and the clothing they had on.

Passing southwest from this point in the line we reached the farm of Mr. Hoffman, four miles northeast of Harvard Junction. Here the storm swept everything before it, and Mr. Hoffman was killed, another man and a woman mortally wounded, and dead horses, cows, sheep, and swine were heaped here and there among the debris of house, barn, and fallen timber. The woman who was so mangled here was found in the top of an apple-tree, wedged in between two limbs so that it required the strength of two men to pull her out. Between the Hoffman and Smith places we passed a forest field of twenty acres of burr oaks which would average about two feet in diameter. In the twenty acres not a whole tree was left standing, and the awful power of the storm seemed to be expended to see into what fantastic forms it could twist these giants of age and mighty growth.

The storm did not keep to the ground more than a mile at a time, bounding over some dwelling upon hills and seemingly the most exposed, and swooping down upon some home nestled in a valley, where it would scatter the treasure of the years' hard labors like autumn leaves. At the farms of S. J. and Levi Nichols, on Blooming prairie, the storm was described to us by an eye witness who stood a half mile away, as being the most terrible, and at the same time most sublime of sights. He said the storm which, when it struck the prairie, seemed to be going at an awful speed, when it reached the Nichols dwellings and barns stood still in its march, and marked time by its revolutions until the air was filled 100 feet high with the buildings which it tore to atoms, and then marched on, leaving a more desolate track than Banks' retreat from Red River, or Sherman's march to the sea. It was at this place that Levi Nichols and family were saved by being in the cellar, and where the hired man lost his life in the barn. The damage to Nichols' farm cannot be less than $10,000, and the total loss in the towns of Alden, Linn, and Bloomfield will reach $75,000 or $100,000. Families are homeless, stock is without shelter, and farms are fenceless, and the herds go roaming alike across pasture and tillage.—Inter Ocean

So necessary is fun for the mind, that a late philosopher says if you should build schoolhouses without playgrounds nobody would get beyond short division in a life time.

Thomas B. Stillman, of New York, a professional chemist, says: "In men, small doses of tobacco smoke excite the intellectual faculties: repeated doses produce palpitations, disordered visions, and decrease of memory.

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

The Cynosure is happy to announce herewith a grand list of contributors and correspondents for 1883. To read their letters, study their arguments, compare their experiences, and drink with them at the fountain of truth, even Jesus Christ, will be the noble privilege of the readers of the Cynosure. The following is only a partial list. Arrangements are being made for the enlargement of the circle until it shall include every section of our country:

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1883.

NO SECT.—To destroy existing churches in order to kill sectarianism, is like a good old man who preached tearing down the prisons to get rid of crimes. All sects now have a leaven of Christ in them. If every church member loathed sectarianism as he ought, churches would forget their names even while using them for mere designation; as we now use the heathen names of the days of the week without the idolatry which named them. Still, men do not drop their sins till they are told what they are, and are rebuked for them; and sectarianism is a sin, and sect names are forbidden. Sectarianism should fall as Jericho fell, every Christian going up through the wall, each from his own sect stand-point into oneness with Christ. The Lord hasten the day.

THE SWORD is, to say the least, an extraordinary sheet. We read it almost entire, though loaded with papers. Its specialties are antagonism to secret labor unions, and sectarianism: though the editor claims to oppose "all the works of the devil" and favor "all the works of God." Address, T. F. Dolan, editor, 1413 Eighth street, N. W.

J. A. CONANT, ESQ.

Some men of good sense and great prudence have suggested that Mr. Conant is not fairly dealt with by suggesting Hon. Frederick Douglass as American candidate for Vice President, before he has publicly given his willingness to withdraw in Mr. Douglass's favor. This is both natural and just. Mr. Conant was one of the earliest in the reform; and he has never swerved from principle or erred in judgment; and he has evinced an ability and devotion to American principles and interests which eminently fit him for the office of Vice President with the contingency of becoming President of the United States. Before any suggestion of Mr. Douglass's nomination was published Mr. Conant was written to from Washington and afterward consulted personally on this matter, and he was cordially acquiescent in the proposition for the obvious reason that as Paul said of Timothy's relation to the Phillippians (2: 20): there is "no man like-minded who will naturally care for the state" of the colored population like Mr. Douglass, since both races meet and blend in his veins. And the key to the White House for the next Presidential term is held by the colored voters. If Mr. Douglass is put in nomination by a large and august convention in Washington next September, eight or nine months before the other parties nominate, the "Aye" which nominates him will wake a slumbering echo from every Abolition hillside in the whole North; and our politicians who make politics their trade, by this time know full well what that word and spirit of "Abolition" means.

God "that lifteth up them that are bowed down" is now moving American society to elevate the down-trodden colored population. He kindles his fires ever at the bottom of the grate; and the politics which succeed must be God's politics. Such were the politics which abolished slavery. Such are the politics which must elevate man.

With Pomeroy of Kansas and Douglass of Washington, in the field, in advance of the old parties which are now destitute of principle, demoralized by divisions, and discouraged by distracted counsels, the American party must succeed in electing its candidates in November, 1884, unless our own folly, blindness and ambition defeat us. And in that case we shall deserve defeat as the Abolitionists were defeated when their ambitious leaders went after the gods of Knownothingism.

Let us hope that we shall have better sense and sounder wisdom. Mr. Conant has it; and if we succeed there will be places enough for him and all like him to serve God and the country in.

EDITORIAL LETTERS.

TEMPERANCE IN SARATOGA.

The Presbyterian General Assembly has called a crowd here. Itself has six hundred members, or thereabout, and the Woman's State Temperance Union have their agent here, Rev. Mr. Frost, and as the Assembly have a standing, aye, and working committee on temperance, next to the freedmen, temperance is the boom of the occasion.

I went last night to the First Baptist church to attend the Saratoga W. C. T. U. It was their anniversary. Their president, Mrs. Laurence, if I heard the name right, is a fine-looking, motherly woman, with grey hair, and clear head, and beaming benevolence in her looks. It seems she has left the presidency to a modest little woman in black, for why I know not, as she is facile princeps, and has the prestige of wealth, owning one of the great springs here. Her report sketched the origin of their Union in the Ohio crusade, and its steady progress, from tens to hundreds, up to the large crowd then present, in spite of the colored regiment of Dr. Allen, the Assembly's secretary for the Freedmen at the First Presbyterian church, which drew crowds; the last becoming first. The negro is the hero, here as elsewhere.

Rev. Mr. Frost, now agent for the Woman's Union in this State, is an evangelist of temperance; and I have seldom heard a better. The substance of his speech, which the women had me to precede with prayer, was, that the temperance cause, like the only possible road through a mountain gorge in the Catskills, no failure, because it washed out and had to be repaired every year. Like paint on the houses, temperance and every other good thing fades; but not fails. That is no discouragement.

The time is coming when roads will not wash out, nor paint fade in moral reforms. Satan will surely be bound, and sin blench away, and the tide be reversed, and universally set toward goodness and toward God. Mr. Frost held his audience steady, and wound up with great eloquence and power. God was manifestly with him.

The women, ever on the alert, on Saturday evening slipped in a temperance meeting in the great town hall right beside the church where the General Assembly meets. A crowd filled the hall. It was addressed by Dr. W. W. Grimes, a member of the Assembly from Steubenville, Ohio. His speech was sui generis. He is a tall, fine-looking old gentleman, who, like Moody, lets grammar and rhetoric get out of the way, and he literally "pitched in." He had knelt with the Ohio crusade women, in the snow and mud on the sidewalks, within ear-shot of the ribald song and blasphemies in the warm "licensed" saloon; and a tall six-footer, in fair proportions, he brought down the house when he said he had followed and backed up those women crusaders till he began to fear they would call him sister Grimes. If the crowd would know what he was, he would tell them: "I am prohibition from the nail of my left toe to the tip of my right ear." He had been that for eleven years, and should continue eighty years longer, if he lived so long. [Great laughter.]

"But mind," said the speaker, "I have nothing against the Republican and Democratic parties, only I pray how soon they may die. [Laughter.]

"I vote as I pray; but we have multitudes of excellent temperance men hitched fast to these two old parties: They see and say we must vote the liquor traffic down and out; but there is always a specialty. This year to 'elect a Senator,' next 'to keep out the Democrats,' etc., and thus these good earnest temperance men, ready to burst with temperance, are hitched fast, and we can never cripple the nation's chief curse till these two parties are dead.

"There were three grog-bruisers used to cross into Canada above the Falls for their sprees, drink till their money was gone, and then go home to their desolate wives.

"They had had their 'spree' and were for starting home in the night. 'No! you'll go over the Falls!' said the merciful (?) saloon-keeper, but go they must and would. They pitched into the skiff; two at the oars, and one to skull and steer. The oarsmen began to pull lustily, and the boat creaked. The steersman saw something was wrong, and got scared. 'Pull, boys! pull for your lives!" The sweat stood in beads on the oarsmen's foreheads. 'Pull, for God's sake, men! Pull for our wives and children, or we'll never see them again! Don't you hear the water just below? Pull, men, oh pull! She's headed up stream, but we don't gain an inch. Pull, oh pull, men!'

"Just then the oarsman next the shore put out his hand and cried out to the steersman, 'Och, Jamie, if we haven't forgot to unhitch the boat.'

"Our Ohio temperance men have forgotten to unhitch prohibition from these old parties, and when they go over the falls, these temperance men will go down with them." [Great applause.]

But Dr. Grimes made the sharpest point on government whisky. "We're with ye," say some, "against the grog-shops, but we can't go prohibition. That strikes the revenue. There'll be no harm in the thing if you keep it under the government stamp.

"These men remind me of a village where a mad dog got loose and was biting folks, and the neighbors started after him with clubs and revolvers in full cry. But in the midst of the melee, an old squire, who wanted to go to Congress, sung out above the tumult: 'Ho! boys! Stop! Let me put a government stamp on his nose, and the dog's all right!'" This sally was greeted with a roar of applause. In short, I have seldom heard a less pretentious or more effective speech in my life. These sallies were but scintillations from the speaker's hot-hammered iron.

Yours in Christ, J. B.

A LABOR UNION LODGE OATH.

The "International Typographical Union" of journeyman printers was meeting in Cincinnati last week. Two items of public interest have come to us through the press dispatches. The first exposes the despotic character of the order and gives it the ear-mark of lodgery everywhere. After some debate it was resolved to abolish sub-lists and the subordinate or local unions that do not obey by September 1st next will be deprived of the privileges of running their secret machinery, and their charters for which they have paid money will be taken away. Thus this printers' union, a so-called "minor order," manifests the very spirit of lodgery which is universal in the system—the individual must obey his lodge officers in the strike, although his family may be starving and it is altogether for his interest to keep at work; and the local societies must give up private judgment and the right to administer their own affairs to some body of unknown men. The oath adopted at this meeting is given below and all the members old and new must take it. It is not given in the usual form of an oath with a direct appeal to God, but the pledge of "sacred honor" implies the same thing and will be as strictly maintained; and it will occur to most readers that it may sometimes be an impossibility to keep the relation to other members of this lodge paramount to any other, or to social, political or religious duties. This is in short a bold swearing to men the allegiance due to Christ. The oath reads:

I (name) hereby solemnly and sincerely swear (or affirm) that I will never reveal any business or proceeding of any meeting of this union or any other subordinate union to which I may here after be attached except to those whom I know to be members in good standing thereof; that I will, without equivocation or evasion, and to the best of my ability, abide by the constitution, by-laws, and the adopted scale of prices; that I will at all times abide by the decisions of the majority, and use all honorable means within my power to procure employment for printers of any union working under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical union in preference to others; that my fidelity to the union and my duties to the members thereof shall in no case be interferred with or trenched upon by any allegience that I may now or hereafter owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious, secret or otherwise; that I will belong to no society or combination composed wholly or partly of printers with intent or purpose to interfere with the trade regulations or influence or control the legislation of this union; that I will not wrong a brother member or see him or her wronged if in my power to prevent. To all of which I pledge my sacred honor.

THE American Reformer is the somewhat pretentious title of a handsome bi-weekly, published by a "Publishing Company," 59 Tribune Building, New York, recently started. "Liquor" and "opium;" "polities," "red cherries" and "display advertisements," are well treated. Tobacco, secret societies and other trifles are given a wide berth, and grow under its shadow. An agricultural paper which should shun to mention a prevailing cattle plague would be deemed, and justly, a dishonest sheet. But it would be less dishonest than a print professing "American reform" which dares not touch national evils branded by D'Israeli and the North American Review.

—We publish elsewhere a list of the corporate members of the National Christian Association, a list of names, of which, on the whole, any reform might be proud. We shall expect to see many of these friends with us on June 21st.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman is spending the week before annual meeting in Wisconsin. He left the Cynosure office on Saturday afternoon expecting to spend the Lord's day in West Bend. Mrs. Hinman and children are visiting friends in Ohio and Michigan.

—The bricklayers's strike in Chicago has finally collapsed, and the men have gone to work at $4 a day. They have been out some six weeks in the best of their season's work, and after several attempted settlements by the leaders in their secret union they have given up their organization as an expensive luxury.

—The N. C. A. Board of Directors met on Friday last and made a settlement of bills for furnishing the Washington building and for services there; voted a copy of President Finney on Masonry to each of the theological gradnates at Oberlin this year; prepared their annual report for presentation to the annual meeting, and discussed the advertising contract with the former publisher of the Cynosure, referring the matter to a committee.

—The Wesleyan Publishing House at Syracuse has spent some $5,100 during the last year in new machinery and improvements about their new building. A new outfit for the excellent American Wesleyan and three new presses are the most important items of the purchase. Through the good management of Bro. Kinney, the agent, most of this expense was paid for in cash.

—Rev. H. D. Inman, of Ada, Kent county, Mich., who was last year nominated for Congress in the Michigan Fifth Discrict by the voters of the American party, was severely injured recently by a blow on the head from a timber falling from a building as he was passing along the streets of Manistee. He was badly cut on the head, and has been compelled to recall his appointments with churches which he was to visit as conference evangelist.

OTTERBEIN UNIVERSITY COMMENCEMENT began with the Baccalaureate Sermon on Sabbath by Pres. H. A. Thompson. Rev. J. W. Hott, editor of the Telescope, preached in the evening. The Literary Societies were to have Monday and Tuesday evenings, the Alumni Wednesday, and Thursday is commencement day.

WHEATON.—Commencement at Wheaton College occurs on Wednesday, June 20, the day before the annual business meeting of the National Christian Association. The Faculty cordially invite all the friends who may be attending the latter to come to Wheaton the day before. Beside the announcement of last week, Miss E. Dryer, the well known organizer of the Bible Work in this city, will also speak before the Society of Inquiry on Sabbath evening, June 17th. Mr. D. A. Coy, of Pierre, Dakota, is to speak at the Alumni meeting Tuesday evening, and it is hoped that Mrs. S. C. Kennedy, of San Jose, California, will read an essay. The addresses on Commencement day will be given by Rev. W. T. Meloy, D.D., of the Memorial Presbyterian church, Chicago, and Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, of Washington City; the latter will speak in the afternoon. In the evening a grand concert will be given by the Mendellsohn Society under the direction of Prof. S. W. Martin. Mr. Charles Herald, leader in the Moody church in Chicago, will sing on Commencement day.

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

According to its constitution the annual business meeting of the National Christian Association will be held at 10:30 A. M., on the third Thursday (21st) of June next, in Carpenter Hall, 221 West Madison street, Chicago. This meeting is expected to be of unusual importance and requires the attendance of every member of the corporate body and as many friends as possible should be present. JOHN D. NUTTING, Rec. Sec.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

CALL FOR A POLITICAL MEETING.

The Central Committee of the American party is hereby called to meet at the N. C. A. building, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, at 4 P. M., June 21st 1883, to consider the question of calling a National Political Convention at Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, and to transact such other business as may be of interest to the party. A full attendance of the members of the Central Committee and all other interested friends is earnestly requested.

Come and attend the N. C. A. Annual Meeting convening at 10 A. M. and also hear Senator Pomeroy at Farwell Hall in the evening of the same day (Thursday, June 21st.)

EZRA A. COOK,
Ch'n Cen. Com. American Party.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR OFFICE.

In China learning is honored by the bestowal of high titles and lucrative office. It is the policy of the government to extend education as much as possible.

But in the United States the possession of titles and lucrative office are made to depend upon certain grips, signs, squares, compasses, sheepskins, etc. A secret organization defeats the policy of State; gets exclusive control (it pretends) of valuable learning, which it sells only at a high price to a chosen, select few, and which alone secures to its possessors political favor, office and titles. This pretended valuable learning is not extended to everybody, freely, and without price, but is kept hid in secret archives, which no one, it is claimed, can reveal. It is most carefully kept from public knowledge, as the quack keeps his remedy for the cancer, selling its mystic virtues only to a few at a great price.

The learning given by schools and colleges amounts to nothing in securing official office and honors, unless the candidate also knows the mystic virtues possessed by a sheepskin apron. In this respect the civilization of China is very superior to that of the United States. Very few writers or orators, in the United States dare say anything against the organization that puts sheepskin aprons above talent. OLD AMERICAN.

A CHANGE.

[From the Sword, Washington, D. C.]

President Jonathan Blanchard, of Wheaton College Ill., has, in a true spirit of unselfishness, withdrawn from the Presidential candidacy of the American party, in favor of the Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, formerly United States Senator from Kansas, a man who, as we understand, has fearlessly advocated true principles as against the evil spirits of slavery and lodgery. He will doubtless be put formally in nomination at the next national convention of the party.

Mr. Pomeroy is a hale, hearty, vigorous, and upright man. It would certainly be a great blessing to the nation to have such an one in the White House. "When the righteous are in authority, the people rejoice: but when the wicked bear rule, the people mourn." Therefore, our advice to all is, in the name of Jesus of Naxareth, vote the American ticket, and thus be an instrument in the hand of God in ridding "free" America of one of the foulest spirits that has ever usurped masked but unblushing authority over the human race, and against which every freeman's soul should be stirred to the utmost in just and righteous indignation.

Mr. Blanchard's letter of withdrawal ends with the following words: "The chances are that Pomeroy may be elected in 1884. May God grant it." To which we say, AMEN.

A WOMAN ON MORMON POLITICS.

A lady correspondent of the Inter Ocean begins a letter from Salt Lake with a graphic picture of the desperate condition of electious there even under the control of the United States Commissioners. The cure recommended seems to be a reasonable one in the light of all the facts. The disease demands a desperate remedy. The letter says:

"A Salt Lake acquaintance of ours says that at a former election in this city he went to the polls for the purpose of casting his vote for the Liberal candidate for delegate to Congress. As he entered the doors he overheard one of the Latter-day elders remarking to another:

"I have voted all my wives to day, and I would have voted my mules, too, if I could."

Said our Liberal friend: "I turned away and left the place without depositing the ballot in my hand. I could not vote against mules."

This expression indicates the prevailing sentiment among Utah Gentiles, who know that the votes for any Mormon candidate might just as well be counted before the election as afterward. As long as four-fifths of the voters registered in the Territory can be depended upon to do as they are told, and ask no questions, it is safe to say that the regeneration of Utah will not begin at the polls, and as long as we have Federal officials who decide that the acts of Congress which are directed against polygamy are null and void, we cannot look for help to the courts.

Where, then, shall we look? What is the remedy for the existing condition of affairs?

These questions have been so often asked outside of Utah, that the present writer, in a book published in 1881, ventured to suggest a remedy, but being only a woman, and therefore incapable of generalizing and taking broad views of the subject, this suggestion was offered in fear and trembling, and subject to such amendments as might occur to the comprehensive and logical masculine mind. Now, after the lapse of nearly two years, and after at least a partial trial of other measures, the suggestion offered as aforesaid is repeated with more courage.

Judge Jere Black says: 'Utah could not stand carpet-bag rule as well as South Carolina. No ten years of good stealings could be found there.'

Let Judge Black, and all other Mormon attorneys, paid and unpaid, possess their souls in peace. We are not asking for carpet-bag rule. The suggestion which your correspondent makes, and which is generally indorsed by the Liberal party, is that the farce of an election be dispensed with, and that the Utah Legislature, composed of men appointed by the President of the Mormon church, be superseded as a law-making power by a commission appointed by the President of the United States; and it is further recommended that the members of this commission be, without exception, residents of the Territory.

WEBSTER AND THE VICE PRESIDENCY.

In a recent interview Marshal Henry of Washington, who came into un-looked-for prominence through the association of his friend Pres. Garfield and the Guiteau trial, mentioned some particulars respecting the political career of Mr. Webster which will be remembered:

"It is astonishing upon how slight a thing great events often hang in this country. It is well known how the Vice-Presidency went a-begging at the Chicago convention. All the New York delegation seemed to think that there was no show for the ticket to win; that Conkling would sulk, and all the third-term men would refuse to work, and that this would have the certain effect of defeating the ticket. Levi P. Morton was offered the place, and refused it, and finally Arthur was nominated.

"Now, this was not by any means the only case of the kind. In 1840, Daniel Webster, who had long been the leader of his party, was greatly disappointed because he was not nominated to the first place on the Whig ticket, and when the comparatively unknown Harrison was brought forward, he freely expressed his disgust. He was offered the second place on the ticket, but indignantly refused. Harrison was elected, and killed in one month by the importunities of the hungry gang of office seekers who constantly hounded him. Tyler came into the place which Webster could and should have had.

"This was the first case in all our history where a Vice-President succeeded to the Presidency, and, on general principles, it was supposed that it would not occur again for fifty years more. Eight years later, Mr. Webster again came up with all the force he could muster, and made a strong fight for the Presidential nomination. Another military hero, Gen. Zach. Taylor, was nominated, and the second place was again offered to Webster. He was urged to take it, but refused, and Millard Filmore was nominated, only to be President for the larger part of Taylor's term, while Webster was simply Secretary of State. How different might have been the history of this country, had Webster, either in 1840 or 1848, accepted the Vice-Presidency! He undoubtedly saw his mistake, and was sorry."

We learned that color line was erased in the Kentucky Republican State convention the other week and every man recognized as a Republican. Some of the colored candidates were placed in nomination by intelligent white gentlemen.—Paris, Texas, Informer.

THE HOME.

THE SAVIOUR'S KNOWLEDGE.

"We are sure that Thou knowest all things."—John 16:30.

Thou knowest, Lord, the weariness and sorrow
Of the sad heart that comes to thee for rest;
Cares of to-day, and burdens of to-morrow,
Blessings implored, and sins to be confessed;
I come before thee at thy gracious word,
And lay them at thy feet; thou knowest, Lord.

Thou knowest all the past; how long and blindly
On the dark mountains the lost sheep had strayed,
How the Good Shepherd followed, and how kindly
He bore it home upon his shoulders laid,
And healed the bleeding wounds, and soothed the pain,
And brought back life, and hope, and strength again.

Thou knowest all; each turbulent temptation,
Each toilsome duty, each foreboding fear.
All to myself assigned of tribulation,
Or to beloved ones, than self more dear;
All pensive memories, as I journey on,
Longings for vanished smiles and voices gone.

Thou knowest all the future gleams of gladness,
By stormy clouds too quickly overcast,
Hours of sweet fellowship and parting sadness,
And the dark river to be crossed at last,
O! what could hope and confidence afford
To tread that path, but this—thou knowest, Lord.

Thou knowest, not alone as God, all knowing,
As man our mortal weakness thou hast proved;
On earth with purest sympathies o'erflowing,
O Saviour, thou has wept, and thou hast loved!
And love and sorrow still to thee may come,
And find a hiding place, a rest, a home.

Therefore I come, thy gentle call obeying,
And lay my sins and sorrows at thy feet,
On everlasting strength my weakness staying,
Clothed in thy robe of righteousness complete;
Then rising up refreshed I leave thy throne,
And follow on to know as I am known.

QUENCH NOT THE SPIRIT.

"Mother, that man looks tired and dusty, and I am sure those little children would like a cold drink."

"Nonsence! Why, if they would? You'll have enough to do if you commence waiting on every emigrant that halts under our trees for five minutes."

Some way last Sunday's sweet lesson, that had haunted Annie Snow ever since, came to mind in strange mockery of her mother's rebuff, "A cup of cold water only in my name." She wanted to give it to the dirty, tired-looking children, peering from the white-covered emigrant-wagon, but she could not now; the sweet bud of generous impulse was crushed; the tiny sprout from the good seed of the Sunday lesson, trodden heedlessly under foot; the spirit was quenched.

"Mother," said she trembling, a few days later, "I've broken two goblets. I didn't mean to, but"—

"Oh, you careless child? And then you come and tell of it, just as if you were glad! I am more out of patience than ever!"

Annie turned away with slow-filling eyes. She only meant to be truthful in the truest sense. Did it occur to her mother that she would have given her a more severe reprimand if she had not told her at once of her accident?

Once more the sweet Spirit was quenched; the trembling feet had tried the path of truth, but rude hands made it too thorny, and they turned back bleeding and bruised. Ah, what were a thousand goblets in comparison!

Yet Annie loved her mother dearly, for she was not always hasty or unjust, only "nervous" at some times, and exceedingly irritable at all. And when one day, years after, Annie's boy-lover at school gave her the fairest moss-rose buds his little garden afforded, with a whispered word that made her cheek flush with pleasure, she went straight to tell her mother the story.

"Dear mamma," the tremulous voice and speaking eye almost completed the poem, "Dear mamma, may I tell you something?"

"Don't bother me, Annie, I've no time to stop now. I must get this tucking done before dark. Go and set the table for tea."

Quenched once more. Yet the mother would hardly believe it her own work if Annie engaged herself without waiting to tell her mother.

O friends, do we not often forget that to be truly Christ-like we must reverence the Spirit which is moving the hearts of "these little ones;" that of them, not of us, was it said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven?"

Let us be careful that we "quench not the spirit" which moves them to do anything generous, loving, truthful, or confiding, though it is not in the most convenient season or pleasing manner, lest these good impulses that would render our latest years our happiest, the holy truth which would be at once a girdle of strength and a coronet of beauty, that sweet confidence which countless wealth cannot buy, be with the Spirit which prompts them, forever quenched.—Ex.

LESSONS FROM FLOWERS.

God has made everything beautiful in its season, everything lovely in its own order.. It were a pity that there should be a battle among the flowers, and a greater trouble still if there should be a conflict among saints as to which state of experience is the better, or as to which is the highest mark of grace.

One thing I have learned from flowers, which should be a lesson for us all: It is the dependence of most of them upon the great heavenly light. If you look on a lawn when it rains, you may at a little distance see nothing but the green grass; but as soon as the shower is over, and the sun shines forth, countless daisies, which have shut themselves up while the sun is away, will open their eyes and look up to him. Well are they called Day's-eyes. The sweet marguerites lie asleep all night, shut up like pearls in their shells; but when brave Sol is up they hide themselves no longer, but come forth to meet the bridegroom. Should we not act according to such sort toward the Well-beloved, whose presence makes our day? When our Lord Christ conceals his face, let us shut up our hearts in sorrow, "even as the closing buds at eve grieve for the departed sunbeams." When Jesus shines upon us, with brightness of beauty and warmth of grace, then let our hearts unclasp their folded leaves again, and let them drink in a fullness of light and love. We may all try to be alike in this respect, for we all love Jesus If we cannot all rejoice in him at this moment, yet, we can all refuse to rejoice in aught besides. And there is no mere fancy in such refusal; for how can the flower of the day be content without the sun, and how can we be happy without our Lord? The poet says, The tyrant night oppresses the innocent flower until its pure deep eyes are wet with tears; but when the conquering sun appears the flower smiles through its teardrops. The Pharisees complained that, while they often fasted, the disciples of Jesus did not fast at all. Well did the Master answer them, "Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn as long as the bride-groom is with them? but the days will come when the bride-groom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast." Now, this is true of us all. While Christ is with us we could not be sad if we were to try, and if he be once gone we cannot be glad, however much we attempt to be so. He is everything to us—our joy, our hope, our all. Our bliss depends, not upon what we are in ourselves, but upon what he is in himself. What a songster sung to a flower may be fitly applied to every believer; he would have it joy in the sun, and so he sings—

"'Tis thine to rest in his embrace,
Nor labor to be sweet and fair;
Do thou but gaze into his face,
And all thy beauty shineth there:
Heaven thee hath made a mirror in whose sheen
The shining of yon sun is in sweet beauty seen."

Here, then, is a clear point of union for all believers of every shape of character. We are one in our need of Jesus, one in our joy in him, one in our growth beneath his heavenly influences. To him we turn as the heliotrope turns to the sun, and towards him we are moving as truly, though as slowly, as the purple orchis moves towards the south, the land of the sun. Oh, to dwell in the unclouded glory of the Sun of Righteousness for evermore!—Sword and Trowel.

A WORD ABOUT CONTRADICTING.

No one likes to be contradicted, even when contradiction is absolutely necessary. A few resolutely amiable souls may bear it without visible demonstration of annoyance, but such cases are uncommon and exceptional, and only serve to prove the rule. But too often it happens that contradiction is not only unnecessary but superfluous, as a few samples will prove.

Miss A. and her sister are calling, and Miss A. is speaking of the death of a mutual friend. "Yes, I saw her in July for the last time!" says Miss A.; whereupon her sister immediately interrupts with "Oh, no, you didn't, you saw her in August; I remember very well it was the first day of August."

"Well, in August, then," says Miss A., accepting the correction, and going on with her story. "She seemed very well, and yet it was just one week afterward that she was taken with"—

"Oh, no, it was eight days after you saw her; you said so at the time," breaks in the accurate sister once more.

Miss A. finally closes her narrative by saying:

"And she left such a young family! the baby is only a year old now."

"Why, sister, how can you say so? that child is one year and two months old at the least," is the instant correction. And so the dialogue goes on—every remark sandwiched between interruptions of the same sort—the most unimportant dates and facts constantly re-stated; and the contradictor full of interest and complacency all the while.

Too often the whole point of an amusing anecdote, or the force of a remark, is destroyed by some unmeaning and impertinent contradiction, while the effect upon both speaker and hearers is irritating in the extreme. Only lately we were commending exactness of speech, correctness in small details, and the like, but this is a very different matter from that and should never be confounded with it.—Christian Intelligencer.

HOLY COURAGE.

Holy courage characterizes every true life. The possessor of this life looks at the right and says, "With God's help I will do it." He never for a minute asks himself the question, "Will it effect my material interests?" but only, "Is it right?" "If the reply to this question is "Yes," he moves right on in the sacred path of duty, though it leads through a "burning, fiery furnace," or a lion's den. The frowns of friends, or the threats of foes, move him not. His position is taken, and from it he will not be driven. When he approaches the portals of the tomb he exclaims, "I have fought a good fight;" and when he is lowered into the grave, the very remembrance of his heroism calls forth the words, "There he lies who never feared the face of man." Such are the men who triumph over every foe and are more than conquerors through him that loved us.—Sel.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

A STRONG AND HANDY CEMENT.—One of the strongest cements, and very readily made, is obtained when equal quantities of gutta percha and shellac are melted together and well stirred. This is best done in an iron capsule placed on a sand-bath, and heated either over a gas-furnace or on the top of a stove. It is a combination possessing both hardness and toughness—qualities that make it particularly desirable in mending crockery. When this cement is used the articles to be mended should be warmed to about the melting point of the mixture, and then retained in proper position until cool. when they are ready for use.

EARACHE.—In the American Medical Association, Dr. Jacobi remarked that closing the mouths of infants and children, and simply blowing into the nose, is often a very valuable method of relieving severe earache, and that in a number of cases he had obtained most excellent results from this procedure, the cause of the trouble probably being a catarrhal affection of the Eustachian tube.

SYRINGING THE EAR.—Let it be laid down as a rule from which there is to be no departure, says the Atlanta Medical and Surgical Journal, that no ear should be actively syringed unless there is something in it which it is important to remove. Cold water should never be put into the ear.

BUTTERMILK AS SUMMER FOOD, DRINK, AND MEDICINE.—A recent writer asserts that for a hot-weather drink nothing equals buttermilk. "It is," he says, "both drink and food, and for the laborer is the best known. It supports the system, and even in fever will cool the stomach admirably. It is also a most valuable domestic remedy. It will cure dysentery as well as and more quickly than any other remedy known. Dysentery is really a constipation, and is the opposite of diarrhœa. It is inflammation of the bowels with congestion of the 'portal circulation'—the circulation of blood through the bowels and liver. It is a disease always prevalent in the summer and autumn. From considerable observation I feel warrented in saying that buttermilk, drunk moderately, will cure every case of it; certainly when taken in the early stages."

ANTI-FAT DIETARY.—Our corpulent friends may be interested in the report of Mr. Joseph Harrass's attempts to get rid of his superfluous burden of flesh, especially as the dietary followed does not seem, on the face of it, to be an objectionable one, and has not proved injurious to health in his case. The facts are stated in the Herald of Health as follows:

"He was corpulent, had irregular and feeble action of the heart, tendency to fainting, difficulty of breathing, and many disagreeable sensations in the head indicative of nervous exhaustion. Height, five feet six inches; normal weight, 150 lbs.; age, fifty-nine; weight at beginning of treatment, 200 lbs. Began treatment October 8th. Treatment as follows:

"Breakfast—Vegetables, brown bread (toasted), water, with lemon juice, and occasionally oatmeal.

"Dinner—Vegetables, brown bread, water, and plain pudding.

"Supper—Brown bread (toasted), stewed fruit, and water.

"No tea, coffee, cocoa, or milk, except skimmed, and only a trifle of butter.

"Result:—

End of October weighed	187	lbs.
" November weighed	182	"
" December weighed	177	"
" January weighed	174	"
" February weighed	173	"
" March weighed	170	"
" April weighed	168	"
" May weighed	166	"
" June weighed	166	"
Present weight	150	"

"All the distressing symptoms have been relieved, and the patient is so well he can again carry on his business. His physical and mental strength have been greatly increased.

"Mr. Harrass says he has suffered no serious discomfort from his diet, except when away from home, and he feels as if he had learned an important lesson as to how to reduce his corpulence—which has been such a source of discomfort—and once more enjoy life."

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

BE IN TIME.

Be in time for every call;
If you can be first of all;
Be in time.
If your teachers only find
You are never once behind,
But are like the dial, true,
They will always trust to you;
Be in time.

Never linger ere you start,
Set out with a willing heart;
Be in time.
In the morning up and on,
First to work, and soonest done;
This is how the goal's attained;
This is how the prize is gained;
Be in time.

Those who aim at something great
Never yet were found too late;
Be in time.
Life with all is but a school;
We must work by plan and rule,
Ever steady, earnest, true,
Whatsoever you may do,
Be in time.

Listen, then, to wisdom's call—
Knowledge now is free to all;
Be in time.
Youth must daily toil and strive,
Treasure for the future hive;
For the work they have to do.
Keep this motto still in-view—
Be in time.

GIRLS IN EARNEST.

Dear young girls, if you feel tired and discouraged it may brighten you a little to hear a true story of a couple of maidens who fought against fate, more than twenty-five years ago in the wilds of Maine.

The Wellmen family, consisting of a widow and six children, lived "off on a cross road," half a mile from the highway; and the people in the quaint little village under the hill pitied them because their house "looked so lonesome." It was a low-roofed, unpainted cottage, with a smart bush of southern-wood each side of the door stone, and a well-sweep a few rods to the right. Not at all a charming place, except for a grand mountain view at the back door, which Marcia and Jane drank in as they stood there feeding the chickens.

These girls walked more than a mile, over a hilly, rocky road, to a very common school, where at best they had only five months' instruction in the year. So what could they be thinking of to try to "get an education?" Why, anybody could see it was a sheer impossibility!

But here, let me tell you, that Marcia Wellman didn't mind such trifles as impossibi'ities! Not she! You couldn't daunt her brave spirit any more than you can kill out Canada thistles. The winter she was sixteen and Jane fourteen they had mastered common arithmetic and were beginning algebra and Latin. Miss Gordon, the teacher, kindly heard their lessons after school; for, as she wrote her friends in New York, "they are wonderful girls, and she felt it an honor to help them."

In January of that year a great storm set in, the wind and snow followed one another like two stump orators in a presidential campaign. The sun rose next Monday morning and looked for the little town of Vance, but it was buried alive under the snow. Not a fence was to be seen, or the remotest trace of a road.

"No school to-day," sighed Jane, looking out at the earth as it lay in its white sheet.

"No, but there'll be school to-morrow. I can just see Mr. Diggles, ever so far off, with any number of oxen. Oh, what a cross it is to live on a cross-road!"

Marcia set her teeth as she spoke, knowing Mr. Diggles to be an unneighborly man, who would never think of letting them out of their white prison.

"Nobody'll remember us," said Jane, tearfully; "we shall be snowed up for a week!"

"Oh fie!" said Marcia, whose courage always revived when she saw her sister crying. "I'll dig my way out, never fear!"

"Why, Marcia Fuller Wellman! It's half a mile, and the drifts are as high as your head. You dig us out, indeed!"

"Oh, well! you'll help," said Marcia, confidently. "And mother'll help."

She was a skillful general. She knew her men. When Mrs. Wellman and Jane heard her clear, ringing voice, and saw her face set like Hannibal crossing the alps, there was nothing for it but look up the snow shovel. With that and a barn shovel and a spade, these three intrepid women undertook to cut their way through a chain of mountains to the village.

"Slow and steady!" said the mother, thrusting her shovel into the heart of a pyramid.

Cut, slash, went the spade! that was Marcia. Thump, plunge, went the barn shovel! that was Jane. Ah, but it was terrible work for young arms!

By noon the cross-road was half cleared, and the girls caught their breath and wondered if Mr. Diggles, down by the corner, "wouldn't feel ashamed of himself."

But he was accustomed to feeling ashamed, and he didn't mind it. Like the Levite, he passed by on the other side; and we will be charitable enough to think he didn't see the brave women who were trying to do the work of oxen.

Before dark it was done, and Marcia flourished her tired arms, exclaiming:

"Sound the trumpet, beat the drum;
Tremble, Vance, we come, we come!"

It was a brilliant victory. But the girls did not know they had made their lives sublime. They never dreamed that this thing which was done in a corner was spread far and wide through the streets of New York.

Two weeks afterward, as they were eagerly conning their Latin grammar in the kitchen, the stage-driver dropped at their door an enormous package containing forty valuable books.

Books for them!—what did it mean? Perhaps Miss Gordon could have told, if she had been there.

The package was sent by three eminent men of New York, and bore a card inscribed with the words: "To the Misses Wellman, as a token of respect for their pursuit of knowledge under difficulties."

Thus ends my true story of two "girls in earnest," either of them "worthy to sit at a king's right hand in thunder storms."—Christian at Work.

THE FEAST OF CHERRIES.

The children of Hamburg celebrate a great day called the "Feast of Cherries." All the boys and girls parade the streets, dressed in their best clothes, and carry green boughs decorated with cherries. This festival is to commemorate a great victory that was obtained by the children of Hamburg, in 1432 and which saved the city. The Hussites threatened to destroy it, and the poor people were in great terror. Then it was proposed by one of the citizens, named Wolf, that all the children in the city, from seven to fourteen years of age, should be dressed in mourning and sent as supplicants to Procopius Nasus, who was at the head of the Hussites, to plead for the doomed city.

Procopius certainly was not a very hard hearted man, for his heart was touched by this mournful procession that he not only received the children kindly, but treated them with cherries, and promised to spare their beloved city. The children returned with great joy, crowned with leaves, carrying bunches of cherries in their hands, and shouting "Victory."

No wonder the litttle Hamburgers still keep up "The Feast of Cherries," in remembrance of the great victory obtained by the children in "cherry time" more than four hundred years ago.—Youth's Companion.

CURIOUS HABITS OF ANTS.—Ants have slaves. These proverbial examples to the sluggard keep certain insects as we keep cows, and build sheds over them, and keep others as pets. The bloated ant-aristocrats, it is said, "have lost the greater part of their instincts;—their art, that is, the power of building; their domestic habits, for they show no care for their young, all this being done by the slaves; their industry, for they take no part in providing the daily supplies; if the colony changes the situation of its nest, the masters are all carried by the slaves on their backs to the new one; nay, they have even lost the habit of feeding. Huber placed thirty of them with some larvæ and pupæ and a supply of honey in a box. 'At first,' he says, 'they appeared to pay some little attention to the larvæ; they carried them here and there, but presently replaced them. More than one-half of the Amazons died of hunger in less than two days. They had not even traced out a dwelling; and the few ants still in existence were languid and without strength. I commiserated their condition, and gave them one of their black companions. This individual unassisted, established order, formed a chamber in the earth, gathered together the larvæ, extricated several young ants that were ready to quit the condition of pupæ, and preserved the life of the remaining Amazons.' This observation has been fully confirmed by other naturalists. However small the prison, however large the quantity of food, these stupid creatures will starve in the midst of plenty rather than feed themselves.... I have, however, kept isolated specimens for three months by giving them a slave for an hour or two a day to clean and feed them; under these circumstances they remained in perfect health, while but for the slaves, they would have perished in two or three days." Sir John Lubbock has tested these experiments for himself and supports them.

TEMPERANCE.

A FEW WORDS ON TOBACCO.

Dr. Lewis A. Sarfe, of New York, says that paper cigarettes are worse than tobacco ones, probably the paper absorbs more of the nicotine, the poisonous principle of tobacco, which is thence carried into the system.

Bishop Warren addressing a Methodist Conference the other day, brought a visible smile of self-satisfaction over the countenances of his brethren by the statement that he knew an entire Conference in the church in which not one member used tobacco. The smile was not quite so wide, however, when he added that "it was a colored Conference."

It is alleged that the prohibition of the liquor traffic in Maine has led to a largely increased consumption of tobacco, opium, etc., in that State. Ex-governor Dingley, in a late address, called attention to the very significant fact that the revenue reports show that while the expenditure for tobacco averages one dollar per capita in the United States, it averages but seventeen cents per capita in the State of Maine.

A new departure is to be taken in the blue ribbon movement in England. At a "Gospel Temperance Mission," conducted in Manchester by Mr. Francis Murphy, of America, the originator of this now wide-spread organization, pledge-takers have the option of donning either the ordinary ribbon, signifying total abstinence from alcoholic liquors, or a ribbon with a white line running up the centre of the blue to denote, in addition, abstinence from (or, in the case of females, opposition to) the use of tobacco and all other narcotics.

The use of tobacco by the boys in our public schools has attained startling proportions. Mr. William Stephens, the principal of a school in Philadelphia, has called the attention of the Board of Education to the subject, in which he says that, of the 50,000 pupils in the public schools of the city a large proportion use tobacco in various forms, and that the habit has increased to an alarming extent since the cigarette was instituted. Mr. Stephens has prepared and had printed a short statement of the physical and mental disorders produced in children by tobacco, and has pasted it on the inside of every text-book used in his school.

Physicians are well agreed that the use of tobacco by growing boys is full of danger. Recent investigations, especially in France, have demonstrated that a whole train of nervous diseases are to be traced to this practice. If you want to stop growing, if you want to have a set of nerves that are like those of an invalid old lady, if you wish to grow feeble and thin, if you wish to grow sallow and puny, I do not know any better way than to smoke tobacco. It will make a drain on your nervous system which will be sure to tell after awhile.

All this is too much to be quietly endured. Said I to a gentleman the other day, "What grade of men are these Chewers and Spitters?" "Tobacco," he replied, "reduces all its subjects to a level. If a man smokes and chews, he must spit. Those who are the slaves of their appetites are always lovers of self and ease. Therefore, chewers and smokers will spit anywhere and everywhere, without the least regard to decency or the comfort of any person but themselves. When a man has formed this habit, he must cease to be a gentleman."

TOBACCO AND BLINDNESS.

At the annual commencement of the Hospital College of Medicine, of Louisville, Ky., Prof. Dudley S. Reynolds delivered an address to the graduating students, in which he took strong ground against the use of tobacco:

It is a well-known fact that tobacco deranges the digestion and poisons the nerve centers of a majority of the male members of the human family. A species of blindness, not complete, but partial blindness, sufficiently great in extent to destroy the reading of ordinary type, results from the continued and excessive use of tobacco. Careful investigations have led to the discovery that that form of tobacco habit known as smoking produces the so-called amblyopia. This form of amblyopia is precisely identical in all respects with that produced from the excessive use of alcohol. Both are incurable. I know a number of persons in Louisville who are now practically blind from the excessive use of tobacco. A lady in Portland was forced to admit she had been a secret smoker of tobacco for thirty years. On abandoning the habit the further progress of her dimness of vision ceased, though there is little or no hope of her regaining that power of perception which she had already lost. She may be considered fortunate in the possession of enough vision to go about and attend her ordinary household duties. Smoking tobacco has never been known to result beneficially to any person in the world. It always lessens the sense of smell and taste; it always contaminates the breath; it always creates an unsteadiness of the muscles, through its irritating effect upon the nerves; and I know from personal experience it diminishes the capacity for mental labor. Now, if you can succeed in inducing even a few people to abandon the habit of smoking, and to pay over to a common charity fund the amount formerly spent for cigars and smoking tobacco, the time may come when public taxation may be reduced, and the condition of the pauper, who is now miserable, made at least comfortable. If the money destroyed by burning cigars and tobacco in Louisville could be paid into the city treasury, it would support all our charitable institutions, and pay the entire expense of the street-cleaning department besides. This would reduce taxation nearly or quite one-half, and produce a corresponding improvement in the public health.

THE CHURCHES.

—The United Presbyterian church of this city is out of debt, and Dr. Meloy as well as his people are happy.

—Ben Hogan, the reformed pugilist of this city, is holding meetings in the M. E. church at Council Bluffs, Iowa, with crowded houses—something unusual at this time of the year. There is a deep religious interest, and a great many have been converted.

—In the afternoon session of the Congregationalist Missionary Union at Saratoga, last week, it was voted to raise $100,000 for mission work in the West and South, and that sum was subscribed in the meeting.

—The American Sunday-School Union, which has held its fifty-ninth anniversary at Hartford, Conn., reports the following summary of work during the past year: New schools organized, 2,252; teachers in the same, 10,376; scholars, 82,749. During the fifty-nine years of its existence the Union has organized 74,027 schools with a total membership of 3,587,850.

—The Classon Avenue Presbyterian church, Brooklyn, has called to its pulpit the Rev. L. I. Chamberlain, of the Broadway Tabernacle Congregational church of Norwich, Conn., and he has accepted. Mr. Chamberlain is a graduate of Yale, is about forty-two years old, and is a brother of ex-Governor Chamberlain of South Carolina. He is a preacher of marked ability, and very popular personally. He was for some years pastor of the New England church, Chicago, and was one of the foremost assistants of Mr. Moody during the great gospel meetings here in 1876.

—Isaiah Reid, editor of The Highway has been elected pastor of an independent holiness church, called "The Church at Nevada, Ia," after the New Testament model. Similar societies are reported in Missouri, West Virginia, California and New England.

—The First Presbyterian church, Chicago, Rev. J. H. Barrows, pastor, has received 117 members at the home church and the branch Railroad chapel during the year, seventy-two on confession. The present membership is 938. The contributions for home expenses and benevolences have amounted to $35,235.

—Two Presbyterian elders have put money into a republication of Dr. Killen's History of the Ancient Church, an admirable and most useful book, and it has been brought out at a low price by Randolph & Co., New York. Mrs. T. M. Sinclair and Mr. John Sinclair give a copy of the book to every Presbyterian minister in Iowa, and to every home missionary in Dakota.

—Out of the 1,300 graduates of Middlebury College, Vermont, 500 have been, or are ministers of the gospel under nine ecclesiastical organizations; eighteen have become presidents of colleges or theological seminaries, seventy have become college professors, and forty have become missionaries.

—The Augustana Swedish Lutheran Synod meets this year at Red Wing, Minn., in the church of Rev. Pastor Sjoblom, on the 13th of June. The meeting is one of special importance on account of the consideration of the revised constitution and the adoption of greatly increased efforts for the ingathering of the vast Swedish immigration to this country. How the multitude of pastors, delegates, and visitors are to be accommodated, we cannot imagine, but it will be done, and that right nobly, as is always the ease at these synodical meetings.—Workman.

—The catalogue of Talladega College, Alabama, recently issued, contains lists of the faculty, graduates, and students, together with a statement of the courses of study, expenses, regulations, etc. The summary of students shows a total attendance of 290, who are subdivided as follows: Theological department, 14; college preparatory, 12; normal, 64; grammar, 70; primary, 137; industrial, 16. The institution was founded and has been sustained by the American Missionary Association; it has some pressing demands now, since the unroofing of the college building by the tornado which visited Talladega lately.

—It was lately noticed that a new Sabbath-school had been established on a reform basis in the northwestern part of the city, by Bro. W. E. Catlin, a manufacturer and dealer in mill machinery. The organization by which the work is carried on is known as the Gospel Union Temperance Association. A novel plan has been adopted to encourage the young people in total abstinence from strong drink. The Association has engaged Prof. Scott to give a term of lessons in vocal music at their Hall, 1662 Milwaukee Ave., commencing Saturday, June 9th, at 8 P.M. A ticket of admission for the entire term is given free to any person who will sign the Temperance Pledge.

—The Rev. J. F. McNamee, formerly a Roman Catholic student, and now pastor of the Reformed Catholic church in Brooklyn, N. Y., was married Thursday evening in the presence of his congregation, which meets in Grand Central Hall, at No. 637 Fulton street, Brooklyn. The bride was Miss Josephine Vanderbilt. A large number of persons were present. The Rev. Mr. Dekins, of the Reformed Catholic church in Newark, N. J., performed the ceremony according to the Protestant Episcopal ritual.

—Mr. Bennett, writing from Rangoon, India, describes the work of the Methodist brethren, working independently under the arrangement of William Taylor, as "wonderful." They are, he says: wise in their generation. They seek a locality where they are likely to get a good English congregation, get support in whole or in part (mostly the former), and in some cases indirectly work on the heathen. I suppose there are now thirty or forty places in India where they have placed some of their best men; and it is really astonishing what an influence this American element is having on the people in India, native and European.

—Dougan Clark, of Cleveland, a celebrated evangelist among the Friends, and A. H. Hussey, former publisher of the Christian Worker, have just begun a new weekly journal the Gospel Expositor at Columbus, O., evidently these brethren believe that, since the removal of the Worker to this city, there is room for another Quaker organ. The paper will be marked by the character of its editor as an advocate of holy living and Christian zeal for the salvation of mankind.

—Professor Park, of Andover Theological Seminary, intends obtaining the opinion of the judges of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts upon the question whether "the new theology" shall be permitted to be taught in the seminary. According to the professor, the founders of the institution established for it a creed which, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, cannot be altered, the four cardinal points in it being the trustworthiness of the Bible in matters of religion and morality, the total depravity of man in his natural state, the efficacy of Christ's atonement, and the doctrine that probation ends with this life.

—The growth in the membership of Mr. Spurgeon's church is something marvelous. The members are drawn to the Tabernacle from every quarter of London, and in some instances from miles beyond; and were they to be all present upon any one occasion, there would be something less than 100 empty seats available for the crowds of strangers who find their way to Newington every Sunday. The annual meeting of the congregation had just been held, under the presidency of Mr. Spurgeon, It was reported that the offerings at the doors during the twelve months for the college again corresponded with the date of the year amounting to £1,382. The additions to the membership for the year had been 444, received thus: By baptism, 267; by letter, 116; by profession, 57; by restoration, 4. The reductions from various causes numbered 327. The net increase for the year was thus shown to be 117, bringing the membership of the congregation up to 5,427.

—The United Presbyterian church at Norfolk, Va., opened a school for the instruction of the freedmen three months ago, Of it Mr. Clarke writes: "No sooner were the doors opened than the dusky children of Ham crowded in and filled the house. On the first day ninety-four scholars presented themselves for enrollment, and on the second 140 were in attendance. Day after day they crowded in, and now when we write 467 have applied for admission. With the limited accommodation and teaching force at our command it has been impossible to admit them all; but they insist on having their names enrolled, so that they may claim a seat when we are prepared to receive them. The average daily attendance for the month of April has been about 240, and for the three months just closed, 221."

—The Quakers of Philadelphia and vicinity are greatly concerned as to the falling off of their numbers. At the Yearly Meeting held last week this matter was made the subject of investigation and discussion. Several leading Friends gave it as their opinion that the increase of wealth is at the bottom of the trouble. It is known that most of the Friends are exceedingly thrifty. Some of them have made vast amounts of money. Their children have no fancy for the severe broad-brim and scoop-bonnet fashions, but desire to put on more style, and to live like the world's people. Very few of the young folks, rich or poor, are following in the ways of their parents. The only way in which these young people can be saved to Quakerism is for the more elderly ones to relax their old rules as to costume and amusements. These good old people have forbidden so many things which are not sinful that the younger ones feel cramped and are asking for more liberty. If they cannot have within the bounds of Quakerism the liberty they want, they will seek it elsewhere, notably in the Protestant Episcopal church, whither a great many of them are going.

DENOMINATIONS.

The following article from the Examiner, one of the ablest of the demoninational organs, is so full of truth and contains so plain an answer to those who plead for sectarian divisions as intrinsically right, that I wish they would consider it. Especially I call attention to the last point, viz. that obedience to Christ is of more consequence than any seeming success. The prayer of our Saviour "That they all might be one—that the world may believe that thou hast sent me" can never be answered by denominational rivalry, and any seeming good accomplished by opposing the mind of Christ is a real evil.

H. H. HINMAN.

ARE DENOMINATIONS A BLESSING?

The Christian at Work boldly says that they are. The reason assigned for this curious opinion is that "the greatest usefulness of the church at large is secured by the animated Christian rivalry of religious bodies. This principle is thus illustrated: "No wise man advocates the union of the families of a community into one household, for their best good or happiness. That would begin a day of roaring and something worse than disintegration. The same principle applies to the ecclesiastical union of all the churches."

Now an illustration proves nothing, especially when it does not illustrate the point at issue. It does not follow that if denominations were abolished all Christians would be gathered into something like one family; on the contrary, they would still be in separate families—that is, churches—just as now. The only difference would be that these separate families would be on terms of equality and brotherly intercourse. Would there be any disagreeable consequences to society, supposing the thing to be possible, if all the families of New-York were on friendly terms with each other, and the members of each were ready to do all neighborly and kindly things for the members of every other? So far from such a state of things being bad, the Millennium would be near if it could be brought about. The present isolation of interests is necessary, to be sure, but not desirable. As the world goes, one dares not be to friendly with those whose honor and integrity he has not proved, but this is surely not a state of things to thank God for and wish no better.

Denominationalism is doubtless inevitable, and perhaps may be conceded to be a not unmixed evil. But it is, we believe, a thing to be deplored and striven against. We cannot take the rose-colored view of its results that our esteemed contemporary takes. The "animated Christian rivalry" of the denominations has in some cases produced greater results than might otherwise have been seen, but how about the far more numerous cases where the rivalry has been neither animated nor Christian? In how many villages of this State, for example, are there not more churches than the people need or are able to support, each eking out a miserable existence—it cannot be called life—and willing to keep on doing so indefinitely for the sake of holding up a denominational standard? In such a community the rivalry is bitter, and often the chief thing accomplished by the united efforts of the churches is to neutralize each other's attempts to do any aggressive work. We are not saying that all these churches do wrong to maintain their existence, we are simply showing that their rivalry does harm, not good, as The Christian at Work seems to believe.

Again, consider the enormous waste of money and energy that is caused by denominationalism. Were the five pastors of many a country town to unite their labors in well-directed efforts for the evangelization of the town, instead of each devoting all his energies to building up his church at the necessary expense of the others, how much more would be done. The building and maintenance of unnecessary houses of worship, the equipment and running expenses of separate missionary and benevolent societies, absorbs a vast amount of money that might be directly given to the work itself, were these denominational lines swept away.

But even if it were true that denominationalism produced greater visible results than unity, denominationalism would still be deplorable. The object of Christians is, or at least should be, to obey Christ themselves and to get him obeyed by others. But it surely will not be pretended by any one that all Christians are doing this with equal fidelity. In all this conflict of faith and practice that constitutes denominationalism, some must be nearer the truth than others; and if this be so, the others are neither obeying Christ nor teaching men to obey him. Is this a thing for any Christian man to rejoice in? Will anybody say that it is better on the whole for the world that a large part of the professed followers of Christ should not follow him, or follow him afar off? But that is involved in the approval of denominationalism, as it exists to-day.

The sober second-thought will lead every Christian man to deplore the fact that men are so blinded by ignorance or prejudice or early training or whatever other cause, that they cannot see the truths taught in the New Testament by inspired apostles as the apostles themselves saw them, eye to eye.

THE
CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot, should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

FARM NOTES.

GUINEA FOWLS will keep all bugs and insects of every description off garden vines. They will not scratch like other fowls, or harm the most delicate plants.

THE application of sulphur sprinkled upon fowls, while roosting or otherwise, with a pepper-box, will destroy vermin.

FOWLS need charcoal when in confinement; but that from wood is not palatable to them. The best way to furnish it is by charring an ear of corn. The fowls will devour it greedily, and the improved color of their combs will soon show its wholesome effect.

PETROLEUM FOR ANTS.—A correspondent of the London Garden writes: For several years one of our garden beds was rendered almost useless by the tunnelings of ants; many remedies were tried, and at last pure petroleum was poured over the ground. After a fortnight young plants were bedded in it, and suffered no ill effects, though the soil smelt strongly of petroleum. This happened two years ago, and the ants have never since returned.

A HINT FOR SHEEP OWNERS.—A quiet Virginia granger who lost twenty sheep by dogs, one night a while ago, went to the owner of a suspected cur and asked that it be killed. The owner of course said that his dog was innocent, and the quiet granger went away. He piled the twenty sheep's carcasses in a heap, built a little rail fence about them, and smiled a quiet smile. The fence was made so as to form a sort of half covering over the mutton, in shape like an Esquimaux hut, with a hole at the top, so that, while any kind of a dog could run up on the outside and jump in, no possible dog could ever jump out. The next morning the granger strolled out to the trap with a shot-gun and killed the suspected cur. But he let the trap remain and repeated his strolls until he had shot forty-six dogs, and there is not now a bark to be heard in all the town.

HUNGARIAN GRASS FOR FODDER.—A large crop of good fodder may be secured upon early rye or other stubble by Hungarian Grass. The ground should be prepared as for oats or any other grain, well manured, and the Hungarian sown broadcast and harrowed in slightly. The seed may be sown as late as the middle of July, about one bushel per acre, but the best results are obtained from sowing in early June. If it is desired to have green fodder for a number of weeks in autumn, the Hungarian seed may be sown at intervals of a week or so for upwards of six weeks. The ripe heads of this grass contain a large number of hard and sharp awns or bristles, which are irritating to the stomach of animals, especially horses. This trouble can be avoided by cutting the crops soon after the heads mature, and before the awns have grown to full length and become hard. This grass, when cured, is equal in feeding value to good hay. If there is a demand for late fodder, sow some hungarian during the present month.

HOW TO KILL CABBAGE WORMS.

The ravages of the caterpillars of the cabbage butterfly caused a good deal of trouble last summer at the State Agricultural Experiment Station, Geneva, N. Y., particularly those of the second of August brood. In order to test the efficacy of various reputed remedies for the cabbage worm, the director applied them to special collections of worms, and noted the effects. One specimen confined for three hours in a bottle partly filled with black pepper crawled away colored by the powder, but apparently unharmed. The second, repeatedly immersed in a solution of saltpetre, and a third in one of boracic acid, exhibited very little indication of inconvenience. Bisulphide of carbon produced instant death when applied to the worm, though its fumes were not effectual. The fumes of benzine as well as the liquid caused almost instant death, but when applied to the cabbage small whitish excrescences appear on the leaves. Hot water applied to the cabbage destroyed a portion of the worms, causing also the leaves to turn yellow. One ounce of saltpetre and two pounds of common salt dissolved in three gallons of water formed an application which was perfectly efficient. The most satisfactory remedy tested, however, consisted of a mixture of one-half pound each of hard soap and kerosene oil in three gallons of water. This was applied August 26; an examination the following day showed many if not all the worms destroyed. The growing cabbage presents such a mass of leaves in which the caterpillars may be concealed, that it is hardly possible to reach all the worms at one application. It is of importance, therefore, to repeat the use of any remedy at frequent intervals.—Scientific American.

A New Departure.

Owing to the unprecedented success attending the sale of Dr. Scott's renowned $3.00 Corset, and a very general inquiry for Electric Corsets of less price, but possessing the same therapeutic quality and elegance of shape, the Doctor has decided to place upon the market a full line of these beautiful and invaluable articles, which will now retail at $1.00, $1.50, $2.00 and $3.00; thus bringing them within the reach of all. These Corsets, we are assured, possess real merit and apart from their "Electric" quality, are well worth the prices asked. A great feature about them is that they prevent as well as cure disease, therefore all ladies, even those enjoying good health, should wear them. The Doctor's record is good, and you may be sure of getting good value for your money. We invite you to read his large Corset advertisement in this issue, and address him at 842 Broadway, New York.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

THE Ohio courts sustain the action of a telephone company which removed the instrument from a customer who constantly swore through it. Telephones haven't become political factors as yet.

ANOTHER African explorer is in the field. Lientenant Wissmann, a German army officer, has made a successful journey across the continent of Africa, from San Paola de Londa, on the west coast, to Saadani, on the east coast. He succeeded in exploring Dr. Livingston's Lake Lincoln, and definitely determined its geographical position.

IT is estimated that 7,000 Chicago families changed their place of residence on May 1st. Putting the average expense for cartage at $15, over $100,000 went into the hands of expressmen and others connected with the transfer bnsiness. In half the cases, probably, removal made necessary the purchase of new carpets, or of materials corresponding thereto. This put about $165,000 extra into the hands of the dealers. Moving is expensive bnsiness, not connting the wear and tear on body and mind.

THE cable announces the death of Gerald Fitzgibbon, the last survivor of the splendid batch of barristers who conducted the defense of O'Connell in the State trials. He was over 80 at his death, and of singular habits. He never tasted medicine in his life. He would eat no bread that was not baked in his own oven, and always carried his loaves with him on circnit. He kept a cow in his cellar in Gloucester street, where he lived for years, and would not drink milk or taste butter from a dairy. He had been a hedge schoolmaster in early life, and was called to the bar when considerably advanced in years, but succeeded by his unflinching labor and perseverance. His son is Lord Justice of Appeal.

"A LOCOMOTIVE ran through a broken bridge on the Kansas Pacific Railway, across Kiowa Creek, several years ago, sinking into the mnd at the bottom, and has never since been heard from, though repeated efforts have been made, by digging and boring, to recover so valuable a piece of property. The botton is quicksand; bnt even quicksands have limits, and it seems very singular that the longest boring rod has failed to find any trace of the sunken engine. By and by the silent, mysterious operation will drain the quicksands and harden it into rock, and then, long after the Kansas Pacific Road has been forgotten, and the Kiowa Creek has vanished from the map, some future scientist will discover a curious piece of mechanism, nndoubtedly the work of hnman hands, lying under so many hnndred feet of sandstone, and will use the fact as a basis of calculating how many years old the human race mnst be."

Dr. Scott's Electric Corset

Owing to the unprecedented success attending the sale of our $3 Electric Corset, and the constant demand for Electric Corsets of less price, hut of the same therapeutic value, we have decided to place upon the market A HANDSOME LINE OF ELECTRIC CORSETS, ranging in price from $1 to $3, thus bringing them within the reach of all. They are equally charged with Electro-Magnetism, the difference being only in the quality of material. The two higher grades are made of extra fine English Sateen, while those of lesser price are of correspondingly good quality, made on the latest approved Parisian models, thus imparting a graceful and attractive figure to the wearer. By a recently invented process of honing or cording, we are enabled to offer to the public an ABSOLUTELY UNBREAKABLE Corset, and will guarantee them as such with all ordinary wear.

Being "Electric," "Unbreakable," the true French shape, and of better material than those ordinarly sold at the prices, these Corsets will command the preference of the purchaser. They are constructed on scientific principles, generating an exhilarating, health-giving current to the whole system. Their therapeutic value is unquestioned, and they quickly cure, in a marvelous manner, Nervous Complaints, Spinal Difficulties, Rheumatism, Paralysis, Numbness, Dyspepsia, Liver and Kidney troubles, Impaired Circulation, Constipation, and all other diseases peculiar to women, particularly those of sedentary habits. They also become, when constantly worn, equalizing agents in all cases of extreme fatness or leanness, hy imparting to the system the required amount of "odic force" which Nature's law demands. Scientists are daily making known to the world the indisputable beneficial effects of Electro-Magnetism, when properly and scientifically applied to the human body in this manner; and it is also affirmed hy professional men that there is hardly a disease which Electricity and Magnetism will not benefit or cure, and all medical men daily practice the same. Ask your own physician!

DR. W. A. HAMMOND, of New York,

Late Surgeon-General of the U. S., an eminent authority, publishes almost miraculous cures coming under his notice. Always doing good, never harm, there is no shock or sensation felt in wearing them. Those enjoying good health should also wear them, as they prevent as well as cure disease. The ordinary Electric Battery, when resorted to in similar cases to those above mentioned, is often too powerful and exciting, doing good during the operation, hut leaving the patient more exhausted and weakened than before; whereas, hy daily (and nightly, too, if desired), wearing our Electric Corset as ordinary corsets are usually worn; a gentle and exhilarating influence is lastingly and agreeably perceptible, quickly accomplishing that good for which they are worn. They will never harm even in the most sensitive cases. Ladies who have once tried them say they will WEAR NO OTHERS. The prices are as follows: $1, $1.50, $2, and $3. We now make all these goods in Dove and White only. They are sent out in a handsome hox, accompanied hy a silver-plated compass, by which the Electro-Magnetic influence of the Corsets can he tested. We will send either kind to any address, postpaid, on receipt of the price; with 20c. added for packing and registration, and we guarantee safe delivery into your hands. Remit in P. O. Money Order, Draft, Check, or in Currency by Registered Letter. In ordering kindly mention this publication, and state exact size of Corset usually worn; or, where the size is not known, take a tight measurement of the waist over the linen. This can he done with a piece of common string which send with your order. Make all remittances payable to

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the seleotion of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulneas of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter'a Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Chris-tian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2 00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Re-public, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

MISCELLANEOUS.

A.; all arranged in a neat heading at top of first page, and ruled both sides. $3.00 per 1,000; or post paid @ 40 cents per 100 sheets. Envelopes, of good quality to match, white or colored, with equally good but different quotations on back and face, @ $4.00 per 1,000; or post paid @ 60 cents per 100.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The families of sixteen striking coal-miners of Pinckneyville, Illinois, who were lodged in jail the other day for riotously assaulting the men employed in their places, demanded that the county commissioners furnish them with means of subsistence while the heads of the families are imprisoned. Being refused aid, the women Thursday attacked the non-uniou miners as they were going to work and drove them back.

—The double-turreted iron-clad monitor Amphitrite, the keel of which was laid in 1875, when Robeson ruled the navy, was launched Thursday at Wilmington, Delaware, and gives promise of confounding those who predicted that it could uot float after the engines and armaments have been put on board.

—The Illinois House of Representatives Friday passed the Harper high-license bill by a vote of 79 to 55.

—Two brothers named Barber who had shot two officers in resisting arrest were caught in a house near Waverly, Iowa, by five or six farmers. In the struggle five of the latter were wounded two fatally, but they bound the desperadoes. The Barbers were taken from the Waverly jail at 11:30 Friday night by a mob from Fayette county and hanged a short distance from town. They neither flinched nor pleaded for mercy.

—The Northwestern Marine Elevator, at Milwaukee burst last Wednesday under the pressure of 115,000 bushels of No. 2 wheat. The walls fell owing to the settling of the foundations, and about 2,000 bushels slid into the river. Seven tramps were seen dozing in its shadow a few minutes before the crash, and they were buried under the ruins.

—There is excitement at Ansonia, Conn., owing to the priest attempting to coerce Catholic citizeus to employ a young Catholic physician, who has just hung out his sign, in preference to the "heretical murderers" who have long practiced in the place. Church rites, Father Byron said, would be refused females who permitted other doctors to attend them.

FOREIGN.

—Carey, the Dublin informer, who is kept locked up because he refuses to quit Ireland, says, if fiually compelled to go, that he will return.

—The labor question in Cuba has assumed a serious phase, and statesmen and planters are devising plans for the introduction of free negroes or Chinese or Indian coolies. Liberia and Spain have signed a treaty respecting the prohibition of the introduction into Cuba of free African blacks.

—In Parliament, Thursday Gladstone said Errington went to Rome at his own suggestion, because, being a papist, he was much concerned in Irish affairs. He received neither pay nor instructions from the British government, but the ministry, nevertheless, would file a record of his mission with the archives in the Foreign Office.

—The Turkish Government has virtually raised the duties on liquor by compelling its storage at Smyrna, and intends, when the treaty of commerce expires, March 13 next, to stop the importation of American meats, lard, oil, etc. General Wallace has entered a protest.

—De Lesseps' recent statements about the Suez Canal are unsatisfactory to the English directors, and a committee of influential ship-owners decided Friday at London to procced vigorously with the new canal.

—War preparations on a great scale are being made iu Paris for a war with China. Three corps of troops are in readiness, and a fleet of war vessels is under orders to sail for Tonquin.

—The collection of the poll-tax from the poorest of the Russian peasentry will entirely cease on Jan. 1 next, and the tax from the remainder of the people will be reduced one-half.

—The Times correspondent at Paris says: "A Nihilist pamphlet has been issued which states that while the whole force of the Russian Government and its most intelligent spies were concentrated at Moscow during the coronation festivities, the Nihilists took advantage to spread their doctrines and enroll supporters in St. Petersburg and other centers. The pamphlet says the strength of the party in St. Petersburg is greatly increasing, and asserts that there were at the coronatiou, officials and others.

—A cable dispatch from Londou says: General Hicks has just gained a great victory in the Soudan over 5,000 Arabs, killing 500. The Arabs fight bravely as sacred knights, but their spears are useless against shells and cannon. Geueral Hicks' loss was two killed.

—The powder magazine at Scutari, Turkey, was struck by lightning, June 8, and a tremendous explosiou followed. Many persons were killed.

—Accounts have been received here that sanguinary fighting took place on the 2d and 3d inst. in Albania, between Turkish troops, under the command of Assym Pasha, and a body of Castratis. The Turks are reported to have lost 1,300 men, and the Castratis 500.

—Suleiman Daoud and Mahmoud Sami, the leaders in the firing of Alexandria during the bombardment by the British fleet eleven months ago, have been sentenced to death, and eighteen officers charged with complicity in the crime are condemned to imprisonment for various terms.

—Two ports in Northwestern Madagascar have been bombarded by the French, destroying a large amount of property belongiug to British aud other residents.

—The Prussian Ministry, Bismarck presiding, have decided to act on church matters independent of Rome, and introduce a bill in the Diet for a modification of the May laws.

—A leading Nihilist writes to a London journal, stating that the Czar was not molested at the coronation because the terrorist system had been replaced by plans for a coup d'etat aud attempts at revolt.

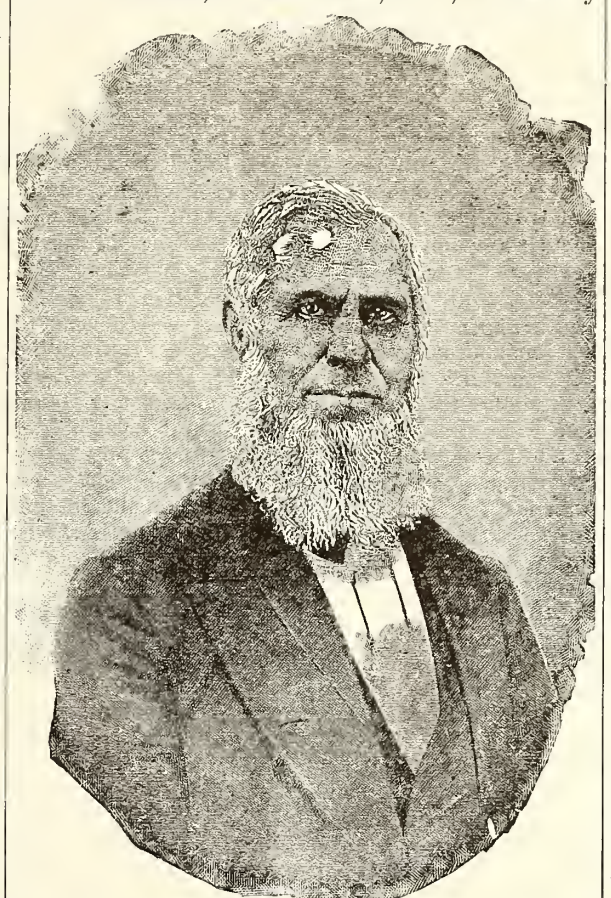
THE EXCELLENCIES of the present number of the Cynosure are so manifest that it is hardly necessary to call attention to them. Bishop Edwards was a man whom every friend of God knew only to love and revere. Our portrait is a very good likeness, being a copy from the steel plate in Prof. Davis's excellent life of Edwards issued from the U. B. Publishing House, Dayton.

NEXT WEEK

we can promise our readers another good number. The Annual Meeting will be one of the most important, and every one will wish to read Senator Pomeroy's address in Farwell Hall. The best time for every reader to show that he values his paper is NOW. Subscriptions are never out of season.



BISHOP DAVID EDWARDS.

[Editorial.]

The two sterling articles on this great man, in the present number, do but simple justice to his memory.

Dr. Davis wonders that God should "permit him to fall in the midst of the battle." Why was Moses permitted to fall, before the fighting had fairly begun—before Jericho, even? Like Edwards "his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated:" Like him, too, he "was faithful in all his house." Haply Moses died to throw off the people's trust from himself upon God. Haply, too, that the Aehans in Israel, kept in awe by his influence, might come out and show themselves. And if so the parallel holds good, for there are plenty of Achans now.

Why, the very brother who eleetioneered and nominated Bishop Edwards, as our first president, in our national convention at Pittsburgh, "when persecution arose beeause of that way" forsook both Edwards and us. At that very time, Edwards had long shrunk from, or by lodge influenee had been excluded from the pulpit of the First United Brethren church in Dayton; though he afterward preached there. And in the family of the brother alluded to above, that great, good man was spoken disrespectfully of, as "harsh, crabbed and unyielding." And in the social cirele of the church, where the gay preponderated over the grave, as in the Good Templar lodges to which some of them belonged, opinions eoncerning Bishop Edwards were given that he was "old fogy," and "uneomfortable to get along with." As in Moline, Ill., the U. B. presiding elder and his wife; said that Masons were courting young ladies to draw them into sympathy with the lodge, and away from the U. B. church, in some cases, even, where they had no intention whatever to marry them! The lodge spirit, thus trifling with the tender affections of young girls! Nothing is too mean and devilish for it to do!

Such were the influences, in Quaker language, "snaking their way into the Brethren churches," and embittering the life of the man whose tomb they now build; and whose "sepulchre" they "garnish." Dr. Lyman Beecher would temporize, but he had grace to own it. "Boys," said he to Weld and the other Abolitionists, "Boys, tug away, and roll your ear to the top of the hill; and then we we will all jump aboard, and say we were in it all the way up!"

Edwards and Jesse Wilson believed in "entire sanctification," and came near practieing it. Wilson led the way; but he was not so foolish as to think, like the monks of Mt. Athos in an early century, that sanctifieation was attained by ever turning the mind's eyes upon inward blessedness. Sixteen years after Wilson had received perfect sanctification he says, "Whatever inconsistencies may have marked my life sinee that time, I am convinced that it was a real and Scriptural experience." (Edwards' Memoir p. 63.) And so, doubtless, it was. Edwards and Mrs. Edwards took Wilson (and family) home to them, and said he "kept heaven open over their heads for months and till he died." Few, if any, instances are recorded in history where one family takes another into their home, to live for months, till the father can die. Edwards aud his wife did this.

Our aequaintance with Bishop Edwards began at Pittsburgh in 1868, where he became first president of the National Christian Association. The lodge devil was roused, and rallying all his forces attaeked the U. B. church at its next conference in Lebanon, Pa., 1869,

"——Black it stood as night;
Fierce as ten furies; terrible as hell."

Had that conference met in the times of Ossian, the ghosts of Otterbein, Boehm, Newcomer, Guething and others, Lutherans, German Reformed, Mennonites, Tunkers and Amish, who became "BRETHREN" at "Isaae Long's barn,"—these would, in imagination, have been seen sailing on the clouds around that august battlefield.

Bishop Edwards reported that great conflict, daily, in pencil, to us; ending, "The Lord hath triumphed gloriously!" The majority against the lodge was three to one. Even Bro. Shuey, who had voted in Miami Conference to open the church to the secret worships, by turning the law against them into advice, took the current and voted with the great majority to keep the chureh shut against the lodges! Milton Wright, I think, was chósen editor and W. O. Tobey his assistant at this meeting.

From that triumph hour, the shadow in the dial of the chureh of the United Brethren has to human view gone back. But Edwards went not back! As was said of the great and noble Finney,

"Nor number, nor example with him wrought,
To swerve from truth, or change his constant mind."

He had seen false leaders in 1839 mislead the ignorant and well-meaning to exclude for five whole years the slavery discussion from the Telescope; while three millions, "the least" of Christ's brethren, were lifting their dark hands, and pleading for a hearing for their just and holy cause. This skulking Edwards had seen and denounced it as "Bad policy and unrighteous before God!" And when the five years of silence, gloom and darkness were past, he had aided in removing the interdict; he saw the clouds lift; saw the old ship luff to the gale of discussion, turn her head into the teeth of the pro-slavery tempest and out-ride the storm. And he lived to join in the hallelujahs of men and angels,

"Jehovah hath triumphed! His people are free!"

over the fall of "American slavery, the vilest that ever saw the sun."

Such was not the man to go back on his record of 1868–9 as president of the National Christian Association. Cowards, worldlings and managers, doubtless wished him to go back; and, "The wish was father to the thought." They might send him to Baltimore, where the little finger of the lodge was thicker than its loins elsewhere; and if he did not, single-handed and alone, rend the Baltimore ehurehes in pieces to shake out the Masons from their fragments, they might whisper, "Edwards has gone back; he has ehanged his views." But the good and earnest Bishop Wright says that in 1876, "only two or three months before he died, Bishop Edwards wrote to him, "I have never been more in favor of excluding them [the lesser secret orders] from the church than now." This silenees the serpent slanders of the lodge. How could it be otherwise! The portals of heaven were then opening to reeeive him: and "There is no night," or night-meeting societies there.

When we have read this number of the Cynosure let us all kneel down and pray, that as a young man "took up the mantle of Elijah that fell from him" as he went up, so some modern Elisha may take up the mantle of Bishop Edwards, and smite the obstructing waters, and part them "hither and thither," so that the sons of the United Brethren prophets shall exclaim, "The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha."

DAVID EDWARDS; THE MAN AND CHRISTIAN.

BY PROF. L. DAVIS, D. D.

I first met Bishop Edwards and made his acquaintance in the Spring of 1839. From that time to the day of his death I was associated with him in almost every relation in life known to Christian men and ministers of the Gospel. So for nearly forty years I knew him well and intimately. It is hardly neeessary to say that I loved him dearly, for how could it be otherwise? In faet he had the respect and love of all who knew him. A life so devout, so sincere, so pure and true, could not be known without calling forth the warmest admiration and love. His spirit and life made a most salutary impression on the minds and hearts of all who came in contaet with him. These impressions were also deep and abiding. It is now seven years since the Lord took him, but the pleasant memories of the past still remain. "The memory of the just is blessed." This is fully verified in recalling the facts and ineidents of the life and labors of our departed brother and friend. These, thank God, can never be erased from the mind. We still feel the benign influence of his manly courage and rare virtues. As a brother, husband, father, citizen, pastor and bishop, he went in and out among us, without a blot or stain upon his character. With what fidelity and propriety he met and performed the duties which these relations impose, thousands can testify. His name will long be held in grateful remembrance. True his earthly life has passed away, his body gone to dust. Of this, however, we will not complain, though at the time of his departure many of us could not understand why he should be permitted to fall iu the very midst of the battle, nor can we now see through the deep mystery. God forgive if a word should be spoken, or a thought cherished, in the spirit of rebellion. No, it must not be, even if it should cost a struggle to say from the heart the will of the Lord be doue, it must be said and that too most sincerely. And yet, since he left us I have felt as never before the beauty and pathos of the words of David in his lamentation at the death of Jonathan, "How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle; I am distressed for thee, my brother; very pleasaut has thou been unto me." Nevertheless the present is full of pleasant memories and consolations; while the future is all glorious with immortal hopes. The great reunion will come by and by. Meanwhile let us not forget that the work is in the hands of the Lord, and that he will take care of results. The workmen die but the work goes on. The conflict between light and darkness, truth and error has been, may yet be, long and desperate, but the result can not be doubtful. Truth and victory are brothers. God had decreed it and man can not sunder them. This is the faith that overcomes the world. So says history, and so says a voice that comes from the graves of departed heroes.

Bishop Edwards was no ordinary man. His mind was highly endowed by nature and richly furnished by culture. His character was also pure and lovely. The spirit of God wrought mightly for him and in him. His religious experience was of a high order, it was indeed extraordinary. He seemed to walk and talk with God continually. His religious views were evangelical and decided. He did not win golden opinions as many preachers and politicians do, by neglecting to rebuke sin. All forms of vice he openly and fearlessly denounced. Notably among these may be mentioned slavery while it existed in our country, and secretism now the most gigantic fraud of modern times. The last official act of Bishop Edwards was marked by opposition to the lodge power. This occured at the last Conference he ever attended. He was brave, intrepid, courageous, but cautious and prudent. The union of these qualities in his composition made him both a hero and a reformer of the best type. In closing this sketch it may not be improper to observe that the life and times of Bishop Edwards belong to a period in the history of the United Brethren church made memorable by names not born to die.

Union Biblical Seminary, Dayton.

BISHOP EDWARDS' OFFICIAL LIFE.

BY EX-BISHOP MILTON WRIGHT.

Much might be written concerning Bishop Edwards as a man, but this paper will mainly treat of him as an editor and bishop. Eleven years after his conversion and nearly ten after his entrance upon the work of an itinerant minister, he was elected, at the age of twenty-nine, as editor of the Religious Telescope, by the General Conference of the United Brethren in Christ. Trembling under a sense of the fact that he was without college or even academical training, he entered upon this most important department of church work, to which he had been so unexpectedly called. His strong mental ability, his practical good sense, his fervent piety and his zeal for truth and reform were soon manifest in the church organ. He did much to mould the sentiments of the church, much to inspire it to action, and much to encourage and develop the literary taste and talent of the church. Soon the paper became the repository of the best thoughts of the rising ministers of the church, and of the laity. When it is remembered that the church was then composed mainly of recruits evangelized by missionary labor, the importance of this feature of patient and persevering editorial toil will be the more appreciated.

Mr. Edwards' views on slavery, secrecy, intemperance, and other current moral questions, were radical, and his pen throughout his life, was ever true to his strong convictions and high sense of duty. But his excellent judgment and rare discretion gave keenness and power to his utterances without giving needless offense; though he often did offend, and did not scruple to do so.

A superior, well-stored mind, given to penetrating, laborious thought, and conversant with genuine literature, could hardly fail to produce some literary gems. But editorial writing was not a favorite exercise with Mr. Edwards, though he delighted to preach. He once told the writer that he thought it would have killed him if he had served another editorial term. So when re-elected in 1849, he promptly declined continuance in that position, and another was elected in his stead. Much to his surprise, he was at the same session of the General Conference elected bishop, to which office he was five times re-elected, and in which he continued till his death—a period of twenty-seven years. But in the year 1853, in addition to his duties as bishop, he was elected editor of the Unity Magazine, the original title of which was The Unity with God and Magazine of Sacred Literature, and editor of the Children's Friend. The first was a magazine devoted to holiness and to the reforms which true holiness would promote, prominent among which were anti-secrecy, anti-slavery and temperance. It did much good while under his editorial care. The Children's Friend, of which he was the first editor, supplied a great want in the church, and now has a very large circulation. In 1866 he was chosen as one of four contributing editors of the Religious Telescope, to which for three years he furnished valuable editorial articles. His editorial services were second in importance only to those of a bishop, to which his brilliancy as a preacher, his ability as a presiding officer, his wisdom and fidelity in administration and his holiness of life peculiarly fitted him.

Entering upon the office of bishop in 1849, and continuing in it the remaining twenty-seven years of his life, and possessing those gifts referred to in the foregoing, it is uot strange that Mr. Edwards' reputation mainly rests on his labors in this capacity. Brilliant men who do not build up great principles or mould the church, may leave behind them only a remembrance of their pleasant entertainments; but Bishop Edwards leaves his monument in the abiding fruit of his labors. His impress is on the principles and polity of the church, upon her institutions, upon the conferences, and upon the hearts of our ministers and people. Reverence and affection for his memory are increasing rather than otherwise, and this is plainly to be seen in the eagerness of our people to purchase his biography.

Bishop Edwards' labors were most abundant. Long journeys by private conveyance in the earlier times, and by railroad at a later period, brought him in contact with the whole church. On the Potomac, on the Pacific coast, on the plains of Kansas, in the mountains of Tennessee, beyond the Lakes of the North in the Queen's dominion, everywhere throughout the church, he dispensed his labors, and was revered and loved. His eloquent sermous, his wise counsels, his influence as a presiding officer, his wonderful memory of men and of fields of labor and his conscientious advice on stationing committees, his example of spirituality and unblamable deportment, his stern but spiritual rebukes, his kindliest sympathies, his forbearance toward the erring in their repentance, his disposition to raise the weak and to lift all to a higher plane, were qualities that endeared him to a multitude of ministers and people.

Of missions he had said when editor of the church organ: "We must write, and pray, and preach, and give, till the whole church becomes a missionary society." He advocated in after years the establishment of our now very successful mission in West Africa. His soul went out in the fullest enthusiasm toward our struggling mission conferences in Kansas, Missouri and elsewhere.

Ever uncompromising in his opposition to slavery, he offended many on that subject, but did perhaps as much or more than any other man to maintain our Discipline in its time-honored exclusion of slaveholders from our church, till at last all churches, and our national government, and the civilized world are with us.

Opposed to the secret lodge system by taste, conviction and moral sense as an editor and a bishop, his course was steady and consistent throughout his long official career. He attended the first National Christian Association convention opposed to secret societies at Pittsburgh, and was chosen as its president, and to this Association, and to the interests which it was established to promote, he was a constant friend to the close of his life; and probably no man in the church did as much as he to inspire continued opposition to the toleration of secrecy in the church, which from the first had forbidden it. It has been reported by some desirous of throwing his great influence against the law of the church on secrecy, that he had become more favorable to the toleration of the minor orders than when he made a short speech against such toleration at the General Conference of 1869. He wrote to the writer of this in 1876, but two or three months before his death, referring to the minor orders: "I have never been more in favor of excluding them from the church than now." Not a little did the subject of secrecy weigh on his mind through his thirty-one years of honored official life; nor did he forget it in his last sickness. His soul abhorred the lodge.

Bishop Edwards was a mau of like passions with other men, but with God dwelling in him by his grace, all these were mightily subduced and consecrated to Christ and to his cause. He had teeming but not exubcrant vitality. He had a difidence, growing out of a sensitiveness to his imperfections, which less men do not always feel, but he had a courage and honesty as rugged as his native hills. He had strong convictions and a high sense of duty. There was nothing in him more conspicuous than his strong faith in God, and the expression and fruits of a vital, experimental piety. His charity was not that of an indifferent soul, but of a large heart, and it was strong and abiding.

Drawing comparisons from the shire of Wales, in which he was born, we may say that his character was as grand as the mountains of his uative Denbighshire; and as a barrier against the entrance of popular evils into the church, he was like the dike of Offa; as a pillar to support the ecclesiastical edifice, he was like that of Eliseg; and as a wonder to friend and foe, we may compare him to Chirk Castle. His was true greatness.

MY POSITION.

A young man in Worcester was asked to put his ideas of secret societies in writing and this is what he wrote, signing his name at the close:

"If I am a Christian I am certainly an odd fellow in this world.

"If I am a Christian I am also a free mason—free from law and condemnation, a mason because I help to build up the kingdom of God, of which Jesus Christ is the Corner Stone.

"If I am a Christian I am a knight, for, putting on the whole armor of God, I have to fight and subdue my own wicked heart. * * *

"If I am a Christian I am a brother to all those who are in need, making no distinction, as even Christ has compassion on all who come to him needy and bowed down with sorrow.

"Why should I then enter a secret society for the simple reason of doing good to others if I can exercise this plain Christian duty in the church?

"Why should I rely upon these societies for help, if the Lord, from wheuce my help cometh, is by far mightier than all societies combined?"

The foregoing statements imply the argument that the lodges can furnish nothing equal to the church and are therefore unworthy the patronage of a Christian. This calls to mind a long conversation with a minister who was zealously defending the secret orders. In the midst of the conversation the following dialogue took place:

"Is there anything iu the secret lodges superior to the churches?"

"No."

"Is there anything equal?"

"No."

"Is it all inferior?"

"Yes."

"Is there any good thing in them which the churches do not supply?"

"No."

"Then why should a Christian man spend his time and money to defend a confessedly inferior class of institutions?"

There was no response.

RINGING TRUTHS FROM THE PEN OF A KING.

The King of Bavaria has written a book ou the "Mission of Sovereigns," in which some royal and ringing truths are told. We quote the following as a specimen of these:

"To-day, the sovereigns, more nominal than real, are but the guardians of an armed truce which does not permit the accomplishment of peace. A fatal circle encloses us, both sovereigns and peoples, and which we can only break through by a sincere and united agreement, to be brought about by a great intellectual and moral effort. Ever since the Treaty of Westphalia, in 1648, or rather since the Couventiou of Arras, in 1435, the general goveruuent of Europe has been in a state of siege, of the crushing uature of which we are conscious, but in vain. So long as this system lasts, no general conception of a government worthy of our time can be carried into accomplishment, nor is any generous action possible, ou the basis of great social motives and Christian interests. Being surrounded by force, our only possible policy is to make use of force, under penalty of being overcome by it; and our only practicable activity is a competition of diplomatic militarism between dynasties and nations, the ephemeral triumphs of which are as costly, from every point of view, as actual defeats.

"Monarchs of the lines of Valois, Wasa, Bourbon, Hapsburg, Orange, Romanoff, Hohenzollern, or Bonaparte, we all find ourselves periodically editing similar histories, without much profit to ourselves or to Europe. We turn round in the same circle, in the same feudal enclosure, with the same sanguinary results of our ambitious rivalries and of our legalized conflicts, giving to the peoples the spectacle of a gladiatorial fight, which proves to them, by perpetual examples, that anarchy oppresses both us and themselves.

"But observers of nature will tell us that such is life, with its instinctive combats and passionate competitions. Nevertheless, the proper condition of mankind is not a state of nature, but one of social civilization. In every State, the passions and instincts of men have to be restained by civil law; and the State of the great social family of Christendom, cannot, without peril, continue to be less under the restraints of justice and equity, in their mutual relations, than the individual subjects of those States.

"Christians in our private lives, civilized in our domestic habits, must we eternally interchange, in our official relations, as sovereigns, the impulsive and ferocious acts of an anti-Christian and barbarous policy, consisting of diplomatic strategy and military violence, the immorality of which our national laws prosecute and punish, when practiced by our subjects amongst themselves. No intelligent or conscientious person can reply in the affirmative."

GOOD TEMPLAR INSTRUCTION IN FALSIFYING.

Some say there is no evil in the Good Templar lodge. If there is not it has changed materially since I belonged to it. Many a time have I led candidates to the pledge altar of a Good Templar lodge, and of one in particular I shall write in detail, simply to illustrate.

Our lodge room was located over a grocery store, where the groceryman kept beer in his cellar, and of course he was opposed to our order, and did all he could to hinder our cause, by trying to find out our secrets, which he succeeded in doing at last. But the subject of my narrative was a dissipated young man who deeply touched our sympathy, and we finally persuaded him to join our lodge and take the pledge. Being marshal at the time, I led him to the altar, where the following ensued: Here he placed his left hand upon the open Bible and his right hand over his heart. When the Worthy Chief commenced, first asking, "Are the fees all paid?" the secretary responding, "All paid." Then to the candidate he administered the following

OBLIGATION:

"Do you solemnly promise, in the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses, that you will abstain from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage, wine and cider not excepted, and that you will not divulge, nor suffer to be divulged, any of the secrets of this order which shall be made known to you to any one not entitled to know the same, so help you God?"

To this the candidate responded, "I will."

Now can we see any evil in this? You heard the candidate swear that he would not tell the secrets, when the truth was, he had no secrets to tell. You see, also, he has to swear to do something, and does not know what he has to do. No secret in the Good Templar lodge is ever told to a member before taking the oath, as I suppose is the case in all other secret societies. (See Lev. 5: 4.) "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then shall he be guilty."

Then still a greater sin, when a candidate takes this oath he either swears to a falsehood or swears he will tell a falsehood if necessary, inasmuch as he says he will not divulge or suffer to be divulged. But our young man did divulge, and when the members (and I am sorry to say some church members) were asked, "Did W. expose you?" of course all said "No!" and could not do otherwise according to the obligation, else they would have suffered it exposed. But some say, "Why did not your members shut their heads and let it pass?" Why, my friends, that would have been suffering it to be divulged. You know that silence gives consent. Paul did not stone Stephen, but he held the garments of those that did, and he had to repent of his wickedness; and so I believe every violation of God's known laws must be repented of. The same code that governs one part of our conduct, governs all. The same divine Being that said "Thou shalt not steal," said also "Swear not at all."—Jas. H. Sly, in the Richmond Star.

FREEMASONRY IN VERMONT.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE THE ANTI-MASONIC CONVENTION AT MONTPELIER, VERMONT, ON THE 6TH OF JUNE, 1883. BY GEN'L. J. W. PHELPS.

Christian sentiment was the leading active principle at work in the settlement of New England. It was under the direct agency and influence of the Congregational church that all the institutions, the modes of thought, and the manner of life of the New England people were fashioned. It was not till 1733, a hundred and thirteen years after the landing of the Pilgrims, that the strange religion of Freemasonry began to take root among the people.

It was in that year that the Masonic institution, a rival of the Christian church for the respect of men, and the treacherous enemy of the Christian faith, was introduced into Boston, Massachusetts. It was a curious institution, consisting of about equal parts of the obscene jests of Joe Miller, and the grave, serious precepts of the Bible, blended into an infidel system of rites and ceremonies which had emanated from among the drunken aristocratic clubs of London in 1717. True to its character for slyness, secrecy, privilege, and exclusiveness, it was clandestinely introduced into Christian New England through the agency of a British nobleman. It grew in this garden of the Lord like an ill weed. Commending itself to a religious people by an exterior of solemnity, it flourished like the tares which the adversary sowed among wheat.

As the institution is a conspiracy against all Christian government, and as revolutions in State seem to have need of conspiracies, it might have been regarded by our fathers as of some use in aiding the revolution of 1776 against the British government. Some of the officers of the American army, Washington among them, and doubtless some of the men belonged to the lodge; but the inauguration and sustaining of the Revolution, and the founding of the American Union was wholly due to the Christian sentiment of the people, and in no way to the aid given by the lodge. The part played in the Revolution by Freemasonry was of but little consequence: it was like that which the valorous Knight Sir John Falstaff played in the fight against Hotspur at Shrewsbury.

In fact, Freemasonry did not become a thoroughly organized system in the United States and enter upon a career of political power and corruption until the lapse of an entire generation after the Revolution. The present Royal Arch Constitution of the lodge, so called, dates only from the first years of the present century. This utterly un-American Constitution, wonderful to relate, was got up in New England, among Puritans, and aided by Pennsylvania Quakers, to whose religious sentiments it is entirely opposed. It is a perpetual embodiment of the infidel sentiments of the philosophers and Jacobins of the French Revolution; and it has been used with the constant, fixed purpose of not only destroying the last traces of Federalism, but for the enthronisation of Jacobinism, a species of democracy which is as foreign to American soil as the use of dynamite is to Christian charity.

The opening of the forests of Vermont by settlers may be said to have taken place between the year 1763 and the early years of this century. To the colonists who came to this then strange land from Massachusetts and other New England States, the Masonic lodge doubtless commended itself as a special means of protection and support: for this is its plea for existence. And probably not a few of the first settlers became members of it for this purpose; never reflecting that this lodge, unlike the Christian religion, while giving its aid to some, may operate to the injury and destruction of others who do not belong to it. But still, a pure, uncorrupted religious sentiment, as fashioned by Jonathan Edwards, remained largely in the ascendant, I think, among the early inhabitants of Vermont. One of the early lodges established in the State was called Aurora Lodge No. 9, which dates from 1796. This lodge seemed to fix its snakey eyes upon the capital of the State, around which it coiled its many deviously winding folds as did the serpents around the limbs of the faithful Laocoon and his sons. But as yet few had ever suspected the true character of the institution that was secretly at work in their midst. It was known chiefly by its pretensions to piety, to charity, to love for widows and orphans, etc. Its bombastic and farcical displays, though utterly derogatory to the dignity of human nature, were supposed to be amiable pleasantries, as if it were permissible for piety or religion to put on buffoonery and make itself absurd and ridiculous! It was in this cunning way that the lodge sought to to disarm suspicion while aiming at power.

But farces that forget too much the dignity of man are apt to end in bloody tragedies. At length, in the year 1826 the true character of the lodge became known by the murder of William Morgan, who had disclosed its secrets and thus incurred the Masonic penalty of death. The astounding fact was then made known to the people that there was a secret government among them, of a foreign origin, pretending to be a religion better than Christianity, which granted charters, administered oaths, levied assessments, gave secret passports, maintained a priesthood and an armed organization of high titled officers unknown to the laws of the State, bestowed titles of nobility, filled the offices of the country both secular and divine with its secret agents, and had death-penalties of its own, all of which were at complete variance with the beneficent provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

It is to the immortal credit of Vermont that her people—many members of the lodge included—were among the foremost to resent this outrage upon the rights and immunities secured to American citizens by the Constitution of our Republican government. They arose in opposition to this foreign government, this barbarous relic of Old World domination; formed a political organization against it, and, by the year 1835 had forced the Masonic lodges of the State to surrender their so-called charters and to disband. The Aurora lodge No. 9, to which we have alluded, was then by its own act and in its own emphasized language "closed forever."

Of course this dissolution of the lodges was not accomplished without a great struggle, religious, social, and political. Power does not readily let go its hold. We may be permitted a brief record of the prominent features of the struggle as represented by the votes of the period. The organization of the Anti-masonic party of the State took place in 1829, many leading Masons renouncing their lodge obligations and taking an active part in it. In 1830 there were three candidates for Governor. Crafts, the Masonic candidate, received 13,486 votes; Palmer, the Anti-masonic candidate, received 10,925 votes; and Meach, Jackson or Jacobinical Democrat, received 6,285 votes. This carried the election into the Legislature, and the Masonic candidate was elected.

In 1831 the choice again devolved upon the Legislature, and Palmer the Anti-masonic candidate was elected by one vote.

In 1832 there was again no successful election by the people; and Palmer the Anti-masonic candidate, was again elected by the Legislature on the forty-third ballotting.

In 1833 Palmer was elected Governor by the popular vote. In 1834 he failed of election by the people, but was re-elected by the Legislature.

In 1835 both the people and the Legislature failed of a choice; and Silas H. Jennison, who received a large Anti-masonic majority of the popular vote for Lieutenant Governor, acted as Governor.

Mr. Jennison was thereafter elected to the governorship over his Democratic competitor, by successive popular elections, until 1841, when he declined a further nomination. The Anti-slavery party was then formed, which carried the election of Governor into the Legislature, where the combined strength of the Anti-masonic and Anti-slavery parties elected Mr. Charles Paine, the Whig candidate, by a majority of forty-two votes.

In the mean time, in the Presidential election of 1832, the seven electoral votes of Vermont were cast for the Anti-masonic candidate, William Wirt, a former Mason; and the Legislature of the State placed upon its statute-book a law against the administering secret, extra-judicial oaths, as an offence against public justice, which still remains unrepealed, and which was deemed sufficient in the minds of the honest, law-abiding men of that day to prevent forever a return of the lodge to the State: as in fact it ought to do; but in the place of this law, Freemasonry subsequently revived and has become into as full possession of political power as the Jesuits ever did in Spain. In the year 1851, Aurora lodge, No. 9, was, in its own phraseology, again "chartered" into existence. The dead Hiram of the craft was resurrected to life by the master's grip; and the doors that had been "closed forever," were once more opened for seducing American youths from loyal devotion to the constitution of their country to serve the constitution of a foreign power. The action of this lodge was followed by similar action on the part of other lodges, everywhere, and the capitol of the State is now surrounded and enthralled by the following self-corporated bodies, viz: First, Aurora lodge No. 9; Second, King Solomon's Royal Arch Chapter, No. 7; Third, Montpelier Council No. 4, Royal and Select Masters; Fourth, Mount Zion Commandery Knights Templar No. 9; Fifth, Gamaliel Lodge of Perfection, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite; Sixth, Mount Calvary Council of Princes of Jerusalem, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite; Seventh, St. Helena Conclave; Eighth, Knights of Honor; Ninth, Vermont Lodge of Odd-fellows No. 2; Tenth, Brook's Post, No. 13, Grand Army of the Republic. Besides these lodges of the capitol, every considerable village of the State has one or more lodges, all of which constitute a machine, a combination of perpetual secret caucuses by which politicians get and hold office irrespective of the merits of individuals or of the interests and honor of the State.

In a moral point of view the State has thus taken to itself many unclean spirits worse than the original foul spirit that was expelled from its bosom; and in a political point of view it lies like a subjugated people, compelled to receive the laws and institutions of a returned conqueror. Let us conceive for one moment of an honest unsuspecting farmer being elected to the Legislature and falling into such a net-work of secret societies as now surrounds the Capitol. What a labyrinthine maze for conveying bribes, hints, intimidation, allurements from speculative rings in Boston, New York, Washington, or even in London and other Masonic centers of power! Besides this, the initiation fees of ten thousand Vermont lodgemen would amount to a quarter of a million of dollars, a sum sufficient to control the press of a larger State than Vermont.

In order to trace the fatal effects of Freemasonry, or rather of relapsed Freemasonry, upon the once distinguished character of Vermont, we must be permitted a cursory view of the political history of the State previous to the lodge coming into possession of its government. The political history of Vermont is somewhat different from that of other States of the Union. Before and during the revolutionary war, the territory of the State was disputed by the two English colonies New Hampshire and New York, the former claiming to the Hudson river, and the latter to the Connecticut. The inhabitants of the disputed territory, finding it necessary to the security of their land-titles to have the dispute settled, and prompted by the example of the United Colonies in declaring their independence of Great Britain, asserted their own independence against both New York and New Hampshire and set up a government for themselves, their only political connection with the other colonies being that of a common cause against Great Britain.

The very first political act that the new State did was to abolish slavery. She made this act a part of her constitution, which was adopted in 1777, one year after the declaration of independence by the American colonies. Jealous of liberty, and fearing that the constitutional provision against slavery might be evaded, the State again, in 1786, passed a most stringent law against any traffic in slaves, in any way, within the State or by carrying them out of the State. Some five years after this act and fourteen years after her abolition of slavery Vermont subscribed to the Constitution of the United States. She could not possibly conceive, therefore, that by subscribing to that instrument on her admission into the Union in 1791, she was binding her citizens and subordinating her laws and customs to the interests of slavery. When therefore, the war of the rebellion broke out she was not permitted to see even though her Masonic leaders could do so, any slavery in the Constitution of the United States, or to hesitate one moment in what light to regard the negro population of the country. She herself could regard them only as they were regarded by her own laws, as men, and as subjects of a free government of which her own political institutions were a part. Her course had been in perfect accord with the spirit of her free constitution. Properly suspicious of every attempt to interfere with the liberty of her citizens, she had risen against the intimidating, despotic tendencies of the lodge power, and utterly abolished it, turning the keys of the law against it, as her honest statesmen supposed, forever. For a period of ten years, from 1831 to 1841, the Anti-masonic party held the administration of the State government, and at the end of that time turned it over, as we have said, to the Whig and Anti-slavery men. And one of the latter acts of the legislature previous to the rebellion was the passage of a personal liberty bill, opposed to the national fugitive slave law, by which act the State boldly and decidedly invoked war against the slave-power, that held possession of the national government.

With such a political history as this, the first shot of a rebel gun against the United States should have found Vermont ready to demand that negroes should be regarded not only as men but as militiamen. She ought to have insisted that negro regiments should be raised and mustered into the service at once, If this had been done by the government, every regiment thus raised would not only have added a thousand men with willing hearts and without bounties, to the government forces, but it would have deprived the rebellion of some of its most effective material support; and the moral effect of the measure would have been beyond computation. It would have led to a speedier, more merciful, and less expensive termination of the war, and would have left the country with a debt of relatively small proportions.

But Vermont, instead of insisting upon this measure at the beginning of the war, found herself before the war's close paying out enormous sums of money for bounties to white recruits, not a few of whom were the merest mercenaries. One would suppose that the State was madly resolved that the war should not be ended by patriotism but by money, and that the shackles which were falling from the limbs of slaves, should become rivetted upon her own farmers. We have heard the amount paid by the State for bounties when negroes might have been had for nothing, estimated at ten millions of dollars; a sum which a State so small and infertile must feel in the way of burdensome taxes and diminished population for many years to come, to say nothing of the demoralization from bounty jumping, fraudulent pensions, and other corruptions that necessarily accompanied a course so weak and unreasonable. The political attitude of the State, as represented by her politicians. was not in the least accord with her present history and character. It was as if the State felt that she must buy, steal, or trick slaves from rightful owners, instead of demanding the liberation of four millions of human beings held in bondage in opposition to her own religion and laws.

Why did Vermont pursue a course so much out of accord with her previous history and character, which were those of the model republic of the world? We think that the explanation of the mystery lies here, viz., that from 1841, when the Anti-masonic party merged into the anti-slavery party, until 1861 when the rebellion broke out, the Masonic lodge had been quietly and unsuspectedly stealing back into power in the State, and her political counsels fell under the demoralizing influence of Masonic management. While by her laws and religion the negroes were regarded as men and voters, yet the Masonic lodge never allowed its own members to meet with them "on the level," or part with them "on the square." Negroes were excluded from the lodge in Vermont as well as in South Carolina, as not worthy even of the benefits of Masonic charity; and hence in the Masonic conduct of the political affairs of the State, the negro came to be counted on as hardly a human being. The idea of his becoming a soldier could hardly be conceived by the tricksters of the lodge; and thus the delegation from Vermont in Congress during the war, stood there as representatives of the lodge rather than of the noble republican character of the State.

Though the law against Masonry ought to be regarded as possessed of almost constitutional force, yet the political leaders of the State, as partisans of the lodge, still continue in the direct and perpetual violation of that law; and so domineering and overbearing has the lodge become, and so completely has it impressed its own tricky and belittling character upon the politics of the State, that the man who ventures to oppose its usurped power, is virtually ostracised, not only in politics but in his business and social relations. Hardly is the Chinaman in California treated with more indignity than would be a prominent Anti-mason in Vermont. In a State once noted for the freedom and independence of its citizens, men may now be seen to blush, to become greatly alarmed, or grow pale and tremble at the very idea of rebelling against the power of the lodge, an institution which they have been taught to regard as so pious, so ancient and honorable, and so devoted to poor widows and orphans!

Not one single advantage has ever been derived to the State from its submission to the aggressions of the lodge, nor ever can be. But quite on the contrary, the longer she honors her Masonic politicians, the lower she must sink on the scale of those qualities which are essential to republican government. Though the Masonic lodge is as powerful as a standing army in its organization, and equally inimical to personal liberty, yet there is nothing in its character to commend the respect of either the truly enlightened republican citizen or the Christian man. The political attitude of Vermont, as brought about by the Masonic lodge, in the great slave-issue before the country since 1861, has been totally unworthy of her early history and character.

Previous to the war of rebellion the American Republic had a great store of virtues laid up to meet that emergency. It was comparatively free of debt; had but a small pension list; paid low salaries; was economical of the public treasures; and above all, it had won the hearts of millions of poor men, black and white, who stood ready at a call to come forward for its defence. All this store of virtues was squandered for the benefit of lodgemen, high-tariff men, and contractors. Vermont was at that time often given the presiding chair of the Senate; but that chair was filled from another State when there was a chance of a Vermont Senator succeeding to the Presidency. In the House the chairmanship of the Committee of Ways and Means was given to Vermont—to the supposed republican, sober, industrious Vermont, the model republican State; but while that chairmanship was granting the most unlimited and most extravagrnt appropriations for carrying on the war, never were those appropriations conditioned, as we are aware of, upon a more energetic and decided prosecution of the war. It played right into the hands of lodgemen, of manufacturers and contractors. It virtually rejected the hearty good-will service of the poor blacks, and lavished money upon white mercenaries. It favored manufactories and crushed down the farmers of Vermont into helpless bondage to high taxes and high wages by excessive expenditures. Vermont political leaders remained silent, and took upon their sober, economical industrious State all the responsibility of a course of policy the most weak, and a waste of treasure the most extravagant. And all this time the lodge of the State was slyly and industriously spreading among the farmers and former Anti-masons the belief that the Vermont delegation in Congress were doing the State great honor! This delegation suffered itself to be made the mere cat's paw of lodgemen, in entire disregard of the real character and interests of the State, and yet was receiving the applause of the very farmers whose interests it was helping to crush!

In consequence of this Jesuitical deception the State is now under the complete control of the lodge; as much so as the late slaves of the South are under the Ku-Klux lodge. The lodge nominates the officers; and whatever power has the selection of the officers of the State will hold the control of the State. The farmers, as a class, rarely attend nominating caucuses; and hence the lodge finds it easy to nominate whom it pleases, and manage State politics in its own interests. The State, while making a generous, unsuspecting effort to throw off the slave-power, has fallen under the control of the Masonic lodge, which is more demoralizing than was that of the slave-power itself. The mercenary spirit which it inspires and fosters leads to pension-getting, which it would gratify even at the expense of sharing "on the level" with rebel soldiers, and repealing all laws which oppose remuneration for slaves.

Although the war was procrastinated by the interference of the lodge for the purposes of stimulating manufactures with a great debt and a high tariff, yet, after the war was over, and this ruinous policy ought to have been brought to an end, the Legislature of Vermont in the violation of the law of equal taxation went still farther in the direction of this ruinous policy, and exempted certain manufacturers from taxation for five years. This agricultural State of Vermont burdened its farmers with taxes in order to put millions into the pockets of manufacturers. Of course it cannot be wondered at that the agricultural interests of the State have run down, that her population has not materially increased, and that her men of character, talent, and enterprise are to be looked for in any other State than her own.

This foreign power has got, or is getting possession of every other State capital in the Union; and the men whom it has sent to Congress have crowned their treasonable work by chartering a Masonic association at the seat of our National government. Our political interests are under the control of a foreign power that is fatal to both our religion and our form of government. This power has been resorted to as a remedy during the slavery disease, its continuation is like the use of opium or alcohol, it is now destroying the health of the body politic which it was introduced to cure. Its effects are almost worse, if not quite, than the disease itself. It is utterly corrupting our morals and destroying that independent manliness of of character by which republican government can alone be preserved.

Since the re-introduction of Masony into Vermont, the State has lost her independence and become a mere political province of Masonic Massachusetts, subject to Massachusetts policy and interests. Once the foremost Republican community of all the world, she has not been called on during the whole reign of the Republican party to furnish a member of the executive council of the nation, and she has played but an ordinary part everywhere else. Like Switzerland, she produces soldiers but no generals. In no respect has her representation risen above the scale of mere numerical and material interests; and on that scale the whole State hardly ranks above some second class city. Nowhere in history is there an instance of more rapid deterioration than there has been in Vermont under the reign of the Masonic lodge.

Fellow citizens of Vermont! My first practical experience of the detestable character of the Masonic lodge was as an officer of the government upon the Rio Grande, Texas, thirty years ago, when it was aiding the slave-power leaders in getting up and orgauizing the Rebellion. The institution has not changed its boasted fixedness of landmarks since then. There is no essential difference between Freemasonry and Nihilism, Fenianism, Ku-Kluxry, Mormonism, Molly Maguires, and other secret organizations which make use of dynamite, pistols, and poignards as political forces. The lodge is no better here in Vermont than it was upon the Rio Grande. Or if there is any difference, it behooves the Masonic lodge to explain what it is. Nothing could be more inimical to republican government and the Christian religion than the education which it is giving to the people. The claims to the consideration of a Christian people for its moral teachings are more absurd and presumptuous, if possible, than were those of the Holy Inquisition. It rules by terror and intimidation, as French Jacobinism did, threatening loss of good name, injury of business, exclusion from office, covert or open insult and even personal violence and death. It is filled with foreigners, beneath whose pompous, overbearing attitude the native citizen is made to feel like an alien. Its half-million of members sway the destinies of the country, as they were formerly swayed by half a million of slave-holders. It fills our offices with its minions, our pulpits with pagan ministers, and society with spies. Its head is in London, as the head of the Jesuits is in Rome; and it garrisons all our cities and principal villages with its organized, standing forces. It renders accountability in office to the people vain and impossible; and in the place of the religion of the cross, is substituting a mystic, debasing regard for the supposed moral virtues of the square and compass. Its members and partisans from Vermont, while in Congress, have consented to the procrastination of the war and have "ever concealed and never revealed" the secret springs of land-grabs, back-pay grabs, Credit Mobilier swindles, Star-route frauds, Indian war outrages, the chartering of Masonic Hall Associations, the fraudulent pensions, the river and harbor jobs, etc., etc., which have been going on therein. They have served the lodge better than the State. No partisan of the lodge is worthy of the confidence and support of a free people. Hereafter if one of them comes before you for your votes for any office, from the highest to the lowest, please remember that instead of you owing him an office, he owes you an apology; and not until that apology is sincerely given should we ever trust him with any vital interest of a Republican State. Secrecy is better fitted for protecting vice than for fostering virtue; and without virtue there is no salvation for republics. A nation that may be reasonably supposed to spend almost if not quite as much money for secret lodge-worship as for the open worship of the Christian religion, the two religions being totally antagonistic to each other, cannot possess that candor and sincerity of character which is essential to the maintainance of republican institutions.

The Anti-masonic party has become a necessity for the salvation of the Republic. With the revival of Freemasonry, Anti-masonry must again assume the ascendency. The interest of the Republic and of men of character and principle must no longer be at the mercy of two parties, one of which, the so-called Democratic party, is moved by the machinery of Ku-Kluxism, and the other, the Republican party, by the Blue Lodge with its army of plumed Knights and affiliated societies. Our Anti-masonic party must be sustained by men of principle who will sacrifice their votes, as the Christian should sacrifice his right hand, or his right eye, rather than commit treason against both the Republic and the Redeemer of mankind by voting for a Freemason or for any other man who aids with his membership the paganish practices and the exclusive privileges of secret associations. Men who will passively submit to the aggressions of Freemasonry are no longer freemen; they are fit only to be slaves.

A NEW FEATURE.

The friends of reform in Page county, Iowa, and Atchinson county, Mo., have undertaken a thorough canvas of their counties in opposition to lodgery. The plan is simply this: to place an active man in the field, armed with a goodly supply of Anti-masonic tracts and literature, to visit every house, work up and deliver lecture at the various school-houses, scatter tracts, etc., thus creating a discussion upon the subject of Masonry. The plan is to prove the efficacy of anti-secret literature, and of a thorough agitation among the people.

M. N. Butler of the American Freeman has been engaged to perform the work, and is now in the field doing most effective service. Hundreds of families have already been visited, tracts left for their benefit, a goodly number of lectures given in the school houses and churches, and the most encouraging results seem to be following. We hope the friends of Page county will rally to the furtherance of this scheme and see that the county is "sowed knee deep" with anti literature. We hope to maintain the work for at least six months. Now every one to the work.—Iowa American.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE AMERICAN PLATFORM.

BURRELL, Pa.

DEAR EDITOR:—No true patriot can observe the movements of the American Party, but with feelings of interest and delight. The spirit of aggression is admirable, showing itself in the rallying of conventions, advancing into hostile territory, establishing new periodicals, and especially in that brilliant charge which has carried the war into Africa, and given you a position in the city of Washington. Amidst the politics of our day, ridden by lodges, and rotten with infidelity, how refreshing to the eye, the platform of this new party, as it speaks the things of truth boldly, honestly, and confidently, bringing to the front of battle, the great moral issues of the day. The presentation of such profound principles of government ought to be enough to shake into pieces the political parties that control our land, and gather out of them every good element. But whilst the platform is eminently worthy, in my judgment, so far as it goes, it is radically defective in one respect—the name of Christ, the nation's Lord is not mentioned; his honor is couched and concealed in Unitarian language. Why this is so, I have been unable to conjecture. I cannot believe it is through fear; for no coward can embark in your ship; nor through policy, for your straight-forward manner proves that you care for nothing but the right. But it may be because this part of Christian politics has been deemed unworthy of a position in the platform. But an appeal to the Scriptures will discover this to be a matter of supremest importance. Rulers are commanded to kiss the Anointed Son. How kiss him but by an open declaration of loyalty? Isaiah saith, that the government shall be upon His shoulders. Why should not the party seeking power acknowledge the fact? David saith that the Lord Christ shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. Why not declare for him in peace, and escape the day of wrath? John the Divine sees him wearing his robes of royalty, and sash of honor, upholding his authority by his bow and his sword. Why not announce to the people, on the front banner of the American procession, "Christ the King of kings and Lord of Lords"? But this may seem unnecessary as God is acknowledged, and the Bible, and the Sabbath and Christianity. Grand acknowledgments; declarations of statesmanship unparallelled in this century. Yet not one of them can emit their true light, till Jesus, the revealer of God, the effulgence of the Word, the Lord of the Sabbath, the glory of Christianity, be acknowledged.

Besides, "He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him." But even from the American platform of government, the best perhaps on the face of the whole earth, even from it, who could tell that there is a Son, anointed of the Father to rule the nations, and appointed to reign till all things be put under him; till all kings shall fall down before him, and all nations shall serve him. God has exalted the name of Jesus; his people rejoice in his exaltation; the Bible sets it forth in brightest light; but it is a mournful fact, that our government treats that name as if ashamed of it. It is not once mentioned in the Federal Constitution; it fails to appear in the political platforms; it is studiously omitted from official documents and State proclamations. In the midst of such treatment Christ cannot be apathetic. As our Government has cut loose from his throne, he is letting her drift, and the curse of official corruption is falling heavily upon her as a punishment. O that the American Party would champion the cause of this aggrieved King; would right the wrong he has endured for a century, and endeavor to bring our country into allegiance to the throne of heaven; would it not have more assurance of success, if it moved under a banner, declaring, that Christ is king of all the earth, and his authority should be acknowledged by all nations.

Why not insert such a clause in the platform?

J. C. M'FEETERS.

MR. BARLOW'S PROTEST.

From an editorial in the last Cynosure, it is evident that Pres't. Blanchard misunderstands the position of Bro. Conant, on the question which he has raised of late in the paper, with reference to a change of candidates on our American ticket. Mr. Conant feels that the statement of last week puts him in a false position before the readers of the Cynosure, which he desires to have corrected. He believes that Pres't. Blanchard, whom he has always delighted to honor, has unwittingly fallen into a mistake, which if uncorrected is calculated to do injustice to the cause, as well as to the principles of Mr. C. A few words, he trusts, will set the matter right.

In the latter part of April Pres't. Blanchard wrote to Mr. Conant from Washington, stating his purpose to resign his position on our ticket in favor of ex-Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas. Soon after he wrote again, suggesting that Mr. Conant also resign in favor of Hon. Fred. Douglass, of Washington.

To this Mr. Conant replied nearly as follows: "At the time the nominations were made, I felt that it was premature, although I was much pleased with the first name on the ticket; that it would give me much pleasure to withdraw my name for the substitution of another, a true representative of the principles enunciated in our American platform, provided I could honorably do so; but I feared I should not be justified in so doing, without first consulting a considerable number of the influential men, to whom my resignation might be a surprise and a disappointment; and that, too, without the assurance that one known to be sound in all the important principles of our platform would be substituted."

When the above sentiments are carefully scanned, it will be seen that Pres't. Blanchard is hardly justified in saying that Mr. Conant "was cordially acquiescent" in this plan of putting a man on our ticket who has never yet consented to such use of his name; and who is still a contented member of the Republican party.

Mr. Conant having from the first, reluctantly, and only from a sense of duty, consented to use his name on our ticket, is more than willing to withdraw it, when the party itself shall manifest a desire to have him do so; and shall with united voice put in his place a known, tried and true representative of our principles. He feels, therefore, that an injustice is done him—unintentional, of course—in representing him as "cordially acquiescent" in the plan as marked out.

In the above sentiments, the writer cordially assents and desires to be put on record as not in sympathy with the principle of courting men from other parties to fill the place or places of leaders on the tickets of our party.

J. L. BARLOW.

REMARKS.

The above is substantially correct, with this addition, that, after the letter referred to by Mr. Barlow, and before a word was said to the public about substituting Douglas for Conant, a journey was made to see Mr. Conant; and in conversation he was certainly understood to acquiesce "cordially" in the attempt to secure the colored vote; and said, "I will write to Mr. Douglass," which Mr. Conant will recollect. Mr. Barlow was not present. But no wrong has been intended, and we are all right as it is. Mr. Douglass refuses the nomination. And if the American party shall be unanimous for Gen. Pomeroy at its next convention, Kansas and Connecticut will give us a popular ticket. No one wishes to displace Mr. Conant, who is every way fitted to fill the second office in the gift of the people.

ED. CYNOSURE.

GREAT GUNS.

At a recent military reunion Rear-Admiral Rogers, in responding to the toast, "The Army and Navy," said: "So far as I know, we have not even one good gun of modern calibre ashore or afloat, in the Army or in the Navy. What is worse. I fear we have not trained artisans nor any forges to make guns. Our old cannon are as obsolete as are the flintlock muskets of 1812, and we haven't one efficient ship-of-war." It is no reproach to American artisans that we have no Krupp-cannon factories. The demand must be great to warrant the enormous expenditure that would be necessary to establish such a workshop; and it is not likely to be done for only one customer, and that one bound by all the principles and antecedents of our Government to keep out of entangling alliances, and consequently foreign wars, and live as much as lieth in us at peace with all men. We may be very sure that no nation will make war on us, as no nation could expect to conquer or hold an inch of our territory, and we may be equally sure that if American citizens are wronged in any way we will obtain, as we have always done, ample reparation for them by persistent negotiation. Besides all this, any extensive outlay on great guns now would probably soon be rendered comparatively useless by new methods of employing dynamite and electricity. We have long been convinced that the fleets of the future would be steel gun-boats, very light; very fast; each armed with one very heavy long-range gun. These, by their speed, could turn up wherever wanted, and present a very uncertain mark for the enemy, whilst the large, heavy-armored vessels, slow, unwieldy, and easily hit, would be at their mercy. But may the Lord defend us from all wars, domestic or foreign! A war causes not only a frightful expense and loss of life to both parties at the time, but it leaves a long train of most lamentable vices and animosities.—N. Y. Witness.

BETTER THAN BIG GUNS.

What is better than big guns? We answer common sense. It is really amazing in this age of civilization and scientific development that intelligent men give so much attention and genius to the means of attack and defense, the one just about keeping pace with the other, and so little attention to the means of preventing war altogether.

Longfellow wrote very truthfully many years ago:

"Were half the power that fills the earth with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals and forts."

War is constantly growing in expensiveness in money, if not human life. According to the Herald of Peace England spent on her navy alone from 1857 to 1881, the enormous sum of £273,000,000, much of which is now in a shape to be almost entirely useless, in case of war with any maratime power. The invention of torpedocs and torpedo boats has rendered ships of war almost useless. In nearly all the wars of recent date these war ships, which cost millions of dollars, have played a very insignificant part.—Christian Witness.

The Chattanooga (Tenn.) Commercial says: "There is an astonishing number of men here in the South who vote the Democratic ticket with protest of heart and conscience. Particularly is this true of a large number of intelligent young men, who are not satisfied with the negative course of the party with which they act, who despise its lack of courage and want of principle." There is no mistaking the fact that a great revolulion is going on in the South, and the Democratic leaders are seriously alarmed.—Inter Ocean.

Allow that unfit men sometimes get nominated to office. The difficulty is not in the system by which nominations are made, but in the fact that so many intelligent and educated citizens are so much engaged in their own private affairs that they will not attend the caucus and choose such men to represent them as they desire. If men of intelligence, culture and character are so utterly indifferent to public interests that they give their proxies away to whoever will use them, leaving the ignorant and vicious to nominate whom they choose for offices of trust, on their heads rest the responsibility for official incapacity and rascality.—Chronicle, Willimantic, Conn.

IT IS A PLEASURE to recommend the two monthly papers that are being published under United Brethren control, the Richmond Star by Rev. Milton Wright at Richmond Ind., and the United Brethren in Christ in Chambersburg, Pa., Rev. W. O. Tobey, editor. These papers, though small are accomplishing a mighty work in that church for Christ against the insinuating and false worships of the lodge. May the blessing of heaven attend their efforts. Send for sample copies and extend the circulation of these papers.

—J. C. Schoenberger and his brother of this city have begun the publication of a little paper of a Christian reform character. Both have for several years been heartily laboring in reform work in this city, and their names are more or less familiar to readers of the Cynosure. We hail every sincere effort of this kind to sow the good seed of the kingdom. Though begun in weakness it may be raised to power.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A SPLIT BETWEEN THE COLLEGE AND THE LODGE.

In a Masonic work by Charles W. Moore, published in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1850, we find the following account of the lamb-skin apron:—

"It is an emblem of innocence, and the badge of a Mason—more ancient than the Golden Fleece, or Roman Eagle—more honorable than the Star and Garter, or any other Order that can be conferred upon the candidate at that or any future period, by King, Prince, Potentate, or any other person, except he be a Mason; and which it is hoped he will wear with equal pleasure to himself and honor to the Fraternity."

Now as the lodge which has conferred upon Gen. Butler the governorship of Massachusetts, had previously conferred upon him this wonderful sheep-skin apron so innocent and honorable, why should the General be covetous of this letter degree of L. L. D., from Howard, unless it is in order to subordinate that college to the grandeur of the lodge?

It ought to rejoice us Anti-masons to find that there is one institution in the country that cannot be bulldozed and intimidated by the Freemasons. The mere Christian church might probably be frightened by Gen'l Butler's Masonic grandeur; but Howard College has withstood the seowl of the fraternity, and dared to withhold its honors even from a Grand Sovereign Inspecter General of the thirty-third degree!

This talk of the people of Massachusetts having elected Gen'l Butler Governor is all sham; unless indeed the Masonic lodge is the people. The fact is, the lodge, by virtue of an ancient literary custom, expected to domineer over our most ancient college as it does over every thing else; but much to its surprise and chagrin, it has been disappointed. The lodge fraternity of corrupt politicians learn with amazement that there is a power of the old American stamp, which can withstand them, and set them at defiance.

All honor to old Howard!

To confer a College degree on top of such a lofty Masonic degree as that held by Gen'l Butler, would only be to bestow honor upon buffoonery aud pretension. The college would disgrace itself thereby without elevating the character, personal or political, of the present Governor of Massachusetts. No college should ever confer its houors upon any one, custom or no custom, unless he first proves that he is not, nor ever has been, a Freemason. A partnership between the college and the lodge in the bestowal of honors could serve only to bring all collegate degrees into contempt.

It used to be the custom, we believe, for the Governor of Massachusetts to deliver his inaugural address in Latin. This custom was first broken by Governor Briggs, a self-made man; but the glory of breaking the custom of bestowing college honors upon a Freemason belongs to Howard.

We have been informed by President Eliot that there was only one secret society in the college until within late years, when a great stimulus has been given to secret societies throughout the country. But now, we understand, it is the policy of the faculty to suppress them, and to impress upon the students habits of manly independenee and self-reliance. To a literary institution that refuses to bestow its honors upon Freemason Butler the country may look for statesmen as well as for disfavor to the ordinary run of modern politicians. The collegiate degrees which the General boasts of being already possessed of, can not be held up as conveying any great honor upon the institutions that gave them. It should be a source of great gratification to our Anti-masonic party to find that the oldest college of the country has been the first to throw discredit upon the shams and pretensions of this favorite hero of the Masonic lodge.

A GIFT AND THE GIVER.

EDITOR CYNOSURE: The writer was much pleased a few weeks ago to see in the Cynosure from Bro. Stoddard a suggestion designed to equalize the burden or honor of aiding to an early completion the Washington enterprise. The amount set down for Connecticut is one hundred dollars and we hope the brethren in "the Land of Steady Habits" will respond early by sending their contributions for this work either to Bro. George Smith, Secretary of the Connecticut Christian Association, or to the writer, both at Willimantic.

If all the friends of the enterprise in Connecticut feel as Bro. George Eaton of Tollard expressed himself to the writer when meeting him yesterday, ("I have been wanting to see you and make my contribution to the Washington movement" handing me for that purpose twenty-five dollars) Bro. Stoddard will soon receive Connecticut's portion.

Bro. Eaton who has past his three score and ten years was always a staunch Abolitionist not only of negro slavery, but also of the rum traffic aud its ally—secretism. He has for several years been a financial help to the M. E. Church in his town, rendering them much assistance in erecting a new house of worship, as well as in their support of a pastor, provided he was not also a worshiper at the alter of Baal. This year the Conferenec having sent a son of Hiram as pastor, Bro. Eaton very wiscly concluded to withold his contribution from the church and give a part of it to the N. C. A. to be applied to the Washington pur chase. Now, dear brethren in Connecticut, will you not as soon as practical send your contributions as above and we assure you that they shall be promptly reported to the office of the Cynosure.

J. A. CONANT.

PREPARING FOR JUDGMENT.

SABETHA, Kans.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I wish to correct two statements contained in my last letter. 1. I stated that Dissette, Coleman and myself had lectured all over this part of Kanses, instead of saying in the school-houses all around Sabetha in both Nemaha and Brown counties. 2. I stated that the Masons helped us to elect our chairman from one of their men—but in which I was entirely mistaken. For I find that no Mason has occupied the chair on any such occasion.

I must confess that I am not as sanguine as I was six months ago that secret orders will be put down as easily as we had anticipated and that no power but the power of God's judgments will ever overthrow or batter down the strong bulwarks of such an empire of the devil.

We can only "judge the future by the past." Nearly fifty years ago, the old Abolishonists who still are living, remember when we began the agitation of the slavery question, the church was like Gideon's army. All over the North at the first they seemed ready to go forth with us to the battle, but like Gideon's men, the cowardly part of them turned back to the fleshpots of slavery and were our strongest opposers. They left us and went out from us, because they were not of us. They were on the side of their father, the devil, and his work they did do. Even worse than Gideon's men, they volunteered and went over to the enemy and fought like tigers against Abolitionism. Nevertheless, God had a few in reserve that could lap, that would not bow the knee to the Moloch of slavery, but stood firm. God seemed to say it is enough, "Will not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" He brought us to the sword, made nearly every house in this land a house of mourning and delivered the spoiled out of the hand of the spoiler. And now we may examine all history, sacred or profane, and we never see it recorded that ever the judgments of the Almighty fell on any nation or people until they had light enough to repent of their wickedness and put it away. We have but one instance of any nation or city ever repentiug of their wickedness and putting it away at the rebuke of God's truth by the prophets—only Nineveh; showing that it is barely possible for such to occur.

The same line of argument is taken up to-day in defence of secret orders that was forty or fifty years ago in favor of slavery. For instance, it was considered outrageous for one to say that a man who would sell his Saviour in the person of his follower could not be a Christian. So uow to say, the mau that denies Christ and perverts his Word in the lodge cannot be a Christian is considered a blasphemy. And, now, dear brethren, light is beginning to spring forth on the great subject of secret orders, and this nation will soon be enlightened up to the point of repentance or judgment; and which will it be? O God, thou knowest!

POINTS FROM LETTERS.

WHY DID THEY GO?

Why did the ministers of our village, Episcopal, Congregational, Methodists, etc., go up to the graveyard in the mouth of May with trumpets blown before them, and go through mummeries there that are not prescribed nor practiced by their respective churches? Did these men enter into such Romish rites at the request or direction of the churches by which they are employed, or did they go of their own motion? Or did they fear to stay away less they should incur the ill will of the lodge-Jesuits by whom these rites are got up?

OLD AMERICA.

IN UNION IS STRENGTH.

I feel like sayiug to your readers that I am very much pleased with Bro. J. P. Stoddard's article to the members of the National Christian Association in the Cynosure of June 7. God is greatly owning the work of the National Christian Association. Secrecy like a snake has crawled into the very heart of the Christian church and is poisoning the minds and hearts of God's people and enchanting them away from Christ. With Bro. Stoddard, I see the need of all reformatory workers being united, and the only union that will do any good is the union which is the result of being baptized into one body in Christ Jesus. My heart cries to God for the overthrow of the great and bewitching evil of secrecy, which is corrupting both church and State. May God help us to live and move in harmony with the "faith that was once delivered to the saints." All anti-secret and anti-rum people should stand by the American platform and let their light so shine that others seeing their good works may glorify our Heavenly Father in voting as they pray.

Your brother at Jesus feet.

S. B. SHAW.

GOD MUST BE OUR HELPER.

I, with others rejoice at the speed with which the chariot of the National Christian Association has traveled since its last annual business meeting, and still more do I rejoice in the evidence that the Spirit of the Almighty has been its guiding hand. For this let us thank God and take courage; but don't let us stop here; and withdraw in any measure our leaning on the Almighty for wisdom to direct; and help to perform in the great and responsible work before us. A sense of the greatness of the work is almost crushing, and we shall be crushed if the ever lasting arms are not under us to sustain us. What are our aims and motives in this work? Let us seek a candid, truthful answer to these questions through the aid of the Spirit's influence. And O, may the Spirit from heaven descend in purifying, mighty power upon all who shall assemble at the annual meeting June 21, and the glory of God be revealed to you as at no other time heretofore.

For this let constant prayer be offered, but in deep humility.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON I.—July 1, 1883.—Joshua, successor to Moses.—Joshua 1:1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.—Eph. 6:10.

JOSHUA AS TYPE OF CHRIST.—1. Their names are the same.

2. Their work was similar, to save the people.

3. Joshua was a conqueror in Canaan, as Christ was conqueror of the world.

4. Joshua succeeded Moses, as Christ with his Gospel succeeded the law.

5. Joshua led the people across the Jordan into the promised land.

6. Joshua led the people in the conquest of their enemies.

7. When the war was over, Joshua retired to his own possession in Mount Ephraim, and dwelt there. Jesus ascended on high, and there forever sat down on the right hand of God.—Condensed from The Cambridge Bible for Schools.

"Joshua, Moses' minister," i. e., his official attendant (his aid-de-camp, his prime minister), who, from being constantly employed in important service, and early initiated into the principles of the government, would be well trained for undertaking the leadership of Israel.—J. F. and B. The LXX. translate it a workman under Moses, under his direction and command. Those are fittest to rule who have learned to obey. He that was to succeed Moses was intimately acquainted with him that he might fully know his doctrine and manner of life, his purpose and long-suffering, and might walk in the same spirit, having to carry on the same work.—Henry.

"Moses my servant is dead." Joshua was grieving for his master, and lost without the words of wisdom which he had been accustomed to obey implicitly. But God brings this very bereavement, which occasioned the perplexity of Joshua, as a reason for prompt and decisive activity. The fact could not be altered by grief; why then suffer it to unfit the mind for duty? On the other hand, the death of Moses had left the people dependent upon Joshua (Num. 27:18; Deut. 31:14, 23; 34:9), and there was imperative need that he should arouse himself to the difficult tasks which were before him.—Johnson.

"Go over this Jordan," which lay before them. This was a hard command, not only because of the enemies who occupied the other side, but because the Jordan itself, at this season of the year, was impassable by such a multitude. Usually at this point, says Cowles, the Jordan is 100 feet wide, and 8 or 10 feet deep. But at this season it overflowed its banks and was probably 1,200 feet wide and correspondingly deep. The only solution of the difficulty was in the power and aid of God.—Vincent's Normal Guide.

"Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon." A large extent of land was promised them, was ready aud waiting for them, but only so much as they conquered and used was really theirs. So it is with the great and glorious promises to the Christians, so free, so large, but only so much as he accepts by faith, so much as he uses in his life is really his.—Peloubet.

"Your coast." Borders, limits. In Genesis 15:18, the limits are said to extend from the Nile to the Euphrates. These two streams are here used as representative of the two great world-powers between which Israel should dwell. It is thus a prediction that the descendants of Abram should have an independent existence by the side of these two great empires, and that no nation should have any permanent sway between them and these two empires. So that their dominion may be said to reach from the Euphrates to the Nile. These two rivers are, moreover, constantly referred to in the latter Scriptures as the extreme boundaries of Israel.—Gosman. These boundaries included a larger territory than the Hebrews ever possessed, except for a short time during the reigns of David and Solomon. The breadth, from Lebanon on the north to the desert on the south, is 140 miles; the length, from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates, is about 400 miles; making an area 56,000 square miles, equal to the State of New York and Vermont. But Canaan proper, or Palestine, was only 140 miles by 40, an area smaller than the State of New Jersey. Jehovah devised liberal things for his people, but they failed through unbelief . . . . to come into immediate possession of the munificent gift.—Rev. D. Steele, D. D.

"Courageous, that thou mayest observe to do." It would often require great courage to do exactly what God commands, and yet only so could they prosper. God only sees the end from the beginning; God only knows what the results of a certain course will be; God only knows all the forces and influences bearing upon our life. So that he only can wisely direct our steps. We do not know enough to guide our own lives.—Peboulet.

"Turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper." The strongest temptation to deviate from the commands of God is presented by pleas of expediency and policy. God would teach Joshua that these pleas are always foolish, and that not only duty, but also wisdom, is manifested in a strict obedieuce to the divine law.—Johnson.

"Thou shalt meditate therein day and night." He must study his Bible; let it be continually in his thoughts. No careless reading would do, but earnest, long-continued study. We must meditate on the Bible till we are imbued with its spirit, permeated through and through with it; for then only can we see the glory and power of each portion of truth.—Peboulet

"For the Lord thy God is with thee." The courage and strength were to come from believing in the presence and power of God. It was sustained by meditation on the Word of God. Take hold of the promise, and KEEP that hold. Nothing so demoralizes the forces of the soul as fear. Nothing fosters fear like solitude. Only as we recognize the presence of the Lord, does fear give place to faith. Such simple, childlike faith in God has made more heroic souls upon this earth than the stoic could ever dream.—Miss Sarah Smiley.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.—No. 11.

PRACTICAL DUTIES FOR YOUNG CHRISTIANS.

1. Love to Christ lies at the foundation of all Christian duty. A stream cannot rise higher than its fountain, and if our love to others have only a human source it will be apt to flow feebly or fail entirely when the misfortunes or sins of others make large demands upon it.

2. The men and women who have made the greatest sacrifices and denied themselves all worldly comfort to bless others have been most filled with love to Christ.

3. If we love our neighbor we shall do him all the good we can. If we cannot go as missionaries, or labor among the poor and degraded we can save our pennies to help support those who can.

4. Little opportunities for doing good come to everybody—even children. There may be a boy or girl in your class at school who is slow to learn, who has a parent that drinks, or who is otherwise unfortunate. You can give them sympathy, help, encouragement. In these and other ways you can show that you love Christ and want to be like him.

5. We can hurt our neighbor by our influence and example as well as in more direct ways.

6. The strict observance of God's Day is not only a blessing to ourselves; it blesses others. Repeal our Sabbath laws, and intemperance and crime would come in like a flood; and working people would lose their greatest chance for mental and moral improvement. Thus we see how important it is that a Christian's example and influence should be in favor of strict Sabbath keeping.

7. It is very important that young Christians should learn to take a bold stand for the right even when it is unpopular.

8. Secret societies are popular at the present time. Many people who think them wrong are afraid to say so; but these societies are keeping men from Christ and robbing him of his glory, and if we love him we shall not be afraid to bear testimony against them.

9. If we love Christ we shall love our neighbor too well to be willing that places should be licensed where he can get drunk and then go home and abuse his wife and children. We shall not only want to save the drunkard; we shall want to have the laws against selling liquor made so stringent that people will be prevented from becoming drunkards.

10. It is so with tobacco. Every Christian should set his face against the vile, filthy, health-destroying weed. It is so with every other vice or evil.

11. We cannot know our duty nor have strength to perform it without prayer and the daily reading of the Bible. But if we love Christ we shall never think of these things as duties, any more than the taking of our necessary food or sleep.

12. A good rule for young Christians is to do the duty which lies nearest. This will make room for the next and so on. Our nearest duties are usually our home duties—to our parents, our brothers and sisters; our teachers and school friends. It is in this way that God fits us for larger and higher duties by and by.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Every Christian is his brother's keeper.

Love to Christ will make us brave for the right.

Prayer and reading the Bible should be a privilege—not a duty.

A young Christian's first duty is the duty that lies nearest to him.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If ye love me keep my commandments. John 14:15.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—Loving Christ will make us love our neighbor.

QUESTIONS.

What is the subject of this lesson? Golden Text? Central truth?

1. What lies at the foundation of Christian duty? Golden Text. Why?

2. What can you say of the men and women who have done the most for others?

3. What will love to our neighbor prompt us to do? Mark 14:8, f. c.

4. Can anybody say they have no chance to do good? Mark 14:7. Mention something you can do, Gal. 6:2.

5. Mention other ways in which we can do good.

6. Give an example. If our Sunday laws were repealed what would be the effect? Then does not even a child who tries to keep God's Day holy do his part to prevent such evils?

7. What is very important that young Christians should learn? Dan. 3:16–18. Acts 4:13, 18, 19.

8. Why are many Christians who think secret societies wrong afraid to say so? What are these societies doing? Then if we truly love Christ shall we be afraid to oppose them?

9. If we love our neighbor how shall we feel in regard to the temperance question? What shall we want to do besides saving those already drunkards?

10. How shall we feel in regard to tobacco and other evils?

11. What must we do in order to get the strength and wisdom necessary to keep Christ's commandments? John 5:39. Jas. 1:5. Why ought we not to consider prayer and reading the Bible as duties?

12. What is a good rule for young Christians? What are usually our nearest duties? How does the faithful performance of these help us fulfill other and higher duties when we grow up? Luke 16:10.

13. What practical truths are contained in this lesson?

LESSON TALK.

We learned in the last lesson that we must trust Christ wholly for salvation—that we cannot save ourselves. Some people even as far back as St. Paul's day have had trouble with this doctrine. They think its general effect is to discourage and make us careless about committing sin. But let us look at this matter a moment for it is very important. Perhaps you remember reading how Dr. Livingston was attended in his last illness by two native servants; and when he died how they carried his dead body thousands of miles through the terrible African swamps and jungles that he might be buried in his native England. They did this because they loved him. Dr. Livingstone had ransomed them from a life of slavery, and they felt that nothing they could do for him was too much to show their gratitude. But supposing he had said, "I will give you your liberty but you must work it out," would he have received such loving faithful service? No; under such conditions it would not have been a free gift. It would have been simply an affair of debt and credit with which love and gratitude had nothing in particular to do.

Now all false religions teach that our good works have a saving merit, so that we need not rely on Christ entirely for salvation, if we do at all. Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship tell men if they will only be good Masons and Odd-fellows they will be saved. This, at its best interpretation means that a good moral life is all that is needed for salvation. Thus they reject Christ and with him the only way by which we can develope our noblest spiritual faculties. There is nothing enobling to the soul, nothing fitted to call out our highest and purest affections in a mere bargain. It must be love and gratitude which can do this. Thus we see that God's plan of free salvation through Christ is in harmony with philosophy, with reason and with nature.

LESSON HYMN.

"By cool Siloan's shady rill,
How fair the lily grows!"

ANARCHISTS IN EUROPE.—Europe, at the present moment, presents external aspects of profound peace. There does not seem to be so much as a ripple of serious discord between nation and nation. Even the restless races of Southeastern Europe—the Turk, the Greek, the Bosnian, the Montenegrin—appear to have wearied for the while their constant quarrels, and to have settled down into something like quiet. But if we look at the internal condition of the European States, we find nearly every one of them disturbed by dangerous commotions and unrest. Everywhere the spirit of anarchy and conspiracy seems to be at work. In Irelaud assasination, secret plotting, and dark outrage are going on. In England, dynamite blows up public buildings, and the great officers of State, in their persons and their homes, are protected by detectives and guards. Anarchists are causing serious disturbance in France, where insurrection takes the form of violent assaults upon capital and property. An outbreak of the same type of fanatics has taken place in Andalusia in Southern Spain, which threatens the lives of landlords and defies the power of government. Even little Belgium, free and prosperous, is not exempt from the pestilence of anarchist conspiracy; while at Trieste, and in other parts of Austria, similar disturbances have aroused the terror af the people. If we look north and east, we find in the great Empire of Germany an organization of Socialists, so formidable as to render the government itself insecure, and to constantly threaten the lives of the sovereign and his chief counsellors. In Russia so widespread and threatening is the conspiracy of the Nihilists that the Czar has more than once postponed the ceremony of his coronation at Moscow, for fear that he may be killed by the conspirators if he thus ventures to expose himself; while the other crowned heads of Europe prudently refuse to attend the coronation and will send their envoys to represent them. These bands of anarchists in every locality seem bent on a work of pure destruction.—N. Y. Witness.

—Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D., of this city, in a sermon before the Presbyterian General Assembly, at Saratoga, on last Thursday, devoted a large portion of his discourse to the dangers which threaten the church. Speaking of the threatened ministerial famine he referred to the statistics of the Presbyterian church for the last decade, ending 1882. He said that the number of churches so far exceeded the number of ministers that it would require the placing of nearly every Home and Foreign Missionary, together with the pastors now supplying the churches, to give each church of forty members a pastor, and then there would be left 2,000 churches uncared for. Or if every editor, college president or professor, together with every retired minister and ministers without charge should be placed in charge of a church, there would still be left 601 churches without shepherds. During the decade mentioned there was a gain of over 175 members for each addition to the ministry. Nor does there seem to be any hope for a better supply of ministerial force, as the candidates for the ministry show a decrease of 141, while the increase in church membership is given as 123,96[illegible]

OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

The Cynosure is happy to announce herewith a grand list of contributors and correspondents for 1883. To read their letters, study their arguments, compare their experiences, and drink with them at the fountain of truth, even Jesus Christ, will be the noble privilege of the readers of the Cynosure. The following is only a partial list. Arrangements are being made for the enlargement of the circle until it shall include every section of our country:

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1883.

MORMONISM.

The Cynosure has said relatively little on Mormonism. The reason is that we have not yet gotten to it. Nothing but the principles of the American platform, honestly adopted by a majority, aud faithfully applied and carried out, will oust that last of the "latter day" evils. Dr. Stevenson (Covenanter) of the Christian Statesman, said, "We accept the American platform, every article of it."

"Then why," was asked, "don't you vote for it, as you did for the Prohibition Amendment in Iowa?"

"Because," said he, "we can't vote for officers who must swear to support a godless Constitution, though we can and will vote to put a godly amendment into that Constitution."

"Upon that hint I spake" and J. C. K. Milligan of New York city was addressed:

"Brother, shape a side issue, and vote with us. Go to the polls and vote for the American platform, as an Amendment; and we will in 1884 vote for, and, God willing, elect men who will amend the Constitution and several things beside, Mormonism among the rest."

Mormonism, and every other thing which destroys Christ's institution of marriage, is in practice simple, wholesale, child-murder. Nobody who can put two ideas together, and draw an inference from them, will doubt that for a moment. Mormonism is a religious brothel, and every such place is a slaughter-house of infants.

Now God commanded to put to death by stoning by the people (which was God's lynch-law) the religious murderers of children, whether natives or immigrants like the Mormons. (See Lev. 20: 2). And, in the 4th verse it is added, "And if the people of the land" (or the Congressional Commission) "do any ways hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his seed to Molech; and kill him not; then will I set my face against that man, and will cut him off."

Now Mormon religion is a religion of Molech. Infants, in a household presided over by a multiplicity of mothers, have to run the gauntlet for life, when poverty pinches, or when lust or envy demands their death. The poor things stand as slim a chance as if born Chinese female infants or in a Turkish seraglio. Why should that religion spare troublesome infants which *Cannon*izes lust; where polygamy is a revelation; and Danite avengers are accounted ministers of God!

Now Mormons give infants to Molech. Congress sends its commissioners there, and all the Gentile letters which are worth heeding say that those commissioners "any ways hide their eyes" from Mormon abominations; because the Constitution guarantees the "free exercise" of "religion;" and religion at Salt Lake means polygamy and assassination of the enemies of "the church."

Mormonism is now getting control of several States, and declares that if interfered with it will fight. The slave-holders declared the same, and when the Republican party interfered with them, they did fight; and so will the Mormons.

That able statesman and true American, E. B. Washburne, hit the nail of the difficulty on the head, when he hinted that some of our Congressmen "kept two or three fast women;" and "bucked the tiger" (gambled) "every night." Rev. Thornton A. Mills, of the Presbytery of Cincinnati, used to tell of a brilliant prostitute who boasted of a certain Congress that she had had improper relations with one half the members.

Now, without endorsing this declaration, or even Mr. Washburne's hint, a Congress meeting on a Constitution which covers Mormonism under its term "religion,"—a Congress, too, elected by parties, and on platforms which ignore God and morals, and altogether ignore Christ who is the only authority for marriage which consists of "twain," not of "twenty," is altogether unreliable. To hope that such parties, standing on such Godless, Christless, Sabbathless, Bibleless platforms as those of the Republicans and Democrats, will ever displace Mormonism, is to repeat a worse twaddle than that of the Democrat in Congress, who when Fort Sumpter and the Star of the West were bombarded, said, "Gentlemen, in my opinion, those men need talking to."

The Mormons say they will fight, they are preparing to fight, and they will fight; and Democrats and Whigs who brought on the slavery war, are bringing on this!

The thing to be done is to "fear God and keep his commandments;" TO PUT GOD'S POLITICS INTO PARTY PLATFORMS; which are the only living politics there are; and teach them to the American people. Happy is that people whose God is the Lord Jesus Christ; and no other people is or can be "happy." Pomeroy has taught these politics all his life. So did the Abolitionists. Alfred the Great taught God's politics, as our common law and jury trial attest. So taught Wiclyffe and Cromwell. The Emperor William and Bismarck exalted God, but the French undertook to exalt themselves and failed. The American party exalts God in its platform, and IT will not fail. As the old hymn of Watts says:

"How can it sink with such a prop
As the eternal God?"

FALSEHOOD A MASONIC VIRTUE.

Such facts as these need no logic or eloquence to bring them home to every candid mind with convincing power. The Shabbona, Ill., Baptist quotes from a correspondent, living at Newark in the same State, writing to the Plano News, thus:

"Rev. J. G. Campbell told me about two weeks ago that 'it was the right and privilege of a Freemason to evade, equivocate, or in some way mislead when questioned by outsiders as to his Masonic membership, because it may not be pleasant for him, among enemies, to acknowledge his real position. If we deny to an outsider the fact of our being a Mason we simply mean we are not a Mason to him.'"

This mau Campbell, who holds that the lodge has power to set aside one of the plainest commandments of both revealed and natural religion directed against the meanness and vice of falsehood, has been and may yet be pastor in the Methodist Episcopal church and member of the Rock River Conference.

COMFORT FOR UNITED BRETHREN.

The Religious Telescope, was in 1839 forbidden by worldly conference leaders to discuss slavery for five years, from 1839 to 1844, while the country was reeling and rocking under the discussion; like the light-house keeper, who blew out his light on stormy nights to save his oil to burn in clear aud calm weather. Bishop Edwards, then a young man, denounced the act as, "Bad policy, and unrighteous before God." He was active in getting the interdict taken off. The Telescope was then published at Circleville, Ohio. During those five years' silence of the Telescope, three presses were broken in succession by the mob in Cincinnati; and the city was, at one time, three days and nights in the power of the mob. This is a mortifying fact, yet encouraging to faithful brethren who now mourn the eclipse of that interesting church by the lodge-shadow. Morning is coming. Where are pro-slavery leaders now?

THE CONGRESSIONAL CEMETERY is on the banks of the Potomac some mile or two east of the Capitol. It is a fair and beautiful spot for the repose of the dead. Long rows of stubby, ill-shaped, rough sandstone monuments about three and a half feet by two, and white-washed, are set up in the cemetery, for Members of Congress, no matter where they lived or died. The stones are all of the same shape and dimensions. The stone is coarse, and the inscriptions on some already obscure. They give a dull, unpleasing effect.

"PRESTON S. BROOKS, Representative in Congress from the State of South Carolina, died 1857." This is all the record of the man who beat Sumner over the head at his desk in the United States Senate. No age, month or day is given. Nothing but the above. Hon. Thaddeus Stevens has a fuller inscription. The stone states that he was a Representative in the 31st and 36th to the 40th Congress: and that he died Aug. 11, 1868, aged 75 years. John C. Calhoun died in 1850; Henry Clay two years later; each marked by the same dull democratic stone with all the rest.

ZEBINA EASTMAN, one of the old Abolitionists best known in the West, died at his home in Maywood near this city on Thursday last. Mr. Eastman came to Illinois soon after the murder of Elijah P. Lovejoy of Alton by a pro-slavery mob, and it was boasted that no anti-slavery sheet could be published in the State. Benjamin Lundy soon after came up from Tennessee and began the publication of the Genius of Universal Emancipation at Hennepin, having his type set and printing done at the remote little town of Lowell, some twelve miles away in La Salle county. Mr. Eastman became associated with Lundy, and after his death removed in 1842 to Chicago where he became associated with Philo Carpenter, Dr. J. B. Walker, Isaac Preston and other Abolitionists then living in or near the city. The Western Citizen was founded as an organ of the Liberty party and Mr. Eastman as its editor exerted a strong controlling influence in the success of the movement. In the field co-operating with him were Ichabod Codding, son-in-law of Isaac Preston and one of the most eloquent of platform speakers, and our dear old "Liberty Singer," George W. Clark, whose voice has survived that generation and thrills even now every bosom with the noble hymns of reform. The Liberty party began with 145 votes that year, but ten years later the number grew to 10,000, and in the few years following became a controlling power in the State, and, as the Republican party, carried Lincoln to the Presidency. Mr. Eastman served for eight years as U. S. consul at Bristol, England, under Lincoln's appointment. After his return he continued to keep alive amid their ashes the fires of the anti-slavery reform by occasional contributions to the papers of an historical character. He was among the originators and managers of the great Abolitionist reunion here some eight or nine years ago, and at every anniversary of the death of John Brown he gave an address upon that hero at the most favorable place that was offered. In 1877 he spoke in the College Hall at Wheaton and his address was published in these columns. To the close of his life he continued to be active in Christian work, some seasons driving for miles every Sabbath to address the inmates of the Cook county poorhouse. The funeral services at Maywood on Saturday were attended by a number of old citizens of Chicago who were associated with Mr. Eastman in his early reform work.

JOSEPH COOK'S caustic criticism of the conduct of our metropolitan papers, was repudiated by none more earnestly than the Inter Ocean of this city. Allow its columns to be sold for immoral purposes! Never. But the upright editor who will not admit Mr. Cook's objections to be true had the pleasure of reading an advertisement in the Inter Ocean the other day three columns and a half long, set deceptively in the ordinary reading type and surrounded by ordinary reading matter so as to appear like news matter of importance—aud what was it all about? Simply a State gambling concern, the Louisiana State lottery, an infamous scheme which is ruining thousands of homes and as many more thousaud souls.

LARD is a greasy commodity. The broker who attempted to carry $12,000,000 worth of it found out his mistake and gave up Saturday to a loss estimated at $2,500,000, dragging six other firms down with him. The principal dealer is a Milwaukee man whose successes had gained him heavy backing in that city. Some days ago realizing his desperate condition he refused to receive a large consignment of lard on the ground of its impurity. His charges were not sustained and his "corner" broke down. Saturday was one of the wildest of days on our Board of Trade, and the excitement of the gaming table was fairly rivalled. If the personal loss, anxiety and disgrace of these gambling failures could be confiued to the few personally engaged in them it might not so much concern the public, but the whole community is disastrously affected when the necessaries of life are made use of for dishonorable speculation, and our laws do well to condemn the business.

THE STAR-ROUTE TRIAL has come to a disgraceful and flat failure. After seven months of trial; after eight legal pleas each from six to uine days long; after making a record which, printed in small type and ou an octavo page, makes 6,000 pages; after the people have paid three lawyers $134,000 for fees; after the public press had informed the world in positive terms of the guilt of the five conspirators,—after all this the disgusting and shameful news came out last Wednesday that one of the jurors had a fit of delirium tremens, and had frequently through the trial been dosed with whisky by the advice of a physician and with the consent of Judge Wylie, of course destroying the effect of a decision against the conspirators. Then on Thursday the jury returned a verdict acquitting the whole gang. The scenes that followed were characteristic and disgraceful. The female relatives of the defendants were frantic, and made up a screaming chorus in the lobby of the court. The men rushed across to a saloon to quench their fiery and devouring joy. Ingersoll was serenaded and took occasion to congratulate the crowd of hangers-on upon the verge of crime in Washington with their victory and the demoralization of justice. He derided the administration and taunted the President with much the same reckless defiance that he blasphemes the Almighty. The conspirators are now threatening to bring libel suits against promineut journals that have beeu severe on them and which will not agree with the verdict. The New York Times speaks the almost universal sentiment in the following bold words: "Well, the Times does not acquiesce in the verdict and will continue the warfare. The New York Times began the warfare upon this gang of plunderers from a deep conviction of public duty. It believed them to be guilty. The proofs of their guilt which it has unearthed are as conclusive and irrefutable as the proofs upon which it made its fight against the Tweed ring. In that fight it was not discouraged by repeated reverses. It acquiesced in no verdict save that which sent Tweed to the Tombs. It will not acquiesce in the verdict of acquittal rendered yesterday, because it believes these men to be guilty. It believes that the Republican party owes it to itself and to the nation to convict and punish them. Therefore it will continue the warfare. If this course should be unsatisfactory to Jas. W. Brady, Stephen W. Dorsey, or any other Star-route thief, and they choose to attempt to vindicate themselves in libel suits, the Times will welcome the opportunity to do the Republican party and the country the grandest service of which it is capable by proving in a court of law that they are thieves, and that it has told the truth in calling them such."

EVANGELIZATION IN KENTUCKY.

TO THE EDITOR AND READERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—At a meeting of ministers and delegates of churches held in Berea, Ky., Oct. 14–16, 1881. Elder J. F. Browne and myself were appointed a committee "to promote the mission work in all suitable ways." The mission work referred to, was that of securing aid for and building up Christian churches here in Kentucky.

For more than thirty-five years a few churches in this State, have borne their testimony against slaveholding, caste, secret associations, rum-selling, all things contrary to the spirit and life of Christ. Our purpose has been to simply follow the Gospel order —ask men to confess Christ, commit themselves to him in all the fullness of his character as the Saviour from sin, be baptized in his name, assemble for worship as the one church of the place and take the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as their rule of faith and practice. Whilst we have made the one issue of preaching Christ, we have insisted that "Christ is not the minister of sin," that those who commit themselves to him must necessarily dismiss all known wrong.

As was to be expected, such a Gospel in such a land, must be not only unpopular, but must meet with much opposition. In order to efficiency we sought the union of all true Christians in any given locality, avoiding sectarian tests and denominational names; stood as "church"—the "Church of Christ" in ———.

When the American Missionary Association began its work of aiding missionaries and churches in preaching a Christ of impartial love, that Association was undenominational. Since the late war it has committed itself as the organ of a denomination and now styles itself "the left wing of the Congregational corpse."

My past experience has shown to me that denominationalism is the great hindrance to reform. As with slaveholding in time past, so now with secret associations, rum-selling or any popular vice; ministers in their feeble and contending factions are afraid to disturb an evil that will peril numbers or support. Also, the less objectionable, and the more popular a denomination, but still a denomination, the more potent its influence in perpetuating the evil of denominationalism. Seeing these things and that the American Missionary Association was avowing itself more and more distinctively denominational, and that so long as I remained as a missionary sustained in part by aid from that Association I would be regarded, abroad, as doing the denominational work of that Association, I accordingly a few months since declined further aid from that Association.

Bro. Browne had preceded me in his decline of such aid. He needs aid, but for the reason just assigned wants it from other sources. The professors in Berea College, engaged in this work of helping to build up undenominational work, get their salaries from Berea College. Outside of these, yet engaged in this undenominational work, are three ministers (colored) who with a small salary, say from two to three hundred dollars annually, would give their time to this work. For them and Bro. Browne I ask aid. I shall be glad to have the aid come into your treasury and we report in your columns how used.

—Bro. E. D. Bailey reached Chicago from the Montpelier convention on Thursday last to attend the anniversary exercises at Wheaton and the N. C. A. annual meeting.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

A correspondent signing himself Observer publishes an item in one of the Westerly papers sharply arraigning that paper for treating the recent lectures there slightingly. The item was timely and exceeding forcible.

The Boston Journal concludes a brief notice of the Vermont convention with the words, "It was a fizzle." That is the word the Montpelier lodges send to the Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of Boston, but the appearance of the fraternity at the convention betrayed a different feeling. They are evidently whistling to keep up courage.

Rev. Charles Terry Collins of Cleveland Ohio, in writing to the Congregationalist of the great hindrances to the evangelization of the country classes secret societies as one of three obstacles. Here are his words:

"The third moral factor among them is clubbism. Carlyle headed a chapter of his French revolution with that word, because under it was marshaled a mighty force of revolution. I am very far from being a man rabid over Masonry. There are secret societies which do a noble work, but no society of any order but does a destructive work where the majority of its members are hostile to religion and indifferent to morals. Friends, study your city directories. I find in Cleveland's, there are 163 churches, chapels and synagogues, and 238 secret clubs, and outside the directory no one knows how many more. Some of these hide, under an unintelligible foreign title, the bold avowal that they are free thinking societies. Remember the London dynamite plot was born in a club on the bowery. Possibly something equally explosive against what we love may be hatching in these clubs under our very eyes. Anyway, how large a proportion of the thousands and millions in them are church people?

Rev. Taylor Church is advertised to speak in Westerly R. I., on "Masonry vs. Anti-masonry." He refused to debate the subject publically but waits till his opponent is out of town before attempting a defence.

CONVENTION REVIEW.

WORCESTER, Mass., June 9, 1883.

It is the intention of the secretary of the Vermont convention to send an abstract of the proceedings, so that I need not comment at length. The permanent organization is like that of Nebraska—the constitution being the same with verbal changes. Rev. W. R. Laird was chosen president, Rev. D. C. Faris first vice-president, with others from the various counties; C. W. Potter secretary and O. C. Bailey State lecturer. The meeting was moderated in the absence of the president-elect, by Rev. D. C. Faris, whose presence and counsel were valuable. Elder Barlow was present and rendered valuable service by his addresses.

The first evening the audience was not large and the Masonic portion was not well-behaved. It was not denied that the band which played in front of the hall was hired by the Masons to break up the meeting if possible. Inside the Masons behaved a la Boston, stamping with their feet and canes to drown the voices of the speakers. The Episcopal minister was known to be the leader of the disturbance, and such men as Bart. Cross, who was a delegate to Garfield's convention in Chicago, aided the turbulent noises. The janitor of the hall in apologizing for allowing the disturbance, said the men engaged in it were "the tony gentlemen of Montpelier" and he could not reprove them.

The wrath of the fraternity was so manifest that many feared a mob the second evening and the janitor called on the bailiffs for protection. Whether the officers restrained them or the lodge was ashamed of its conduct, the second evening was a great triumph and the evil-minded were held in check. There is no doubt that the Masons were greatly disturbed and are filled with forebodings. The proceedings were noticed by the State press and outside of the State.

General Phelps' address was, as might be expected, forcible and clear, and arrayed historical facts which are destined to exert a good influence in future operations in the State. Rev. D. C. Faris spoke in defense of the position of his church in excluding Freemasons from membership. The two months' work done by O. C. Bailey in the State won the hearty endorsement of the convention and he was appointed to continue to press the battle.

In only one respect did the convention fail to attain the most desirable end. No central committee for political action was appointed. This was owing more to press of business than to any opposition to political action. It was the intention to have devoted a few hours outside of the convention sessions to a discussion of politics, but in this we failed. There is no doubt, however, that Vermont will be one of the most forward States in political action. The old Anti-masonic sentiment of fifty years ago is not all gone.

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS; PREPARED FOR THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION; JUNE 21, 1883.

At the annual meeting of the National Christian Association, June 22, 1882, Philo Carpenter, J. Blanchard, M. R. Britten, E. A. Cook, H. L. Kellogg, D. P. Baker, T. H. Gault, C. R. Hagerty, John Gardner, A. G. Laird and L. N. Stratton were chosen Directors for the year.

The first meeting of the Board was held June 28, 1882; an organization was perfected by choosing D. P. Baker, President; C. R. Hagerty, Vice-President; and W. I. Phillips, Secretary. Other meetings during the year were on Aug. 16, Nov. 29, Dec. 2, 1882; April 13, April 21, and June 8, 1883.

The standing committees were as follows: On Fiuance, D. P. Baker, J. P. Stoddard and T. H. Gault; On Building, Philo Carpenter, J. P. Stoddard and W. I. Phillips; On Tracts, D. P. Baker, H. L. Kellogg and W. I. Phillps.

AGENTS.

The Board has during the year arranged for the employment and salaries of the following agents, lecturers and officers of the N. C. A.:

J. P. Stoddard, General Agent and Corresponding Secretary, salary $1,000 and expenses; H. H. Hinman as Agent at $600 per year and traveling expenses; P. S. Feemster as Agent at $600 per year and traveling expenses.

E. D. Bailey was continued as New England Agent and was to be paid $50 per month as long as necessary, his salary being paid from the Worcester Fund.

To the Iowa Christian Association, (D. P. Rathbun, lecturer) $50 was sent from the treasury.

To the Wisconsin Christian Association (Isaac Bancroft, lecturer) $50 has been paid from the treasury.

To the California Christian Association, (D. A. Richards, lecturer,) $25 has been paid.

To the Missouri Christian Association, (M. N. Butler, lecturer,) $25 has been paid.

To E. R Worrell $69.71 has been paid as colporteur during portions of July, August and September, 1882.

To J. F. Browne $96.84 has been paid for services as lecturer in Kentucky during portions of June, July, August and September, 1882,

To E. Mathews $252.21 has been paid for services in New York, Indiana, and other States during June, July, August, September and October, 1882.

To Rev. J. Blanchard $90.45 has been paid for services in Washington, D. C.

The Treasurer and Assistant Secretary has received $18 per week; his bond in $20,000 having been approved.

Since Jan. 1, 1883, H. L. Kellogg has been employed as office editor of the Cynosure at $1,000 per year.

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION

was held at Batavia, N. Y., Sept. 12–14, 1882. A deficit in its expenses af $132.89 has been paid from the treasury, as has also a difference of $106.43 between the cost of the Morgan Monument and the contributions received for the same.

The Board recommends that the next Convention be held in Washington, D. C., if expedient.

WASHINGTON HEADQUARTERS.

From representations made by letters from Hon. S. C. Pomeroy and Rev. H. H. Hinman and also by the General Agent, after his personal inspection of the situation, the Board approved of the purchase of a building in Washington, D. C., by the General Agent and also instructed the treasurer to pay over to him any money contributed for the Washington Building as it should be needed. The building purchased and thoroughly refitted and repaired is located at No. 215, 4½ street, Washington.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

Upon the statement of the Publisher that something must be done to relieve him from the burden of an annual deficit in the publishing of the Cynosure, committees were appointed to consider and report upon the best thing to be done, which reports being considered by the Board resulted in the Cynosure becoming the property of the Association. Mr. Cook received $3,000 cash, and for four years is to have one inside page for advertisements in each weekly edition, and, also the amount which he has received for 1573 subscriptions he is to retain, and the Association is to fill the contracts with the subscribers by sending them the Cynosure for the year.

MISCELLANEOUS,

The Board approved the work of the committee appointed at the Batavia Convention in publishing a large edition of the Weed letter. One hundred and twenty thousand have been printed.

Two new tracts have been published, one in the Holland language and tract No. 47, "Andover Theological Seminary in Condemnation of Masonry."

Interest on the "Sally Gilkey" Fund has been paid to the donor, under the provisions of the donation.

Some expense has been incurred in the defense of the claim of the Association against the estate of Judge Wright, which case is still in the courts.

W. I. PHILLIPS, Sec'y.

D. P. BAKER, Chairman.

—As the promised report of the Vermont State Convention had not been received up to Tuesday morning the forms were reluctantly sent to press lacking the full report of this important meeting which we had hoped to print this week.

THE HOME.

WHAT THE TRAVELER SAID.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

The shadows grow and deepen round me;
I feel the dew-fall in the air;
The muezzin of the darkening thicket
I hear the night-thrush call to prayer.

The evening wind is sad with farewells,
And loving hands unclasp from mine;
Alone I go to meet the darkness
Across an awful boundary line.

As from the lighted hearths behind me
I pass with slow, reluctant feet,
What waits me in the land of strangeness?
What face shall smile, what voice shall greet?

What space shall awe, what brightness blind me?
What thunder roll of music stun?
What vast procession sweep before me
Of shapes unknown beneath the sun?

I shrink from unaccustomed glory,
I dread the myriad-voiced strain:
Give me the unforgotten faces,
And let my lost ones speak again.

He will not chide my mortal yearning
Who is our Brother and our Friend,
In whose full life divine and human
The heavenly and the earthly blend.

Mine be the joy of soul-communion,
The sense of spiritual strength renewed,
The reverence for the pure and holy,
The dear delight of doing good.

No fitting ear is mine to listen
An endless anthem's rise and fall;
No curious eye is mine to measure
The pearl gate and the jasper wall.

For love must needs be more than knowledge;
What matter if I never know
Why Aldebaran's star is ruddy
Or colder Sirius white as snow!

Forgive my human words, O Father!
I go Thy larger truth to prove;
Thy mercy shall transcend my longing;
I seek but love, and Thou art Love!

I go to find my lost and mourned for Safe in thy sheltering goodness still,
And all that hope and faith foreshadow
Mad e perfect in thy holy will!

A GRADUATION SKETCH.

Graduation night in a city we will call it, since we must call it something and can't give it its real name. Such a crowd of people! Such a heavy flower-laden atmosphere! Just as I began to grow impatient, watching for the appearance of girls in white, and spruce young men trying to appreciate the dignity of the occasion, a woman and little girl were ushered into the seat in front of me. Nothing very remarkable in that, to be sure, but I forgot to watch the coming of the graduates just as soon as my neighbors were seated. Perhaps it was their dress which first took my attention. It was so plain, especially the mother's. She wore a thick winter dress and bonnet, very old-fashioned and much worn. The little girl's dress, a faded calico, had evidently been starched and ironed for the occasion, the short sleeves of which, outgrown, she kept pulling down over her brown arms. But what I noticed more than these was the chubby hand of the little girl, which held a bouquet of wild flowers—field daisies and bright yellow buttercups—tied together with a little bit of blue ribbon, the knot of which the little girl would tie and untie over and over again, giving it little loving pats. But just then there was a bustle just ahead of the little girl and her mother, and a row of elegantly dressed ladies were seated. The Judge's family. I remembered then that the Judge's daughter was a graduate; and all those lovely flowers were for her. Such dainty baskets and fragrant hot-house bouquets! The Judge himself had an arm-chair in the aisle. He was poising a basket of roses on his knee in a way peculiar to complacent dignitaries. I couldn't help comparing his calm, self-satisfied face with the anxious one in the shabby winter bonnet. The music struck up then, to the relief of uneasy ones, and in came the row of white. Even the Judge showed the least sign of interest, while the mother and little sister watched the stage with anxiety almost breathless. There she came—I knew her right away—next the white silk and diamonds of the Judge's daughter; a pretty face in a simple dress. I saw her eye run along the crowded tiers of seats with an almost confused expression until it lit on the old bonnet, and then there was a little nod, an answering mother-smile of assurance, a wave of sister's little sunburned hand, and the family were ready for the exercises.

I began to read the whole story from the simple pretty dress on the stage; the story of hard work and petty sacrifices that the daughter might come to this night. It made the faded calico and old winter clothing look differently, somehow. But the bell struck, and now one after another of the girls and boys came forward, took part, and retired with a share of applause. I became tired after awhile, and turned again to my neighbors. Like me the little girl had grown weary waiting for sister, and was eyeing the elegant dresses in front of her with all the child-look of wonder and admiration. And then the flowers! How her little freckled face broadened into a smile as she took in their beautiful colors. Then, with a sudden thought, she turned toward her own rustic bonquet, which all this while she had held unconsciously in a tight clasp. The poor little flowers were drooping with thirst. All the smile went away. There was a quick glance at the row of ladies and bouquets, at the stage, and then at her own buttercups and daisies and bit of blue ribbon. Such a pitying look she gave them and they dropped into her lap. Just here the graduate in simple white was announced, but the little figure before me heeded it not. The chin fell lower and lower on the waist of the faded calico. The mother, all intent on the daughter reading, did not notice the one at her side. I was watching the drooping head so closely not one word of the essay did I hear. I only knew that the little chin was beginning to quiver when there was a clapping which told that the essay was finished. The mother turned to the child, and I heard her whisper a little excitedly, "Throw the flowers, Kittie, now, you see!" But Kittie only shook her head, and I heard a little smothered sob. Meanwhile, the sister had taken her seat. There was a little awkward pause without flowers, and the exercises were about to go on, when, to my complete surprise, the Judge raised his dignified form, walked to the stage, and himself handed up his basket of roses; with a blush of pleasure and astonishment the young girl received them, while the people cheered. As for Kittie, a sky full of sunshine after a dark cloud would be a fit comparison. The seat could hardly contain her; she bobbed around like a canary-bird, "Oh! Oh! See Mary's posies!" she whispered audibly. People were looking at her, even the Judge's family turned their heads a little. But her eyes were fixed intently on Mary until the Judge came back to his chair, when she turned and fairly beamed on him. He liked it; in fact, tried to smile and came nearer it than I supposed he could. I knew then how it came to happen. He had been watching this little tragedy as well as I, only that he had turned it into a comedy. Somehow that stern old Judge looked differently to me and has looked differently ever since. When of a summer morning I meet him strolling toward the city I forget the pompous manner, and remember that under the diamond studs is a kindly spot which once responded to a child's sorrow.—Christian Union.

WAS IT AN ACCIDENT.

Many a seeming accident illustrates Cowper's lines:

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform."

Dr. Hamlin, so long the head of Roberts College, Constantinople, tells of one of these "accidents." One hot day in July, 1839, while passing the Galata Custom House, a crowd attracted his attention. Forcing his way through it, he saw a poor sailor lying by the side of the wall, apparently dying of cholera.

"Do you speak English?" asked Dr. Hamlin.

"Yes," said the man, following the word with an oath.

"Are you an Englishman or an American?"

"American"—another oath.

Worse expressions showed that profanity had become his mother tongue. Dr. Hamlin, after many appeals to the crowd, whose brutal natures were stirred by the prospect of seeing him die, secured assistance and removed the sailor to a house.

For several weeks he was nursed and visited by the missionaries. He recovered and sailed for Boston. On the morning he left, he called on his missionary friend to say good-by. Lingering for a moment by the door, he said—

"I have been a very wicked man, Mr. Hamlin, and have done all the evil I could in the world, and now I am going to do all the good I can."

Three years after Dr. Hamlin received a letter from him, which thus began:

"DEAR DR. HAMLIN:—Thank God I still survive the dead! I am here workin' and blowin' the Gospel trumpet on the Eri Kanal."

When Dr. Goodell, an old missionary, saw the letter, he asked that he might begin the answer, and taking a sheet of paper, wrote:

"DEAR MR. BROWN:—Blow away, brother, blow! Yours, in blowing the same Gospel trumpet. WILLIAM GOODELL."

Twenty-five years after Dr. Hamlin, while dining at a hotel in Paris, was accosted by an American gentleman.

"I am just from Honolulu, Sandwich Islands," said the gentleman. "I have known a man there by the name of Brown who has done a great deal of good among the sailors. He can go everywhere and anywhere with the Bible. He has told me how he was once dying a blasphemous dog (his own words), in the streets of Constantinople, and you picked him up and saved him soul and body. Is it all true, or is it in part a sailor's long yarn?"

What seemed the accidental passing of Mr. Hamlin down a street in Constantinople, was the means by which God saved "a blasphemous dog," and sent him "blowin' the Gospel trumpet" along the "Eri Kanal," and among the islands of the Pacific. Is there such a thing as an accident in God's moral government?—Youth's Companion.

NOTHING MINE BUT GOD.

In the memoir of Mrs. Savage, the sister of Matthew Henry, the commentator, is this entry in her diary: "Resolved, To call nothing mine but God." How forcibly does the expression remind us of the Saviour's requirement, "Whosoever he be that forsaketh not all that he hath, he can not be my disciple;" and, at the same time, of the Apostle's inventory of the Christian's possessions, all things are yours." Truly, if this be so, "He that loseth his life shall find it."

RIGHT SIDE OF FIFTY.—Whether one who has passed the fiftieth mile-stone of his life's journey is on the right or the wrong side of fifty, depends on what there is for him on the other side. A friend once said to the devout and saintly Mr. Venn: "Sir, I think you are on the wrong side of fifty."

"On the wrong side of fifty?" answered Mr. Venn. "No, sir; I am on the right side of fifty."

"But," said his friend, "surely you must be turned fifty?"

"Yes, sir," said Mr. Venn; "but I am on the right side of fifty, for every year I live I am nearer my crown of glory."

THE WAYS OF THE CLOTHES-MOTH.

Many a vigilant house-keeper would be spared much vexation of spirit, if she understood the domestic arrangements of the moths as well as she does her own. She suspects everything Lepidopterous of being "the moth," and every insect of that kind that enters the house, no matter what its size or kind, must be killed lest it "eat holes in the clothing." It will surprise these watchful persons to be told that the moth itself is harmless, and eats nothing. The proper Clothes-moth has a spread of wing of only about half an inch; it flits about so quietly, and is so small, as often to escape notice, while insects many times larger are suspected of being dangerous. The small size of the true Clothes-moth, its delicate buff color, satiny lustre, and especially the silky fringe upon the edges of the wings, distinguish it from other moths. In saying the moth is harmless, we would not be understood that it is not the cause of mischief. The only part assigned to this creature, in its beautiful winged state, is to lay eggs. The round of its changes is as follows: The egg, from which hatches the larva or catterpillar; this does all the feeding, and is the destructive form of the insect; the chrysalis, in which state it is dormant for about three weeks, and finally the winged state or moth, just described. Observe that the moth increases only from eggs laid by the flying insect. The feeding moth, or caterpillar does not increase its numbers. The caterpillars feed upon woolen fabrics and furs, and they also use the minute fragments of them to make themselves a case or shield, a circular roll, which they carry about with them as they feed, and enlarge as their growth requires. In the Northern States, the moth begins to fly in May, but earlier in warmer climates, and their eggs are laid in May and June, when the insect dies. It will be seen that, to preserve articles from injury, we must place them where the parent moth can not reach them. The insect is small, and can slip through narrow cracks. Whatever will hold liquids will keep out moths, hence furs and woolens may be placed in whiskey and other barrels. If the articles are placed in brown linen and sewed up, or in paper and pasted up, they will be perfectly protected. There must be no eggs or moths in the articles when put away, and the wrapping should be thorough, without any crevice through which the parent moth can crawl.—American Agriculturist for April.

WANTED, AN UNDERSTANDING.—An Illinois merchant, who was taking baking-powder in bulk from a Chicago firm, called at headquarters the other day, to say that there was something wrong with the goods. "I don't think so," was the reply; "We make the best article sold in the West." "I think we ought to have a more perfect understauding," continued the dealer. "Now, then, you adulterate before you send to me, then I adulterate before I ship, then the retailer adulterates before he sells, and the consumer can't be blamed for growling. I wanted to see if you couldn't agree on some schedule to be followed." "What do you mean?" "Why, suppose you put in 10 per cent. of chalk, then I put in 20 per cent. of whiting, then the retailer puts in 30 per cent. of flour; that gives the consumer 40 per cent. of baking powder, and unless he's a born hog he'll be perfectly satisfied. You see, if you adulterate 50 per cent. on the start, and I adulterate as much more, and the retailer adulterates as much as both together, it's mighty hard for the consumer to tell whether he's investing in baking-powder or putty; we must give him something for his money, if its only chalk."

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THE HISTORY OF TEN LITTLE CHICKENS.

There were ten baby chickens, yellow, black and gray,
Broke the shell and scampered out on an April day,
One was very puny, and soon began to pine—
Died; and Mother Biddy's brood numbered only nine.
Nine pretty puff balls, their feathers in a fluff,
Went to sleep. A weasel caught little Betty Buff.
Eight chicks were dining, and never dreamed of harm;
Pussy captured Topsy, and caused them all alarm.
Seven to the brookside strolled, along with Madame Duck;
One poor fellow nevermore heard his mother cluck.
Six went for grasshoppers; naughty Robbie Rood
Shot the only Bolton Gray in the pretty brood;
Five round the door-yard took a morning walk;
In a twinkling one was snatched by a hungry hawk.
Four for an earth-worm had a fearful fight;
Jimmy Crow was pecked to death—served the fellow right!
Three chickens tried to keep the topmost perch of all;
One tumbled backward, and perished by the fall.
Two chicks, the very last of Mother Biddy's brood,
Made a pie at New Year, savory and good!

OBEDIENCE TO CHRIST.

"Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." John 2: 5. How are you to know what he says to you? Ah, it so easy to know if we are really willing to know and willing to obey when we do know! He has spoken so plainly to us in his word. In that he tells us—tells even little children—exactly what to do. It is most wonderful how he has said everything there for us—told us everything we ought to do.

When you read a chapter or hear one read, listen, and watch to see what he saith unto you in it.

There is another way in which he tells us what to do. Do you not hear a little voice inside that always tells you to do the right thing and not to do the wrong thing? That is conscience, and he speaks to you by it.

Another way is by those whom he has set over you. He has told you, once for all, to "obey your parents," and to "obey them that have the rule over you." So, when they tell you to do something, it is the Lord Jesus himself that you have to obey in obeying them.

Now, "whatsoever he saith unto you do it." Yes, "whatsoever," dear little one; whether easy or hard, do it because he tells you; do it for love of him, and it will be a thousand times better and happier to obey your King than to please yourself. And he himself will help you to do it; only look up to him for grace to obey, and he will give it.

"Whatsoever he saith unto you do it." Do not just think about doing it, or talk about doing it, but do it. "Do it." Do the exact thing he would have you do, not something a little bit different, or something which you think will be very nearly the same, but do it.

And "do it" at once. It is so true that "the very first moment is the easiest for obedience." Every minute that you put off doing the right thing makes it harder. Do not let your King have to "speak twice" to you. "Whatsoever he saith unto you do it," cheerfully, exactly and instantly.—Frances Ridley Havergal.

DETERMINED TO SUCCEED.

"Eight times three! "said Willie Wilson, impatiently. "Oh, what is the matter with me? Can't I get that right?"

"Come on, Willie!" shouted the boys at the window; "we can't wait; finish your lesson afterward."

"O, yes," said Willie. "'Afterward!' I know all about him; he has cheated me many a time, and I have no faith in him. Nine times four are thirty-six."

"Bother nine times four! It is time we were off, and we shall have to go without you."

"I should like to bother it," said Willie; "it is giving me bother enough. How much is it, anyhow?"

"One hundred and seventy-nine. Now come on this minute, or we shall go without you."

"Look here, Harry Jones," said Willie, loooking up a minute from his work; "this is the last example in our lesson. I've got all the others, and I know I shan't have any more time for arithmetic, and I don't mean to stir from this corner till I get this bothering old fellow right. I've gone over him three times now, and it won't come; if I have to do it three hundred times I mean to have it. So there!"

"Bother take the old example, anyhow!" said Harry, in his crossest tone. "Come on, boys; we can't lose all the fun waiting till midnight for him;" and away every boy went.

"Nine times four are thirty-four," said Willie, patiently; and though, of course, it was not right, and never will be, he worked away just as steadily; and when he found that he was wrong, again, he said, talking to himself, "Now, look here! You think you are going to beat me, don't you? Well, you were never more mistaken in your life. My name is Persevere Wilson. Father said I had earned that name, and that I should have it as long as I deserved it; and I hope you don't think I am going to lose my name and my place in the class just to please you."

Then he began again, slowly, patiently, each figure carefully studied; and at last the example "proved itself," and Willie, with a soft hurrah and a loud yawn, got up from his corner. The last glimmer of twilight was fading. No use to talk of ball-playing now; fun was over for that evening.

"I don't care," said Willie, as he went up to bed; "it will be more fun for me than for the others when the roll of examples is called to-morrow."

Sure enough! "Master Willie," said Professor Bennet, looking up over his spectacles, "you are the only member of the class to be marked 'Perfect' to-day. There was more ball-playing than perseverance by the rest of the class, I fear." —Young Reaper.

HOW A MOSQUITO BITES.

As mosquitoes are very numerous in some places, perhaps our readers would like to know the scientific process of the operation. The bill is a complex institution. It has a blunt fork at the head, and is apparently grooved. Working through the groove, and projecting from the angle of the fork, is a lance of perfect form, sharpened with a fine bevel. Beside it the most perfect lance looks like a handsaw. On either side of this lance two saws are arranged, with the points fine and sharp and the teeth well defined and keen. The backs of these saws play against the lance. When the mosquito alights with his peculiar hum, it thrusts its keen lance, and then enlarges the aperture with the two saws, which play beside the lance until the forked bill with its capillary arrangement for pumping blood can be inserted. The sawing process is what grates upon the nerves of the victim, and causes him to strike wildly at the sawyer. Dr. Bushnell tried, in his essay on "The Moral Uses of Dark Things," to account for the existence of the mosquito by regarding it as a sort of "object lesson," intended to teach pestered humanity the exceeding hatefulness of "little sins." There is no doubt but a mosquito can bring out the little sins of humanity.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

DEGENERACY CAUSED BY TOBACCO USING.

Peculiarities of taste are often seen to be transmitted by parents to their children, such as preferences for particular articles of food or aversion to others. If preferences for various articles of food, for which the appetite is easily governable, or transmitted to offspring how much more likely it is that such almost ungovernable appetites as those for tobacco and rum should be imparted to them. Hence the children of tobacco-using parents will possess a latent appetite for the noxious weed, and a very limited use of it will be sufficient to awaken the appetite to an uncontrolled activity. Such children, if they use tobacco, will impart to their children a still stronger predisposition, and every generation of tobacco-users will be succeeded by a generation of those more strongly disposed to its use, till the passion will become irresistible and all will use it, boys and girls too. If tobacco-using is to continue to increase, and generation after generation continue to use it, the time is not far distant when young children and even infants will clearly manifest an inborn appetite and relish for it. There are youths now born of tobacco-using parents, who say they liked tobacco the first time they tried it, and were never made sick by it. In each coming generation there will be more of such, until nearly all are thus tainted.

But there are other effects of tobacco-using that are handed down to the children from the parents. It impairs the nervous functions, rendering the person more excitable, more irritable, and subject to a long train of nervous affections. It impairs the nervous constitution and transmits these impaired constitutions to children. Such children are feeble, excitable, and liable to be cut off by any serious disease. Often they do not thrive well, are stunted in growth, and do not attain to the stature of their parents before them. If they take up the habit of tobacco-using early in life, as very likely they will, their growth will be still more interfered with, and they will present a curious spectacle of the lineaments of old age mingled with the features of youth. Already a noticeable diminution of the stature of our people is observable. The general average of height is less each generation. Men of full six feet in stature are far less common in proportion to the number of inhabitants than there were thirty or fifty years ago. A like falling off in height is observable among females. Among other causes, tobacco-using by the parents, often continued from early youth, is a prominent cause. It is a cause that is powerfully working the degeneracy of the vital powers and arresting development.

This habit also exerts an influence over the brain as well as over the nerves it obscures the perception and deadens the sensibility. Tabacco-using students make less advancement than others in their studies. The permanent impairment of the intellectual powers will be proportionate to the degree of indulgence and its duration. If continued through several generations, there can but result mental degeneracy. Its excessive use impairs all the bodily organs, arresting development and enfeebling the natural powers; and its direct tendency is to produce degeneracy of the race. Already its work has begun; and if not desisted from, it will complete its work and ultimately leave a race of driveling idiots. He who loves his fellow man, let him raise his voice against this foul practice.—Science of Health.

PRO AND CON.

The pleas offered for the use of tobacco by its votaries are as follows: It is fashionable; it is genial company; it soothes the nerves and enables one to do better work; it preserves the teeth; it is an anti-fat; it is a luxury.

The objections to tobacco, as stated by Professor Hinds in his recent work, entitled "The Use of Tobacco," are the following:—

(1.) While it is a source of great present revenue to the people who cultivate it, it will in the end be detrimental to the country, because it is a crop which is very exhausting to the soil and soon wears out the land. Besides, it is not to the buyer a just equivalent for the money he pays for it.

(2.) The use of tobacco is a habit which continually grows stronger, at the same time weakening the will, and finally making man its abject slave. Such habits are sedulously to be avoided, although they could be shown to have no other ill effects.

(3) Its associations are very bad. It is the inseperable companion of dram-drinking, gambling, loafing and sporting....

(4.) As a social habit it makes one acquainted with strange companions. It also encourages loafing, lounging and laziness.

(5.) Its physiological effects, unless it is very carefully and moderately used, are such as to warrant its abandonment, even if there were no other considerations.

(6.) All its evil effects are transmitted from parent to child, and usually with a weakened constitution and a disposition to intemperance.

(7.) It is a filthy habit.

(8.) It is an expensive habit.

(9.) It is of doubtful morality, because its consequences are bad.

LITERARY.

THE CULTIVATION OF MANNERS.

There are not many newspapers that we take up but what show instances of ill-manners that might be prevented by a proper system of training in our public schools. There is no regular general system of cultivation of manners in these schools. The recent unpleasant instance of ill-breeding that was experienced by Joseph Cook at a public hotel, for which the newspapers seem to assign equal blame to himself with a drummer, is but one of an infinitude of proofs that our manners need mending, and that nothing short of systematic training will meet the case.

The system that has been got up in New England, and is being used in some of our schools, is designed to render our school rules one and the same with the rules observed in polite society. This system has been published by Messrs. Cheney & Clapp of Brattleboro, Vermont, with the approval of the leading educators of the country. It is made cheap (25 cents retail, 15 cents wholesale) in order to bring it within the reach of the poorest children of the land. It is used as a reader, its lessons being thus woven into the very texture of the child's education and character, and is a great help to young teachers to preserve the discipline and subordination of their schools.

These facts are brought to the notice of the readers of the Cynosure because of the system alluded to (called GOOD BEHAVIOR) being in accord with the reform which those readers are interested to establish. It seems folly to be providing Reform Schools as a cure for ill manners, and neglect the proper means of prevention. It is a mortifying evidence of the increase of ill manners where the State feels impelled to remedy the defect of family training in this respect by the establishment of Reform Schools. As we of the American party are endeavoring to restore our society to an American basis, we may well begin by giving an American tone to the manners of our school-children. Next to a pure religion there is nothing of greater value to society than good manners.

NEW ENGLAND EDUCATOR.

IN view of the flurry in oil, the July Century will contain a timely paper, by E. V. Smalley, on the serious and picturesque phases of "Striking Oil." The writer visited the oil regions in company with Mr. Farny, the artist, and will describe the methods and tricks of well-boring, the gigantic monopoly of the pipe-lines, and the general features of the oil trade of the world.

Vick's Magazine for June is partial to the month of roses and shows us what may be done in the cultivation of the richest of flowers. Published in Rochester, N. Y.

Most of the biographical sketches which have appeared in the young folks department of the Cynosure originally appeared in the Christian Press of Cincinnati. The whole series of sketches have been published in a volume by the American Tract Society entitled "Heroes and Heroines of the Christian Church."

The May and June numbers of Choice Literature present an amount of good reading selected from the best English reviews as we believe cannot be found in any other publication in this country. Among the articles and writers are "An Unsolved Historical Riddle," by the historian Froude, "Isaiah of Jerusalem," by Matthew Arnold, "Prince Gortschakoff on Russian Diplomacy, "Wind-force and how it is measured," "The Progress of Socialism," "Richard Wagner," "Mrs. Carlyle," "Unwritten History," by T. H. Huxley, "France and China. This monthly is published by John B. Alden, 18 Vesey St., New York, $1 per year.

In the North American Review for July, President Julius H. Seelye writes of "Dynamite as a Factor in Civilization," taking of the subject the reassuring view that dynamitism being merely a symptom of present discontent, is necessarily a trancient social phenomenon, which will quickly disappear as the institutions of government are brought more into harmony with the interests and aspirations of the masses of the people. In "The Last Days of the Rebellion" Lieutenant-General P. H. Sheridan recounts the operations of the cavalry divisions under his command during the week preceding the surrender of Lee, and offers a highly important contribution to the history of the late war. William S. Holman makes a striking exhibit of "The Increase of Public Expenditures," and insist upon the necessity for increasing vigilanee on the part of the people, lest the burdens of governmental administration become intolerable. Other articles are "Democracy and Moral Progress," "Needed Reforms in Prison Management," "Science and the Imagination," "Sanitary Drainage," "Cruelty to Children." A Symposium on "Church Attendance" the question whether the churches are growing to be less of a power for good now than in former times, closes the number.

Later issues of the Elzevir Library, John A. Alden, New York, publisher, are three numbers of the Ancient Classics series: "Plato," "Aristotle," and "Horace," and a celebrated poem, Schiller's "Song of the Bell." These choice works are sold for a trifling sum. Of the first three it may be said that they are probably the very best as well as the cheapest literature that the ordinary reader can find, which will give in a brief study a fair knowledge of the poet and philosophers whose lives and works they review. Few in these days have time for an exhaustive study of the great minds of the centuries preceding the Christian era, but many would be glad to know something of the men and their work. For this great majority these republications are just what is needed.

"The Religions of the Ancient World" is the latest contribution of the eminent English scholar, George Rawlinson, to religious literature. Lectures in the University of Oxford expanded into a series of articles in the Sunday at Home, are again enlarged in this handsome volume, the scope of which is not to discuss the scientific features or analogies of the various religious systems of the ancients, but rather to put in order such a statement of ascertained facts as might be useful to any who would study their history through the most important national characteristic —religion. The work having this scope, naturally omits the Jews whose religious history is a universal study. Prof. Rawlinson has been sharply criticized for this omission by semi-infidel sheets which regard the Jewish system as no different from those of the heathen about them. The religious systems canvassed by this work are those of Egypt, Assyria and Babylonia, Persia, India, Phoenicia, Etruria, Greece and Rome. The examination into the nature of the religions of these countries, their contrasts and likencsses, the names and characteristics of their deities is continued to some length, but leaves to the reader an unsatisfied desire to pursue an investigation into the philosophy of these systems.

The author anticipated such a desire and closes with a subsidiary chapter in which he gives several conclusions without detailing the steps by which they are reached. These conclusions may be summed up as follows: That it is impossible to trace the various religions to any one fundamental conception, that the Hebrew religion could have originated from none of them; that the sacred writings of the Hebrews could not possibly have been derived from the sacred writings of these nations; that this review gives no countenance to the theory of Comte; and that the facts point to a primitive religion, of which monotheism and expiatory sacrifice were parts gradually corrupted and lost, except among the Hebrews. —A letter from Mr. Joseph Bowes who is in charge of the N. C. A. Washington building writes to the General Secretary that the meetings are continued without interruption in the pleasantly and comfortably furnished rooms fitted up for that purpose. Rev. W. O. Tobey of Chambersburg is expected to speak there for several Sabbaths in the near future.

—Resolutions denunciatory of the Masonic and other secret orders were passed by the General Synod of the Reformed church, sitting at Albany, New York, on Tuesday of last week. The Synod meets next year at Grand Rapids, Mich,

THE CHURCHES.

—Bro. E. D. Bailey, the N. C. A. New England agent revisited his old friends of the Tonica church on Lord's day. Bro. C. W. Hiatt has agreed to spend his summer vacation with them.

—It was from mistaken information that it was noticed lately that Rev. A. Ethridge was engaged by the Streator church. We understand that he remains at DesMoines, Iowa, and has engaged in business.

—The Educational and Missionary Boards of the Wesleyan Methodist church, the Publishing Association and Book Committee all hold their annual meeting at Syracuse, New York, in the Wesleyan Publishing House June 27th.,

—Prof. L. N. Stratton of Wheaton Theological Seminary visited Wasioja, Minn., last week to give the anniversary address at the Seminary commencement. He then expected to take an extended tour through Dakota returning home to Wheaton in time for commencement and the N. C. A. annual meeting.

—On the evening of the 9th inst., as a tabernacle meeting was closing at Reno, Ill., a mob attacked the people and attempted to destroy the tent. Clubs were used and one man was severely injured. Warrants were issued for the arrest of eight of the rioters.

—Some weeks ago it was stated in these columns that Rev. Mr. Watkins, missionary in Guadalajara, Mexico, whose labors had been very successful, was employed by the American Board. Dea. O. M. Brown of the Faith Missionary, Oberlin, writes to correct. He says that Mr. Watkins has not been connected with the Board for some time but is an independent laborer.

—The portion of the Dunker church, known as "Progressives," and among whom Bro. H. R. Holsinger is an acknowledged leader, finding that the persons in power in the old body would make no concessions, held a meeting in Dayton, Ohio, a few days ago to consult on what should be done, and to more perfectly consolidate their movement. Some 2000 persons were present. A correspondent asking in the Progreseive Christian whether it were true that the new body received and held in fellowship those who belong to secret societies. The editor replies: "Our Progressive brethren are just as much op posed to secret oathbound societies as conservatives. Our creed forbids swearing, hence we cannot be sworn into any secret societies, and must not be secreted into any sworn socicties. We therefore deny the charge that lodge members are so received."

—The First Congregational church of Oakland has decided to pay the superintendent of its Sunday school a good salary, and have him devote his entire time to work among the children. He is not to be a missionary exactly, but his duties are to look after the welfare of the attendants, see that they are punctual and regular at the school, visit those that are sick, and arrange plans for making Bible study more interesting and profitable, relieving the pastor from much work and anxicty.

—Eighteen years ago the Turkish government arrested and imprisoned a number of Moslems charged with reading the Christian Scriptures and with attending Christian chapels. The activity of the police at that time struck terror into the hearts of these inquirers and seemed to close the Moslem field against all Christian teaching. Since that time over 80,000 copies of the Bible, or parts of the Bible, in the Turkish language, and printed in the character used by Moslems only, have been sold in the Turkish Empire.

—A remarkable scene is described in the Missionary Herald for April in connection with the great religious awakening in the church at Adana, Central Turkey. At a crowded sunrisc meeting, January 22, the influence of the Holy Spirit was felt with such power that the young native preacher was compelled, by the loud weeping of the people, to stop his sermon. The service lasted three hours and was followed by one even longer in the evening. The house of worship is wholly inadequate to hold the large congregations; 1,200 were present, by actual count, at one time, and the number of inquirers now exceeds a hundred. Among the couverts are prominent Armenians and Greeks who have seldom attended Protestant worship. The movement is one of the most marked among missionary revivals.

—A missonary from the Island of Peru, in the Samoan group, writes that there is not a heathen left. Missionary labors were commenced there only eleven years ago. During this time the whole island has been evangelized, churches, chapels, mission-houses have been built at their own expense, and they are now supporting their own pastors and contributing to the society that sent them pastors and teachers.

—In Turkey, where a few years ago men yoked their wives with oxen, the curriculum in some of the colleges for the education of females compares favorably with similar institutions in America. One of the girls who graduated from Harpoot Seminary is at present engaged in making a concordance of the Bible in modern Armenian.

THE CHINESE IN THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—Since the organized and legalized persecution of the Chinese in California, the tide has been turned toward the Hawaiian Islands, where many of them had already established a footing. Large numbers are being employed on the sugar plantations with satisfactory results. They are also entering other departments of trade. They are quiet and thrifty. Some of them have married native women and are living happily. The only question troubling the governmeut is the danger of their overrunning the country and driving out the native population. The question of establishing treaty relations with China is being agitated, so as to stop the immigration of males alone, and encourage families to go there together. Hawaii is a Christian country, and the influx of so large a heathen population is greatly to be deplored, unless they can be educated and Christianized, as advised by the Rev. J. O. Cruzan in an address before the Hawaiian Board of Missions. The Gospel in All Lands, has a very good article, with extracts from persons who have visited the islands, which gives the cheering news that many of these Chinese are Christians, who have brought their religion with them from the Missions in China. Some have Testaments and hymn-books. One of the writers says that at Pahala he found a band of Christian Chinamen numbering thirty-two. There were, besides these, six Christian women, with nine children—nearly all from the Basel Mission in China. One of their number acts as leader, or deacon, and conducts the services. He speaks with pride of the enjoyment experienced in conversing with these people. They have faithfully kept up their Sabbath service, and will organize into a church as soon as Rev. Mr. Forbes visits their part of the islands. At Kohala there is another organization of over 100 men and woman, besides children who are receiving Christian training. At Honolulu there is a strong Chinese church, and on Maui at Paia a union church of Chinese and native Christians. Mr. Cruzan says if these people have the gospel, the native Christians must help to give it to them. The few who have brought the seeds from foreign missionary fields are poor, and cannot do much for the 15,000 of their countrymen who are still heathen. It is wise for the government to control the immigration and provide against the evils which may flow from such a heathen influx, for the Chinese are there, and will stay; they cannot be banished, and thousands more will come. A carefully prepared treaty, with wise legislation to enfore it, will be found indispensable to the maintenanee of authority and order.—Christian Statesman.

NOT ASHAMED OF THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

At the first anniversary of the Grand River Assciation of Michigan, held at Ionia, January 24, and 25, 1845, it was Resolved, That we have no fellowship with the institution of Freemasonry. Odd-fellowship, or any other secret society whatever.

This resolution was repeated at the next anniversary. At the fourth annual meeting we find the following record:

Whereas, Secret societies are evidently at variance with the diffusive and universal benevolence of the Gospel, and are interrupting the peace of many churches; we, therefore, recommend the churches to caution their members to beware of becoming entangled in their snares.

Again at the seventeenth anniversary in 1860:

Resolved, That we recommend the members of our churches to abstain from union or giving countenance to the institution of speculative Freemasonry, as dangerous to our union and peace.

I am conversant with the churches and ministers of the Association and believe no change has taken place in reference to the institution of secret societies.

Yours for daylight work.

THE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

FARM NOTES.

POULTRY AND PLUMS.—A subscriber of the Michigan Farmer gives that paper the following as a sure method of raising good crops of plums: "Inclose a piece of ground adjacent to the hen house, with a high picket fence, and set out plum trees in it. Keep the hens in the inclosure during the curculio's ravages, and a crop of plums will be the reward of the pains and the outlay." The editor says the remedy is a good one, and has been used by plum growers for years. Whether it is as thoroughly efficacious as this correspondent thinks, is open to debate. However, in the vicinity of Detroit, two parties who have tried it for years, declare it eminently satisfactory, as they never have had a curculio since they turned their fowls into their plum orchards.

WHEN TO PLANT GRAPE VINES.—Dr. S. D. Philbrick, of Des Moines, Iowa, writes the Homestead: It is customary to plant the grape early in the spring, but I have recently made a new departure from the old practice, and now plant the vine about the first of June. By this time the vine has made a growth of five or six inches, and new rootlets have been thrown out from the old roots. These new furnish a constant feeder for the vine. If properly set, the vine can be planted any time in the day without wilting, if the following directions are carefully adhered to: Take your vines up from the nursery and place them in a bucket of thin mud; be careful and not break the vine; have your ground well prepared; in planting, be sure and have the roots evenly distributed; fill the pot one-third full, then pour in a sufficient quantity of water to wet the earth well; then fill the pot and press the earth firmly. If these directions are strictly adhered to, 90 per cent. of the vines will grow, and in one week's time they will look vigorous, and will not be retarded in their growth. Having become so thoroughly convinced that this is the best method of planting the vine, I shall still continue to plant as set forth in this article. In conclusion, I would say be careful and plant no vines except strong and vigorous.

LAYERING THE GRAPE VINE.—Some of the hard-wooded varieties of the grape are propagated from cuttings with so much difficulty, that nurserymen resort to layering. Amateurs who wish to propagate only a few vines, will find layering a desirable method even with those that grow readily from cuttings, as it will give them much stronger plants than can be produced in the same time in any other manner. Layering is done with the ripe wood—the canes of last season's growth, and with the new shoots of the current season. The time for operating with the ripe wood has gone by for this season, but green wood layers may be made as soon as the shoots have become sufficiently strong to be handled without breaking. The shoots at first are exceedingly tender and readily snap off at the "joints." About midsummer, when they have become more woody, bend down a shoot in such a manner as to allow a portion of it to be laid in a small trench and covered with five or six inches of soil. Remove the leaves from the part to be buried, and tie the above-ground end to a stake. To keep the soil over the buried portion moist, cover it with a mulch of some kind. A flat stone laid upon the surface at this point serves to prevent evaporation and at the same time helps hold the shoot in place. Most varieties treated in this manner will be abundantly supplied with roots by the end of the season of growth, and may then be transplanted to the place they are to occupy.—American Agriculturist for June.

KEEP THE SOIL OCCUPIED.—The success of the market-gardener depends, in a great measure, upon keeping the soil constantly occupied. No portion is allowed to be idle, but as soon as one crop is off, another occupies its place. The owner of a family garden will find it to his advantage to follow the example of those who raise vegetables for market. The methods which are profitable for those who raise vegetables for sale, may be followed by those who dispose of their products on the family table. In the Monthly Notes about Work, we point out various crops that may be sown, and we would now enforce the point, that every foot of the soil in the home garden should be occupied and productive. The soil will produce something; if not a useful crop, a crop of weeds, and it is as much labor to keep weeds in subjection as it is to cultivate a growing crop. The old fashioned way of "making garden" in spring and sowing everything at once, and for all, is wasteful. Peas, early potatoes, early cabbages, and others have been removed by this time, and their places should at once be filled by something. Such vegetables as remain in perfection but a few days, of which sweet-corn is a marked example, may be enjoyed for a long time by sowing every week, and the sowing may be done this month with a fair chance of good returns. Beets, beans, cucumbers, kohlrabi, spinach, radishes, and turnips (especially the White French) are among the vegetables which may profitably follow the early crops that have been removed. If there are late cabbage plants in reserve, set them in every cleared place; they will yield a good supply of useful food for the cow if not needed for any other use.—American Agriculturist for July.

THE THUMB AND FINGER.—Nothing is more characteristic of the novice in gardening than reluctance to use the knife. Many seem to fear that they will cause pain, and will no more cut their pet plants than they would amputate the limbs of their pet animals. Those who give proper attention to their plants, whether soft-wooded, or shrubs and trees, can avoid nearly all cutting by anticipating the need of it. The shoots of all hard-wooded shrubs and trees are, at first, in their early growth, as tender as those of a geranium. These shoots of summer will, by autum, have ripened and become as hard as the rest of the tree or shrub. Take a favorite pear tree, for example. If left to itself, there will be found, when the leaves fall, shoots that are not wanted, but which, as they make a thick and crowded head, must be cut out. Had these shoots been entirely removed, or kept short by pinching off their tips in the summer, there would have been no need to use the knife. Not only fruit trees, but flowering shrubs, can be greatly benefited and kept in shape, if the owner works among them will make timely use of the thumb and finger to pinch off the growing points of all shoots that push where branches are not wanted. The same is true of soft-wooded plants. A timely pinching of the shoots will convert a geranium that would be long-branched and "leggy," into a compact specimen, fit to remove to the window in autumn. The chrysanthemum is a capital subject for the novice to try upon, and learn how readily the growth of a plant can be controlled by pinching.—American Agriculturist for July.

PRESERVING PEAS.

The most effectual method we have found for preserving peas from withering or drying up in a drouth, is to mulch them thickly with coarse hay or straw, to a width of at least two feet on each side of the row. Our garden soil is a fine, porous gravel, and unless the season is cool and moist, the pea vines dry up so badly as to produce little fruit. Mulching heavily is consequently a necessity in order to save them. By doing this, we have tained as good crops as when May, June, and July were cool and rather rainy. It is not necessary to bush dwarf peas. Still, when exposed to a strong wind, they will sometimes blow down, and then the further advantage of their being mulched is that the pods are kept clean and dry, and escape being mildewed. It is an excellent thing also to mulch both pole and bush beans, melons, squashes and cucumbers in the same way.—American Agriculturist for June.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyteriau—Associate, Reformed and United.
Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

—The bill relative to the difference between the government and the Catholic church is prefaced by the statement that the government is anxious to serve the interests of the Prussian Catholics by providing for regular services in the vacant parishes, and, therefore, on the Vatican declining to accept the proposals which Prussia had offered, the government deemed it their duty to grant, without awaiting the result of further negotiations with Rome, those concessions which were announced in the government's note to the Vatican on May 5, and which do not impair the authority of the state.

—Stepniak, in his "Underground Russia," thus describes a secret printing office of the Nihilists: I went over all the rooms in which the work was carried on. The mechanism was extremely simple. A few cases, with various kinds of type; a little cylinder, just east; of a kind of gelatinous substance, closely resembling carpenters' glue, and somewhat pleasant to smell; a large, heavy eylinder covered with cloth, which served as the press; some blackened brushes and sponges in a pan; two jars of printing ink. Everything was arranged in such a manner that it could be hidden in a quarter of an hour in a large clothes press standing in a corner. They explained to me the mechanism of the work, and smilingly told me of some little artifices which they employed to divert the suspicion of the dvornik who came every day with water, wood, etc. The system adopted was not that of not allowing him to enter, but precisely the reverse. Under various pretexts, they made him see the whole of the rooms as often as possible, having first removed everything which could excite suspicion. When these pretexts failed, others were invented. Being unable to find a plausible reason for him to enter the inner room, Mme. Kriloff one day went and told him there was a rat there which must be killed. The dvornik went, and certainly found nothing; but the trick was played. He had seen the whole of the rooms, and could bear testimony that there was absolutely nothing suspicious in them. Once a month, they invariably had people in to clean the floors of all the rooms.

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Docsburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

The Broken Seal: or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense prescnted by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly showe that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen. $1.25.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each: per dozen, $2.00.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Initiate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Much uneasiness exists in English political circles over the aggressive policy of France in Tonquin, China, and Madagascar. The Gladstone government is somewhat embarrassed by the radical movement in favor of reform in the London municipal corporations and the land agitation in Scotland which continues to spread.

—It is estimated that more than a million people attended the grand celebration at Moscow in honor of the czar's coronation. There was no disturbance, and czar and czarina were received with great inthusiasm by the populace. The czar has issued a proclamation affording greater freedom of action to religious sects.

—The pilgrimage of "Bonanza" Mackey and his wife to Moscow attracts great attention, and the European press is taken up with descriptions of Mackey's magnificent private car, and Mrs. Mackey's more magnificent court dresses. They fairly threw the czar into the shade.

—Mormon missionaries are meeting with remarkable success among the poor white population of North Carolina, and are making many converts. A leading newspaper of the section advises the citizens to take shot-guns as a counteracting agent, and to chase the proselytizers out of the country.

—Beloit, Wis., was struck by a tornado Monday evening last week, many buildings being demolished, and one man buried by falling walls and killed. The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad bridge was struck and ruined. Elmo, Wis., also received a visit from a funnel, which whirled a freight train from the track, landing it some distance away. One-third of the village of Brush Creek, Fayette county, Iowa, was wrecked Monday afternoon by a cyclone, the loss being placed at $40,000. Great damage was also done by a funnel at Tripoli and Sumner, Iowa, many structures and corncribs being blown to splinters. Several persons were injured, none seriously.

—On the same night many sections of Kansas suffered from a hurricane or tornado, raising dwellings, destroying property, and injuring several persons. Industry and Wakefield, in Clay county, suffered most, the former village being almost wiped out. At Valley Falls the two churches were unroofed and the walls blown down, while on the Kansas Central road, near Clay Center, three cars of a train were blown from the track into a creek, wounding many travelers.

—A great storm in the vicinity of Prescott, Ont., Monday night, resulted in much damage. The waves on the St. Lawrence washed away the railroad track and flooded the depot, and were so high that Ogdensburg could not be seen from the Prescott wharves.

—A tornado Saturday night, June 9th, in the southern part of Williamson county, Ill., blew down several houses and went through the usual tearing-up programme. A number of persons were reported killed, and whole flocks of sheep were carried off by the tunnel.

—At Mystic Bridge, Conn., Wednesday, during the ceremonies of the dedication of the soldiers' monument, a salute was fired in honor of the Governor. Two companies of G. A. R. chanced to be passing at the time, and several of the men were seriously injured by the discharge of coarse powder from the guns. It is feared three will die.

—William Sims, Secretary of the Kansas Board of Agriculture, estimates the yield of wheat in his State this year as 23,601,574 bushels—12,133,252 below last year. Mr. Sims thinks the coming crop throughout the country will show a reduction of 23 per cent. from last year.

—The Harper bill high license is now a law in Illinois. It passed the Senate Friday by a vote of 30 to 29, and the Governor signed it without delay.

—Major Powell, of Washington, Superintendent of the Geological Survey, who was threatened with total blindness, is improving, and it is now expected that his sight will be saved.

—Li Hung Chang informed the French Minister at Shanghai that China did not intend to declare war on France, when the French Minister apprised him that the Chinese soldiers captured in Tonquin would be shot as pillagers.

—The trial of the men at London charged with being dynamite conspirators resulted in Dr. Gallagher, Wilson, Whitehead, and Curtin being convicted and sentenced to penal servitude for life, while Ansburgh and Bernard Gallagher were acquitted.

—Marquis De Rays and seventeen others were placed on trial at Paris Tuesday last for manslaughter, in advertising and selling land on the Island of Port Breton, and causing emigration thereto in unseaworthy ships, thirty persons dying on the passage 250 dying from hunger after reaching land, and five being eaten by the cannibal natives. In all 5,000,000 francs were subscribed to the scheme, of which the Marquis pocketed 2,000,000.

BUSINESS.

FULL OF GRAND IDEAS.

"Masonry and Mormonism are political engines with religious driving wheels. Their conductors are kings; their engineers, priests; their motive power, popular depravity combined with popular conscience, and their practical end is the luxury and power of leaders who form men's interests for eternity that they may tax and govern them in time."

The above is a sample of the vigorous and striking thoughts, the grand ideas of which the pamphlet on the Batavia Convention is full. Get this book by all means. Price, post paid, 25 cents each.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

A fine recommendation of this wonderful book appears in the Lutheran Standard of Columbus, Ohio. Read the notice and send to the N. C. Association for a copy. Price in cloth $1; paper 50 cents.

"The title well characterizes the book. It is a serial that appeared in the Christian Cynosure, and was so warmly appreciated that it has been issued in book form. This is richly deserved. It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read, and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation, and its occasional defects in English grammar and style do not materially detract from its value. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."

POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE.
[From the Wayne County Herald, Wooster, O.]
"This story, published as a serial in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE, was so warmly appreciated that it is now presented to the public in a more attractive form.
The story is intensely intcresting, and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Anti-masons."

THE PHILOSOPHY OF CYCLONES.

Forth steps the spruee philosopher and tells
Of eauses, how they work by nice effeet
Of action and reaetion. Wreteh, will thy Discovery of the eause suspend the effect
Or heal it? COWPER.

A suit in court has been made to turn on the question, "What makes the deluge of cyclones?" Prof. Tice of St. Louis testified that it was electricity. An insurance company refused to pay insurance for cyclone-destruction, on the ground that the cyclone is not lightning against whose destruction the building was insured.

Another savan has discovered that the spread of iron by railroads all over the face of the country, drawing electricity from the clouds, has caused this year's deluge of electricity, opposing currents of which meeting in clouds make the cyclones.

The objections to this theory are many and obvious.

1. The addition to our railways since the thunder-and-lightning time last year, is a mere trifle compared to the whole. Why have not cyclones increased with the iron tracks in years past? Last year was not a "good year for cyclones" at all. Where were they sleeping, and what has, this year, waked them up?

2. Every railroad has its telegraph wires well up toward the low clouds, and often meeting them. These empty the contiguous clouds of their electricity, as the silken kite with a wet linen cord, draws electricity down into Leyden jars in the familiar experiment at colleges.

3. But the grand objection of all is that this theory ignores the providence of God, and his Word, which declares that, "When judgments are in the earth," is the time for "men to learn righteousness." "Grasshoppers," "locusts," drought, wars, pestilence, rain, hail, "and stormy wind fulfilling his word,"—all these are attributed to the displeasure of God for the sins of men; and especially THE sin of all sins, going after false gods and practicing false worships. This fundamental sin cuts men loose from God and goodness, and so includes every other. Hence when Paul went into Mar's Hill among 30,000 false deities and their worships, he began by setting up in their understandings, "GOD WHO MADE THE WORLD." Without the idea of the one only true God, nothing is right and nothing is wrong; for the obvious reason, that men cannot know which God to obey or what religion will prevail, and be able to sustain and vindicate the worshipers.

Polytheism and secret societies, multiplying religious oaths and worships, thus put society on the road to a moral chaos, where

No pledge is sacred and no home is sweet.

They bring about at last an absolute jumble of religious ideas where the very ideas of right and wrong perish and die out. "Right! right!" said the little negro slave, "What's that? I'll go ask massa." Slavery took away God and put an owner in his place. Masonry takes away God by taking up the bridge or "way" that leads to him, which is Christ.

Now if the Bible be true, we need only look to the secret worships, the organized deism, the oaths and blasphemies of the lodge and the sins and errors which they generate to find the procuring cause of cyclones, or any and all other judgments of God. A deluge of fire and storm desolated Chicago. The press said at the first shock, "God has burnt Chicago!" The fire-proof buildings are gone, and the pine shanties all stand. The houses of assignation were the stone fronts! In a few days the Chicago Tribune discovered that "God had nothing whatever to do with it! The fire came by natural causes," and it

"Bid the world take heart and banish fear."

While the West Indies were enriched by the blood and sweat and cultivated by the lash-extorted toil of slaves, all the cyclones seemed to be there. The infidel savans and meteorologists said, they were all children of the equatorial regions; all clearly productions of electricity and natural causes, but an English poet of some philosophic brain and pretensions broached another theory, namely;

"God, foreseeing what vexations
Afric's sons should undergo,
Fixed their tyrant's habitations
Where his whirlwinds answer, No!"

A PACKET SHIP was becalmed on the Grand Bank in 1843. The first mate was a sharp-faced Yankee whom the sailors called "Nosey." A passenger expressed a wish that the Lord would send a breeze to take the ship on her course. "Nosey" laughed outright and exclaimed: "To my sartain knowledge the Lord has nothing to do with the blowin' of winds. I've been in every part of this airth; and to my sartain knowledge them things all goes by nateral causes." "Nosey" was a philosopher.

How many Christians are by profession opposed to secret societies, but are not practically supporting the cause. So many like the boy saying his prayers, by simply nailing them up at the foot of his bed, and on retiring would only point to them saying "O Lord them's my sentiments!" and then jump into bed. So there are many who belong to anti-secret churches, content themselves by pointing to their church standards against secretism, saying "Them's my sentiments," and that is all there is of it. Brethren, let us organize, and work, and subscribe, and pray for the speedy downfall of this great evil.—Correspondence American Freeman.

It is said that Prince Bismarck, when a boy, was rebuked by his father for speaking of the king as "Fritz." "Learn to speak reverently of his majesty," said the old squire of Varzin, "and you will grow accustomed to think of him with veneration." Young Bismarck laid the advice to heart, and to this day the great chancellor always lowers his tone and assumes a grave, worshipful look when he alludes to the kaiser. That was good breeding. How much more ought Christian parents to teach their children to speak reverently the name of God and Christ, and treat as sacred the book which tells of God's love to men in Christ. Here, example is worth many times over the best of precept. Let our children witness in us the spirit of reverence toward God, his Word, and his house, then we shall see less of the irreverent spirit in them.—Sabbath Recorder.

ENGLAND IN EGYPT—HER WASTED OPPORTUNITIES.

BY REV. DR. GEO. B. CHEEVER.

Our attention was arrested a few days since by a paragraph of foreign intelligence presented in the following notice of affairs in Egypt:

PORT SAID.—A riot broke out here to-day between Greeks and Arabs on account of religious ceremonies. Several persons were killed and many wounded, including a number of police. British troops and sailors, with Gatling guns, surrounded the Greek church to protect it. The Greek consul took refuge on board a gunboat. It is said that the European residents were saved from a general massacre by the landing of British sailors.

This has been supplemented more recently by the following telegraphic dispatch from Cairo:

CAIRO, June 13.—Some excitement has been caused here on account of the conversion of a young Mohammedan by American missionaries. Arab fanatics attempted to maltreat the convert, but Sir Edward Malet, the British Consul General, interfered. It is probable he will be sent to Cypress for safety.

And this is the inglorious moral failure of the British conquest. The English bondholders are secured, and General Wolseley moved into the House of Lords; but outrages against Christians are still imminent, and a converted Mohammedan can be protected from persecution only by being moved into Cypress! Religious freedom is not yet even promised, much less insured, under the British flag in Egypt. British goods are protected, and another Suez Canal is proposed; but liberty of conscience to follow Christ is denied, and the Koran rules supreme.

This is the fanaticism of the false prophet, the fons et origo of the present degradation and misery o the whole Oriental world. This outbreak, it is safef to say, would not have taken place had the British government, when the settlement of Egypt was in their power on the basis of religious freedom, announced that freedom and the abolition of slavery as the two fundamental articles of government and law. They had the power, they had the right, but did not exercise it, nor even intimate in their diplomacy the possibility of any such intention. Yet it would have been quite as appropriate and just as the quelling of the present insurrection in the Soudan, now being accomplished through British troops; and certainly as worthy of a great nation as the security of bondholders, or the coronets of successful generals, or the exaction of all the expenses of the war.

The Tribune very justly says: "The war in Egypt cost $17,834,560, nearly eighteen millions of dollars, and it is more than doubtful if the English will get from it any corresponding benefit." True! Simply because they have thrown away an opportunity of illustrating and defending Christianity, such as seldom if ever, was given in like manner to any government. An opportunity and a power of mercy, which, if they had accepted the trust and carried it out to the extent of their means and authority, would have set that government and nation high above the nations of the earth, in the supremacy of Christian principle, as the highest obligation and privilege of government ordained of God. In example, influence, instruction in the truth, it might have been the setting up of a new dominion of righteous law, freedom for body and soul from the cruelty of superstition, the beginning of deliverance for ages and races from slavery and the despotism of priestcraft. It might have been God's own foundation laid for the conversion of a down-trodden populace into a self-governing people, sure to become industrious and rich by free labor and free-thinking, in reliance upon God, and responsible only to him.

It would have been worth seventeen thousand millions to England, to have simply published two edicts, which their Egyptian victories gave them the power and opportunity to have done, even as God's Word and their Constitution under Christianity as the common law gave them the right and authority. First, the ediet for freedom of inquiry and belief in the Son of God as the Saviour of the world; and second, the right of confessing him without penalty or compulsion. The right of choosing one's religious faith by the free reading and hearing of the Christian Scriptures, opposition by torture, imprisonment or deadly violence being forbidden on pain of imprisonment or death.

This one law would have been in itself a provision of benevolence reaching to the heart and life of every Egyptian citizen and household. The bare publication of it would have been as a sun shot into chaos; a fountain of light and rejoicing in every social circle, and soon the making of Christian homes even out of the mud-huts of the oppressed Fellah-in of Egypt. England had a power of right and might given her for this, as absolute as that given of God to Josiah for the regeneration of the Jews.

The proclamation of truth and its principles must always go before successful efforts in their behalf. "Behold, I will send my messenger before thy face, and he shall prepare the way before me. Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make straight in the desert a highway for our God. And the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple; and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together." See Mal. 3: 1 and Isaiah 40: 3–5.

This is God's method and it must be man's, especially the Christian man's. Missionary societies are forerunners of the presence and reign of the King of grace and glory. But suppose they should say, It is not expedient or safe for us to declare God's principles and our policy openly beforehand, lest we should endanger the success of our mission by rousing up jealousy and opposition. Yet God says, "Go through, go through the gates of this opportunity. Prepare ye the way of the Lord. Cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; LIFT UP A STANDARD FOR THE PEOPLE." This is his command to every Christian church and missionary board and to every government—the proclamation of God's perfect law of religious faith and liberty; all men to be protected under it and slavery to be abolished by it, in the name of Christ.

Does any one say that such an edict would have been beyond the ability of Egypt to execute? But the trial of it, the example of its benevolence, the thought-awakening suggestions and inquiries induced by the very announcement of such a law, and the manifested justice and blessedness of such an effort never before made—these things were given to England at any rate, if not the entire responsibility of their fulfilment, in order that wherever British power prevails, there Christian truth and freedom should be secured to every man, woman and child from generation to generation. God, that put the publication of such an edict within her reach, would have taken care of its operation. The dreadful power of Mohammedanism would have been manacled, its ferocious savageness disarmed, under that one vast, righteous and courageous act of legislation for the Son of God.

Does any one say that governments were not established for religious faiths? No! but upon such faiths for the highest good of man; upon truths, published for the foundations of all governments, before the possible beginning of any government on earth. Not for God, but from God for man as a religious creature, with a soul for immortality, not a beast nor a cannibal. From God, for man, against the tyranny of man; for protection of the common freedom of the human conscience in its responsibility to God only. "the powers that be are ordained of God" for that purpose, that all men everywhere "might be free to seek after him," and might be shielded in obedience to him. See Acts 17: 26, 27, and Romans 13: 1 to 5. If any one thing be certain from divine revelation, in regard to the purposes and powers of government, this is, "The minister of God to thee for good; and thou subject for conscience' sake toward God;"—thou to do God's will, government to shield thee in so doing. This, as I understand, is the principle of the American party, as expressed in its platform. That ours is a Christian nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the Author of civil government.

WOMEN OPPOSED TO THE LODGE.

BY MRS. J. S. COLLINS.

Facts are what the people need in regard to the influence of the lodge in creating and fostering drinking habits among its members. Said the wife of a prominent Mason, "I have not had a happy day since my husband joined the lodge." When urged to explain, she said, "My husband learned to drink in the lodge. I often sent my little boy after midnight on the street to try and find his father; and toward morning he would come home as if nothing had happened; having been kept in the lodge until he sobered up." This lady did not hesitate in saying that she believed the lodge covered up other immoral practices; and that "nothing was too bad for them to do."

There is abundant proof that the case mentioned is not an isolated one. Masons wives are beginning to speak out what they have been silently enduring. Some through fear will not dare to do this. Good wives, fully realizing the danger which threatens their children and those whom they have chosen as their companions for life, and their own responsibility in the matter, will speak out. Weak-minded women who are flattered with high-sounding titles and the prospect of being the wives of Most Worshipful Master Masons, will not be expected to have an opinion. Such willingly lose their individuality in that of their husbands. Not thinking or acting for themselves, they are the willing slaves of their husbands' opinions. When women are thoroughly enlightened a new era will dawn, and light will spring up in the midst of this moral darkness. This reform like every other will be brought about by agitation. Men and women must have the courage to speak and write their convictions on this as well as on other subjects. The secular press should be made to open its columns to discussions on secretism and its relation to the great labor questions and temperance, and also to the peace and good order of government.

The mighty lever in this, as in the temperance reform, is plenty of well written articles in the papers, and tracts for general distribution. When the people are informed, and have facts which will set them thinking, the reform against the lodge will go forward with renewed vigor.

TITHES.

BY GEO. H. WILLIAMS.

Many are teaching that Christians ought to give tithes to the service of the Lord as did the Jews under the law. No such teaching is in the New Testament, which teaches (Gal. 3: 24, 25) that the law was our schoolmaster [literally, child-leader] to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster. Then follows the illustration (Gal. 4: 7). "Now I say that the heir as long as he is a child differeth nothing from a servant, though he be Lord of all; but is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the Father. Even so we, when we were children [i. e., were under the law] were in bondage under the elements [margin rudiments] of the world. But when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law to redeem them that were under the law, [the child-leader] that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father, wherefore thou art no more a servant [i. e. under child-leader] but a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ." The church in her childhood—i. e. under the law—was commanded to give tithes to the Lord; as the child of a man of wealth may be given a "stint"—a certain amount of work to do daily. He obeys from love to his father, or from regard to his authority; and not because it will increase the value of the estate to which he is heir, for he has not yet learned anything of this, and feels no interest in it. He finishes his "stint" and then goes to his play. But when he has arrived at full age, and sees the value of the estate, he takes the same interest in it that his father takes. Does he then wish his father to give him a "stint," that he may soon finish it and go to his play? No! He desires to give all his time and all his energies to promote the interests of the estate. The Christian is one into whose heart "God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son." (Gal. 4: 6.) "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." (Rom. 8: 9.) There are "babes in Christ," (1 Cor. 3: 1) and "children," (Eph. 4: 14) in Christ, who have not yet come to understand much of the value of their inheritance as "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ" (Rom. 8: 17). But the Christian "of full age" (Heb. 5: 14), seeing the value of his inheritance will not be stinted, No tithes of money, time or energies are desired by him, nor will he be bound by them. The spirit of Christ in him constrains him to do what he can. Think of him saying, "Lord, let me off with one tenth. I want the finest clothing and furniture and of the latest fashion. I want the things that are with [not in] the world!"

No! These do not tempt him. He despises them, and like Moses (Heb. 11: 26) esteems the reproach of Christ greater treasure than all these. Let Christians hasten to grow to maturity (Heb. 5: 12) that seeing the value of their inheritance they may invest their time, money, energies, (all they are, have or can do) in it. If they are to give these to it, they will need to provide as far as they can, comfortable clothing, shelter and all such things as will best fit them to work for the Lord. But worldly fashions, costly dwellings, jewelry and the like, will not help them to do God's work, nor enlarge their inheritance. The promise to Christ is (Ps. 2: 7, 8) "Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." "Joint heirs with Christ." (Rom. 8: 17.) Every soul in heaven must be a precious treasure to every other soul there. Jehovah—Father, Son and Holy Ghost—the chief treasure. Hasten to invest while you can. The profit is infinite per cent. on an eternal investment.

ERIN AND ENGLAND.

BY ALEXANDER THOMSON.

Dark rolling clouds obscured the sky—and low,
With fitful sobbings sighed the gusty wind,
Like some poor lady, that for love has sinned;
When in the fields of fancy, I beheld
Two figures meet; one drooping was and sad,
A shamrock and a broken harp she had,
And that was all; her dark, disheveled hair,
Fell o'er a bosom by whose every heave,
It seemed that Hope herself was taking leave.

The other that Minerva might have been,
So high her port, stood with her brown hair bound
With gems that in the ocean's depth are found;
Erect she stood, and grand, and resolute;
Her eyes, blue as the billows, spoke command,
A half-drawn broadsword rested in her hand,
Low her rich tones, quite low and sad, but stern,
As on her drooping sister looking down,
She spok with half a sigh and half a frown.

"My sister Erin, in the gloomy past,
When all was blurred with blood, and nations grew,
Like Bengal tigers by the lives they slew—
I will admit by many a desperate deed
I scourged your coasts, made many a deadly wound,
For which Britannia mourns with grief profound.
Rise, Erin, rise; to-day she seeks thy love,
And comes with kindliest balm, each wound to heal,
And give the right hand for the glove of steel.

"But ye forget not, fierce, implacable,
A mad volcano of explosive ire,
A boiling cauldron hissing o'er a fire
Of hottest passion—in thy red right hand,
Oft gleams the assassin's dagger, and the moon,
Pours her mild light o'er wild moor and lagoon
While on the stillness breaks the appalling cry
Telling that murder's dreadful work is done,
And deeds that dread the bright eye of the sun.

"Erin, beware! rouse not a nation's wrath,
Beware! Beware! Lest o'er the channel come,
Britain's red warriors with the martial drum,
With battle flags unrolled, and sword made bare.
To-day she seeks thy love, set thou thy heel
Upon the secret lodge, and turn thy steel
Upon thy bitterest enemies and mine,
Then tune thy wild harp for a peaceful lay,
And wreathe thy shamrock for a brighter day.

PERSECUTION.

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

"Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!" Matt. 18: 7.

"Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." Matt. 5: 11.

According to these words of Christ it is very unfortunate to be a persecutor; but an exalted favor to be persecuted. Truly God's ways are not as our ways or his thoughts as our thoughts. Yet with our inability to see the end from the beginning we often do see that persecution comes to the Christian as a friendly helper in disguise. It often assists more than any other human agency to develop and strengthen whatever is good within him. And how often it drives him from place to place to scatter more extensively truths he wishes to see take root and grow till they become a power in the world.

Paul gloried in persecutions and not without reason. For as he looked backward he could see he was aided by the cruel hand of persecution to promote more successfully the cause of Christ.

The seeds of truth often need the wings of persecution to carry them about. Paul never murmured on account of his treatment, and though driven from several fields of labor before his work appeared to be completed he didn't fly to pieces in a rage or curl up in a heap under the depression of opposition saying, "It is no use," or "I won't preach if I can't be used decently." But with an uncomplaining spirit and heroic courage he kept at his appointed work and was crowned a victor. May grace be given to all Christian workers to imitate his example.

It is a mistake to suppose that those who hearken attentively to our language believe every word we say.

THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

REPORT OF THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY AND GENERAL AGENT.

MR. PRESIDENT AND FELLOW-WORKERS:—For obvious reasons you will pardon the omission of a lengthy introduction and permit me to begin with the business proper of my annual report.

The Board of Directors elected at your annual meeting in June last, met as required by Article 12 of your By-laws, and organized by the election of D. P. Baker, Chairman and W. I. Phillips, Secretary.

There have been no deaths, resignations or removals during the year, and their proceedings appear in the report of their secretary as provided in Article 12 of your By-laws.

FINANCE.

For details of receipts and disbursements I refer you to your Treasurer's books, always accessable to the friends and patrons of our work, and to his report duly certified by your Auditor and printed for your conveuience. The increased activity and facilities for pushing forward the work as indicated in this financial exhibit of the year will doubtless be gratifying to you.

WORK OF YOUR SECRETARY AND GENERAL AGENT.

My duties in counection with important changes and business transactions of the Association have prevented me from doing as much field and lecture work as in some previous years. I have addressed sixty-eight different audiences and attended five conventions during the year, and find everywhere a steady growth of interest and corresponding willingness to recognize our reform and its advocates as worthy of attention.

AGENTS EMPLOYED.

Rev. E. D. Bailey is still in charge of the New England auxiliary of the N. C. A. and is meeting with encouraging success. As he is present you will be glad, I am confident, to hear from him a brief statement of his work.

Rev. H. H. Hinman has been employed by the Association during the entire year, and has made a record of labors and successes of which any Christian reformer might be proud.

Bros. P. S. Feemster, J. F. Browne and Edward Mathews have each given a portion of their time to the lecture work, and while in the service of the Association have been paid from its funds. Iowa, Wisconsin, Indiana, Missouri and California have each received aid from our treasury, and several other States have been assisted in their lecture work and at their conveutions by persons employed by the N. C. A.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTIONS.

J. F. Galloway, Eli Tapley and J. F. Browne in this country and Wm. Hazenburgh and A. D. Zaraphonithes on foreign fields have received aid through your treasury amounting to $175.65.

LITERATURE.

The circulation of reform literature has been largely increased during the year, and $356.47 have beeu donated in tract distribntion. Six new tracts have been added, so that the list now numbers fifty, coutaining one in the Swedish, one in the German and one in the Holland languages.

BEQUESTS AND LARGER DONATIONS.

The late J. R. Wright, of Byron, Ill., bequeathed one thousand ($1,000) dollars to the N. C. A., which has not been paid over to your treasurer. This is in addition to a note previously given for five hundred ($500) dollars. The estate is solvent and the claim supposed to be good, but legal qnestions have been raised which may delay payment for a time. A deed to me in trust for the Association of forty acres of laud in La Grange county, Ind., by T. Hudson, is estimated worth one thousand ($1,000) dollars. Rev. Wm. Leuty donated and paid over in cash seven hundred ($700) dollars. Donations to the Morgan Monument fuud aggregate $2,444.30; cash donations towards the purchase of the Washington property $1,030.03; notes for the same $1,169.50; making a total of $2,199.53.

MORGAN MONUMENT.

Subscription books had been opened, some funds were secured and the contract of erecting a granite monument to Captain William Morgan let to R. F. Carter, previous to your last annual meeting. This contract was satisfactorily executed, and the monument unveiled in presence of a large assembly, Sept. 13th, 1882. It stands a little distance from where the body of Morgan was buried in the old cemetry at Batavia, N. Y., as a perpetual rebuke to the folly, disgrace and crimes of all secret orders, but especially of Freemasonry, the memory of whose bloody deeds it is designed to perpetuate. Its entire cost, including lot and incidental expenses was $2,550.73, of which amount $2,444.30 was paid in volnntary contributions, and the remainder, $106.43 from the treasury of the N. C. A. One feature of this gathering was a lengthy communication from the late Hon. Thurlow Weed written for the occasion, and which has been issued in pamphlet form and nearly 50,000 copies put in circulation among the people. It was extensively copied and commented on by the general press, and advices from different parts of the country show that it has produced more than a merely transient curiosity.

ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The annual anniversary meeting required by By-law No. 4, was held in connection with the unveiling ceremonies with a large attendance from thirteen different States, and the District of Columbia; 257 enrolled their names, sixteen of whom were sceders from one or more secret orders. A full report of the meeting, together with the principal speeches delivered on the occasion, has been published in pamphlet form, which obviates the necessity of my dwelling upon details. The expense of this meeting was $445.14; $312.25 was paid by freewill offerings, and $132.89 from the N. C. A. Treasury.

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

In the issue of your organ dated January 11th, 1883, I stated the facts connected with the purchase of the Christian Cynosure by your Board from its former proprietor, Ezra A. Cook. These were in brief: 1st. The Christian Cynosure indebted to its publisher as shown by his books, $6,142.81; 2d. Mr. Cook declared his unwillingness longer to continue the Association's organ at a loss of $50 per month on an average, or thereabouts, his purpose to reduce the paper in size or make some change by which he should obtain relief; 3d. After hearing Mr. Cook's statements the Board appointed D. P. Baker, E. A. Cook and J. P. Stoddard a committee to investigate and report on the case, with recommendations, at an adjourned meeting; 4th, The committee proceeded according to instruction and submitted their report to the Board, Dec. 2d, 1882; 5th. After considerable discussion the substance of what the committee recommended was adopted by the Board and agreed to by Mr. Cook; 6th. Mr. Cook was to transfer the Cynosure with its mailing list and such other articles as were named, along with the publisher's good will, to the N. C. A. on the 1st day of January, 1883, and to receive, as a full consideration for the same, the nse of one page in the Cynosure for the insertion of his advertisements, for a term of four years and $3,000 in cash, the Association filling his contracts to furnish papers to parties whose subscriptions were paid in advance; 7th. The transfer was made as per coutract, Jauuary 1st, and the paper removed to this bnilding, where it has been issued under the control of your Board since January 11th of the present year. Only a small amount of type and a few office fixtures were bought with the Cynosure as it seemed desirable to make changes in connection with the transfer requiring a new outfit, which was obtained at an aggregate cost of $556.54 and is new and of good quality.

The transfer and changes in your paper have met with general approval among friends so far as I have knowledge, and it is accorded a place and recognized by exchanges among the snbstantial religious journals of our country. Its subscription list was 4,672 June 1st, and there is good reason to hope that this number may be greatly increased when the season favorable for obtaining subscribers arrives.

WASHINGTON ENTERPRISE.

Rev. H. H. Hinman, by request of a few friends visited Washington, D. C., immediately after the Batavia Convention. He began his work by distributing taacts among the people on the streets and holding meetings wherever places could be secured.

Under his able and judicious management a movement was inaugurated which has already attained to unexpected success. At Bro. Hinman's request, and with the approval of your Board, I visited Washington, looked over the field, made the acquaintance of valuable frlends and assisted Bro. Hinman at meetings held in the City Hall. The importance of Washingtou as a strategic point, and the strength of our opponents in their concentrated force there were two things that deeply impressed me. It was also clear to my mind that by no human possibility could our reform obtain a vantage-ground under the guns of the enemy and maintain its position without first possessing itself of a location and building suited to its needs." I stated my convictions to friends before leaving Washington, and soou after my return to Chicago received letters from Hon. S. C. Pomeroy and other friends in Washington urging the favorable consideration of this matter, and mentioning desirable properties for sale. By the advice of your Board and such friends as I could consult, I returned to Washington in December last, and after a careful inspection of a number of properties offered in the market, and having received assurances of substantial aid and the co-operation of friends there, I purchased a lot and building at No. 215, 4½ street, N. W., for $6,875. Hon. S. C. Pomeroy was employed to examine the title, make out the papers and see that everything was in due form. The purchase was made from Stephen C. Rowen, Vice-Admiral U. S. Navy, and when the papers were made he objected to dealing with a corporation, and to obviate this difficulty our attorney had the deed made to me, and I gave my individual note for what remained unpaid on the purchase. There has been paid on the purchase money $2,200, leaving a balance of $4,675, which latter sum is secured by trnst deed on the property running at six per cent. semi-annual interest for three years from January 1st, 1883, with the privilege of paying at any time previous in installments of not less than $1,000 each.

Besides the above paymeuts there has been $15 for insurance, $5.35 water tax, and $600.27 paid on repairs, making a total of $2,820.62. The value of the property as estimated by Mr. Ford, Mr. Pomeroy and real estate men with whom I conferred in Washington in its present improved condition is $10,000. As for myself I look upon this as a providential opening and one for which we ought to be profoundly grateful to the "Giver of every good and every perfect gift."

THE MONEY PAID.

Two thousand ($2,000) dollars were paid from the proceeds of the sale of the Leuty farm and $820.62 from special contributions for that purpose.

HOW SHALL THE REMAINDER BE OBTAINED?

There was in the Treasury, June 1st, $990.83, special contributions and notes amounting to $1,169.50, making a total of $2,199.53, and leaving $5,296.09 to be provided for. This enterprise has so far as I know, met the approval and been received with favor by friends generally throughout the country, and many have signified their willingness to help, and a number have given verbal pledges for definite sums Some I know, and perhaps many, have been delaying to see what action this body would take to vest the title in the N. C. A. and to what particular uses the bnilding should be appropriated, whether as a political headquarters, a publishing house, or for other purposes; and these are questions that demand your careful consideration. Only one of the twenty rooms in the bnilding is at present occupied and that is the one fitted up and seated for a chapel in which services are held on Sabbath afternoon and on Thursday evening of each week. The premises would rent readily for $100 per month, and could be sold without question for a handsome advance on the money invested.

TRUST FUNDS.

You will remember that some years since Rev. Wm. Leuty and wife united in a deed conveying to me in trust, with certain life reservations, a tract of land situated in Noble county, Ind. Mrs. Leuty has since died, and with the approval of Mr. Leuty I sold the land to Timothy Hudson, Esq., for $10,600, and obligated myself to pay Mr. Leuty an annuity of $800 during life. I have acted in this matter with the full knowledge and approval of your Board and been gnided by the counsel of their legal adviser. A full financial statement of all trust funds is in the hands of your Treasnrer, and it is my earnest wish to be relieved from a personal responsibility so soon as it may be done without jeopardizing the claims of parties in interest or departing from the legal conditions imposed by original covenants.

SOUTHERN STATES.

Rev. H. H. Hinman who has labored so successfully in the Southern field, started to revisit the scenes of his former efforts, but, as before stated, he found on his way to Washington a Providential opening that seemed to say "thus far and no farther." His assistant, Rev. P. S. Feemster, could not be well spared from the inviting work in Kansas, and as all the men and means at the disposal of your Board were imperatively required in other fields, little or no systematic lecture work has been undertaken during the year. The field has been liberally supplied with tracts when called for, and on the request of Dr. Roy, books and tracts have been donated to the American Missionary Association, for use in its Southern field, and also to two colleges on the recommendation of Bro. Hinman. The second donation to the Washington fund was received from Alabama, aud many encouraging letters containing words of sympathy and statements of facts indicate that the seed sown is producing fruit already.

SUGGESTIONS.

Before concluding this report I wish to make a few suggestions, which are in my jndgment of importance, and call for careful consideration.

1st. Some definite action should be taken fixing the legal status of the title to the Washington property which now vests in me personally, but which I desire to transfer to the N. C. A. when released from liabilities personsonally incurred in its purchase.

2d. President Blanchard's brief stay in Washington and the great work inaugurated, and his more recent visits to Harrisburg, Philadelphia and Saratoga, have shown that there is a growing interest in our reform and a willingness to recognize its workers by admitting competent representative meu to present our reform in some of the leading pulpits in these commanding centers. In my judgment this body should select and station at Washington a man who is competent to represent our movement at the capital of onr country, and in the large cities of the East and South.

3d. I would further suggest that our next General Convention be held in Washington, and that the time of holding said convention be referred to the Board of Directors, to be determined by them after learning what action is taken by the Central Committee of the American party.

4th. The influence of secret socicties in unsettling and controlling civil governments is forcing itself upon the consideration of the popular mind as never before. To meet the increasing demand for information on this snbject, not furnished by the general press, a number of small monthlies have been started in different States devoted to the advocacy of the American party and its platform. These have each a local and limited circulation, and I would respectfully suggest an expression by this body of your opinion as to the feasibility of an effort to unite these several papers as the basis of a national organ to issue from political headquarters at Washington, under the management of a joint stock publishing company, organized for that purpose, which shall be independent and self-controlling.

5th. The growing sentiment of our country is approaching a point where our friends will demand a political organ for the American party, and unless some provision is made to meet this demand there is danger that the organ of the National Christian Association will be sorely pressed, if not absolutely forced to assume the role of a party organ, and thereby abridge its influence on the consciences of a large class of readers, who oppose the lodge from religious convictions, while adhering to some of the old parties, or who refrain from voting altogether; and it might be well for you to give a definite expression of your wishes on the future of your official organ, the Christian Cynosure. In reference to other featnres of your paper or in regard to its future management I have no suggestions to make at this time, but pray that you may be guided in this important matter and in all your deliberations by that wisdom which is from above.

Sinee we last met in annual counsel more than a seore of our comrades and co-laborers have passed on to make room for others, and some have come to this gathering with trembling footsteps, perhaps to participate to-day for the last time in shaping the plans and directing the onward movement of a great work committed in sacred trnst to our care. It may not be possible to realize all that we desire to see accomplished in this annnal meeting, or perfectly to harmonize on every qnestion of ways and means to a given end, but if we aecept Christ as the end of our law, in connsel and action, we shall each receive the blessing promised to the peaee-maker, and as in the past, so in the future, and even more abundantly we shall see God working aceording to the eonnsels of his own will, honoring those who honor him, and carrying "the counsels of the froward headlong."

Respectfully submitted,

J. P. STODDARD, Cor. Scc'y, N. C. A.

THE MISSION OF THE AMERICAN NATION TO MANKIND.

A BLESSING DIVINELY BESTOWED.

ADDRESS OF HON. S. C. POMEROY IN FARWELL HALL, CHICAGO, JUNE 21, 1883.

The lessons of events, as tanght in hnman history, are of momentous importance. The great orator of the revolutionary period said, "I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience." We may have fearful apprehensions of the future; but the past is certain and fixed. History stereotypes all events, and there they stand, to be seen and read forevermore. The rise and fall of nations have a monnmental history, as plainly marked as the Pyramids of Egypt: and they have come and gone leaving little else than their lessons for mankind.

Different forms of government have not secured perpetnity, and all history develops little else than a series of experiments, to find a government suited to mankind. In all ages and countries, humanity has had similar wants and aspirations, and has overthrown a government or an administration, which was unsuited to its necessities.

It is said and believed that human government is Divincly ordained; but the form of government has not been so clearly revealed. The saying has been taken as a proverb:—

"For forms of government let fools contest,
That which is best administered is best."

Since history began, nations have struggled for a form, where the greatest liberty could be enjoyed compatible with security and safety to life and property. To this end the contests of the ages have been directed. One portion of the people have wanted a strong governmcnt with absolnte power; another wanted a loose one with liberty and license; hence arose wars, contentions, victories and defeats. In this train followed persecutions and banishments. Men and women, "of whom the world was not worthy," fled to mountains, or lived in exile in a foreign land. In the mean time, nothing was really lost, for knowledge has increased, the rights of the people, the form and obligations of the government are more clearly defined. Down to the beginning of the sixteenth century, "darkness brooded over the face of the deep." The ocean was almost trackless; onr world was without scientific form; no one knew whether it was flat or round; learning was confined; books were few, and chained to blocks like criminals condemned for execution, and there was no voice to utter forth the words of Omnipotcnce, when he said, "let there be light," and light was. But the great Reformation about this time advanced personal liberty, rights of conscience, and individual responsibility to a higher plaiu than ever before. Upon this basis, the great doctrine of self-government, had its foundation laid; and the watchword, "A church without a bishop, and a state without a king," inaugurated a new era.

Then began apostles of this doctrine to go cverywhere preaching this word. Bbishops and kings felt their power. The doctrines of self-government and liberty of conscicnce were endorsed and well understood by men who conceived this form of civil government, long before they saw America, and many died without the sight, and, departing, depicted its beauties and glories as only a little bclow tbat land where "they need not the light of the sun or the moon." Others studied these principles of government amidst scenes of persecution and perils of banishment. What a long discipline it took, to teach the conception of such a government! But the world was approaching to its idcal: "Liberty is not a boon of the government; but governments derive their rights from the people." This saying came from the Netherlands to Eugland long before the "Magua Charta rights" were granted. And in the first French Constitution it was said, "Liberty consists in the right to do everything that does not injnre others." The Gauls had a saying, "Liberty is one of the wreaths cf hnmauity; and in all liberty, there must be a large fund of universal humanity." In Greece, too, there were admirable sayings, and an adopted theory of government which if it had been deep-laid in an cducated constituency, might have been a national success. But the doctrine of personal rights, and religious freedom, which spring into being from reformers, emanating from the Protestent Reformation in the period of Martin Luther and John Calvin, gave form, and substance also, to the civil liberty in which we now glory.

AND HERE LAY THE AMERICAN CONTINENT

waiting in repose for the hour. A country vast, though unexplored, stretching from one ocean to another, and from a chain of great Lakes on the north, to the Gulf on the south. Its sea coasts were rocky and forbidding, and its forests dense and discnraging. Its mountains were high and snow-capped, with vallies deeper and richer than the Nile; and betwcen them broad prairies, which had been green in spring-time, and brown in autumn, since the "morning stars sang for joy." Over all this land, there brooded the stillness of the centuries. for there "was not a man to till the grnnd."

This great continent, ordained as a theater to enact the drama of self-government, was then only peopled by wandering tribes, who knew not "the day of their visitation," and they have faded away as if touehed by the hand of Omnipotence! The site of this very city, sitting as the qneen of the Lakes, had been oecupied by Indians and white men long before the pilgrim settler from New England spoke it into life.

All nations, tribes, and people have under a Divine Providence, one opportnnity—some have more. But lost opportnnities are seldom repeated. What can be plead in behalf of a people, who lived and died, and left no enduring monuments of their existence? Who planted no trees; founded no institutions; carved no names in imperishable history; and left no records to tell of their deeds? Their opportunity, was wasted, and gone. Sad, and mournful may be their inexorable destiny, but like the short story of uations of antiquity, "they have been, but they are not." The Indian and the buffalo, the deer and the antelope, prairie grasses and prairie flowers have all had their day, and their opportunity upon this continent has forever past.

A new era dawned, and on the banks of this beantiful lake, stands today in towering magnificence such monuments of civilization as are the glory of the land. The founding of a representative, people's republic, by men oppressed for opinion's sake, and driven from England and Holland and then to America, signalized this new era. It was the advent of the Christ of our civilization! It was another vine out of Egypt! The heathen were driven out to plant it. That other national migration from Egypt longer ago, produced the Christ of all ages. In that movement, the seas divided, Jordan rolled back its waters, the rock became a pool, and the heavens rained them bread, until they drank at the fonntains, and ate of the frnit of the Promised land. The planting of this American vine has proved the fonnding of a nationality, unknown in history, nnprecedented in government, and by achievments has vindicated its right to stand forever among the nations of the earth.

SHALL IT BE A BLESSING TO MANKIND?

To answer this question, and commend the good to be accomplished, and speak of the evils to be avoided, is the entertainment to which I invite you for the brief hour allotted me. Whatever this nation is in itself, will be its effect upon the other nations. Streams do not rise higher than their fountains. What is pure and good at home, will be abroad, and neither men, or nations, can long snstain a character which they do not possess. The counterfeit coin is ultimately detected, and there can be no honorable or successful sailing under false colors. It is only righteousnoss that cxalteth. The sting of a wasp may seem to produce flesh, but it is only the swelling of poison after all. There is a giving, that still iucreaseth. There is a withholding that tendeth to poverty.

GOD AND HIS WORK HONORED.

To perpetuate the blessings which seem secnred in our form of government there should be a recognition of God in human history and hnman government. The religious and Christian culture of the people are essential to the wise and safe administration of public affairs, and a government by and for the people must and will reflect their tone and character. First then to make this government the greatest blessing the people must participate, and reflect it. They must feel that it is their own government. The fathers wisely adopted the theory, that the whole were safer, and better than a part. This idea was an inspiration and their sprang to its support men from out of every nation under the heavens. The God who had "made of one blood all nations," now called them all to come and participate in human government. How narrow and false the dogma that this country was to be governed by or for any one class or nationality. The settlements here (as well as the discovery of America) were delayed and postponed for long weary years and centuries, nntil experiments to cstablish free governments had cvery where failed. And for the first time in human history, the one blood, of which all nations are made, was to commingle into one nationality. Such a pnrpose to nationalize men of all classes became the very genius of the American system. And to-day there are landing on these shores, a multitude whom no mau can number, declaring their purpose to become American citizens. How unlike other nations, Englaud, with 27,000,000 iuhabitants, has only 140,000 residents of foreign birth; Germany, with 45,000,000, only 270,000, while France, with 37,400,000 has only something over 1,000,000. O, such a power to absorb and naturalize a milliou a year, who flock to us from other lands, is little else than the power of omnipotence to the nation! And I am one who says, come and be welcome. Sit with us at this feast. Share equally its blessings and responsibilities. What becomes of the dogma, that to be an Americau, a man must be born here? Being born in a stable it is said does not makc a man a horse! Being born in the sea don't makc a man a fish! The place of birth, is a mere accident, or neccssity.

WHO IS AN AMERICAN?

But to be an American, is for a man to have an American heart in his bosom. Those born here are Americans from necessity. Those landing here from other lands, are Americans from choice, and I honor the man who is an American from choice, as much as I do one who is so from necessity. Mr. President, you and I were born here, because we could not help it, no great virtue in that! Another man at our side, casting his eyes from over the ocean, and seeing this experiment to establish and maintain a free government for man; steps boldly down into the hold of a ship, leaving behind him, home, country and fatherland, and faces toward a new world with all its possibilities, and landing at our seaboard, in the hour of national peril, it may be and has been, he enlists promdly in the national cause. There he stands, in arms amidst the blood and slaughter of the conflict, until the union of the States is made forever indissoluble, and the liberty of the citizen, doubly secured.

Who then is an Amerieau? I repeat, he who becomes one from ehoice as mnch as he who is so from necessity, and none are truly Amerieans, save those who wear the American insignia: A love of liberty, with impartial opportunities, and all in subordination to law. The highest type of Americanism is Liberty under Law.

I eare not where may have been the accident of a man's birth,

"He's a man, for a' that."

He may come to us from the teaming millions of dark fettered Asia, or the plains of long abused Africa. He may have been bleached by the snows of Siberia, or burnt by a vertical suu. God bless him! He is a man. Coming here, he stands erect in his own manhood, and a constituency of the government, in this model of Republics.

Fellow citizens, what kind of a drama are we enacting before God and the nations? Is it so near our eyes that we cannot see it? Or do all live dreamy lives, with our backs to the futnre and our faces in the past, while the accumulated forces of all civilizations, the old and the new, the Asiatic and the European, are here meeting and commingling in one nationality, producing an American civilization, nnlike either and better than either in separate nationalities.

Instead of tryiug to stop, or check this inroad of foreigners, onr duty lies in assimilating them to the body politic, giving them facilities of education under equal laws, where God and the Bible are not exeluded. Then and then only can we realize the promised blessings of this model of governments.

The imperative duty we owe to all foreigners, whether they come from the East or the West, be they European or Chinese, is to give them the protection of equal laws, and open to them the doors of frec churches and free schools. Instead of the fathers, it will soon be the children, and there are no better citizens among us than these children, graduating from our free public schools.

The Bible and the spelling book, the emblems of our civilization, were once in a public manner presented to me on my journeying westward to help organize a new State; and no border warfare kept us back from laying the one upon the altar of a free church, and the other upon a desk of a free school. And there Kansas stands to-day, leading in the forefront of national and moral progress, the brightest commonwealth in the galaxy of States.

In the couduct of public affairs, like the sailing of a great ship, there are dangers to be avoided, and obstacles to be overcome. Some of these would be terrific and appalling, were it not that there is a Divinity in human affairs, and that now, as of old, "He giveth the kingdom to whomsoever he will." Relying upon that guidance, our duty is found in uprooting every known evil, and in promoting every public and private good.

I shall briefly allnde to those evils, that they may be opposed, and offer some reasons why good things should be npheld and streugthened in order that this nation shall become a blessing to itself and to all others.

THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,

under whose auspices I speak, have adopted a platform and suggested evils to be avoided and objects of good to be promotcd, which, it is believed, will help in securing these results. The 1st Is a recognition of the Christian religion and the Christian Scriptures in civil government. God, in human affairs, is the first elcmeut to be incorporated in every constitution, and should be inscribed on the door-posts of every honsehold. A godless nation is a rudderless ship in an unknown sea, having a perilous voyage in a hopeless night. The fonndations of this nation were laid by Almighty God, and cemented with faith and with prayer. Forever let this basis stand!

2nd. There must be universal education, free as the air and the watcr, for the protection ofpublic virtue and the overthrow of national cvils. There should be a legal prohibition, streugthened by popular approval, of all that prodnces intoxication, crime and miscry—from the manufactnre and sale of intoxicating liquors. Nothiug short of, or below this, will be a complete remedy. Thc right to protect a commnuity and individuals by prohibitory legislation, is recognized in every civil government. When a man consents to be a member of human society, he subordinates individual privileges to the common good; and he has a right to do what he pleases only when that is iu harmony with the general welfare. A man has no rights as against the public good. For the public safety, life and property may be lawfully taken. Counterfeiting, slauder, theft, and the sale of poisonous meats and drinks, can and should be prohibited by the strong and stern provisions of penal law. And why? Because they are against the public good and destroy the general welfare. Into this agreement every man enters when he cousents to be a member of society iu civil government. He yields some rights to the public welfare. And the man who would open the flood-gatcs to connterfeiting, slander and theft, or the propagation of infectious diseases, or adnlterated and unhealthy food, is an offender against society, and shonld at once feel the strong arm of the law.

LEGAL PROHIBITION.

The question so much discussed is, does intoxicating liquor come within this category? I think it does. And why? Because it produces a train of evils equal to those produced by the classes named. Counterfeiting, slander and theft produce evils in fact of no such maguitude as intoxication. For that has in its train murder, treason and divorces. It has in it the destruction of character and of families. If law can prohibit the lesser, cannot it do the same with the greater? Commend to me all the crimes and miseries which infest our race. They all lessen, in comparison, with drunkenness. What do you think of law-makers who prohibit the lesser aud license the greater? who pursue with fines aud the dungeon the man who adulterates tea and sugar, or vends oleomargarine for butter? and at the same session throws the protecting arm of a license about the liquor traffic? License to do what? To propagate murder and revenge, to open prisons and shut up school-houses, to pollute churches and break marriage vows, to blast the hopes of the young, and close the doors of immortal life to the aged.

O, is not that an evil to be prohibited? Let this traffic stand, with the brand of infamy upon it, in the same statute with other crimes which destroy the good of society and and blacken the heavens! I have seen and felt enough of it, both in high places and in low places, in the mansions of the rich and in the cabins of the poor. Chain it up in the law like a wild beast in the menagerie, and there shall be "peace on earth and good will among men."

I have great sympathy for the man who has yielded to his appetite until he has lost the power of self-control. I would gladly take him by the hand and lift him up. But the crimes of the man who drinks sink into insignificance and even whiten into innocence when compared to him who makes and vends it for the destruction of others. The one is led by an appetite he cannot easily control; the other enters upon a regular business of creating and pouring in upon mankind a desolating stream of liquid poison to blast the rising glories of our country aud desolate the land. License, or no license, it is all the same. How can this man live where the air is pure, and bright skies vault themselves by day, and the moon softens them by night? How can he dwell where God is worshiped in temples or heard in the thunder? Such a man should, by a prohibitory law, after a fair trial, find a dwelling place where neither man is honored, God worshiped, or woman loved.

Try all expedients, high license or low license, or none at all, you will finally come to the one sovereign remedy —Prohibition. Voluntary societies, and the "Woman's Christiau Temperance Union," are all doing a grand preparatory work, and they are entitled to a strong support; but when the top-stone of their edifice is laid it will be inscribed, in legible and indelible characters—Legal Prohibition!. To that completion it will come at last, and God speed the day!

THE SECRET LODGE.

All these associations are open and free, so the testimony they bear, and members they reclaim, are observed of all. Other voluntary associations are secret and have a paraphernalia which has no meaning to me; and the good they do is as a light under a bushel, and not up to that Divine standard to "let your light shine."

All errors of greater or less importance are comparatively innocent when they are open and public, and meet the full gaze of public scrutiny. But those hiddeu societies are liable to great abuses, as they are shut away from public observation, and in the hands of unscrupulous men may plot the destruction of both life and character. In some countries they dictate the policy of the civil government; in others they plot against the life of the ruling monarch, and one imperial highness has trembled lately on his march to be crowned! There may be a broad distinction between the good and the bad in secret societies, but as they all alike have oath-bound obligations to complete oblivion of all they do or say, I have no means of judging the good from the bad. So I turn away from them all to the "great Teacher" who said, "In secret have I said nothing."

No hiding of goodness is commended, because such acts are an inspiration to virtue. It is only necessary to have darkness to cover evil deeds, because they hate the light—neither come to the light lest they be reproved. I oppose all such systems of power or of benevolence as liable to abuse, and dangerous to the rights of others; and under our system of free government are inexcusable. We can combat an open enemy or an open error, but to be stabbed in the dark, and set upon in secret is a lawless cowardice, which to be stated is to be despised by all honorable men. Commend me to an open enemy, a foe in the field, and I will have some respect at least for his manhood and his courage. But there is a higher code, and sublimer teachings than in personal encounters, and besides, the laws are the best defenders, for when faithfully administered, they are a terror to evil doers and a praise to them who do well.

I listen to no special pleadings as to the humane and benevolent character of these lodges; that is only as a "drop in the bucket." I have the testimony of too many widows and orphans, not to know that such a reliance has proved to be a delusiou and a snare. From all of which, as our Episcopal brethren say, "Good Lord deliver us!"

CIVIL RIGHTS.

I pass now to another plank of great significance in this platform. This is the equality of civil rights as secured by the amendments to the United States Constitution. These were the great achievements of our late war, and the crowning act of that four years' struggle.

"For peace hath her victories, no less renowned than war."

I am the last one, though, who would belittle or underate the victories in the field. But their decisions, for all time and for all nations, were embodied in three amendments to the Constitution—the thirteenth, the fourteenth and fifteenth. The first of these abolished human slavery everywhere under the authority of the old flag, on the land and on the sea. The conflict of the ages thus ended forever. The second citizenized all born or naturalized in the United States, and secured them equal rights, and abridged the power of States to deprive them of this privilege. It also secured the validity of the public debt, pledged pensions to soldiers, and prohibited States from paying for their rebellion or for slavery. And the last made inviolate the ballot so that it shall not be abridged by the United States or any State "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

These amendments, while they enlarged personal rights and secured them, restricted the power of State governments and dispelled the dogma of State sovereignty. That doctrine of State rights had been a bone of contention from the first. While the States had rights they had no sovereignty. What is sovereignty? It is the supreme power. How many supreme powers can there be in one government? Thirty-eight States would make thirty-eight sovereignties. Absurdity! Under the old Constitution no State could perform an act of supreme power, because they yielded that in forming the American Union. An act of sovereignty is to declare war, conclude peace, coin money and fix the value thereof, make and enforce treaties with other powers. No State could ever do this; and they had no sovereignty. But they maintained a doctrine of State rights which was only a little below it. And a "stumbling stone and rock of offeuse" it became to all the promoters of secession and rebellion. I remember in 1860–61 Senators and members of the House of Representatives went out thundering from their seats in Congress, under the plea, "I must follow the fortunes of my State."

General Lee said in my hearing, when he consented to take command of the Virginia forces, "I hear the voice of Virgiuia, the mother that bore me, to whom I owe my first and chief allegiauce." And so he fell!

The doctrine of supreme State allegiance and their rights, as believed by those men, gave the rebellion its standing, and upon it they clamored for recoguition and independence. And their sympathizers, here and in Enrope, believed that pretension. In London at one time the Rebel Cotton Loan Bond brought in open market 100 cents on the dollar, when our Union National Bonds brought only 42 cents in gold on the dollar. There is a great law of compensation in this life. Those sympathizers here and abroad can now hold on to their bonds. They can never be paid. Let them hold on; and as the father bequeaths them to his son, let the instrument say, in no unmeaning tones, This, my son, was my contribution to blot out and destroy the purest nation on the face of the earth. But the restricted State rights Constitution is now the supreme law. This change is planted too deep to be uprooted by any simple act of a transitory Congress. It is deep laid in the fundamental law. There it forever stands.

The national authority is secured uot only, but enlarged. There is now a head center to this government as there should be; and not a thirty-eight-headed monstrosity, as they would have had it. National supremacy, like the god of day in mid-heavens, is seuding out light and warmth to all revolving planets. And about it, let the States, each in its orbit, roll on forever. This is in harmony with nature in her grandest movements. It is the God-ordained system of the universe. In its grandeur, beauty and harmony shall it remain a blessing to all nations, and a blessing to itself, until the shadows of the present are succeeded by the lights of the future, aud blend into the new heavens and the new earth.

Thus the work of the fathers in securing a free governmeut was completed after two hundred and fifty years of conflicting civilizations; the one planted at Plymouth, the other at Jamestown, Va. The magnitude of this triumph is without a parallel in humau history. Not before, in any nation, were all men admitted to equality. But upon our hundred battle fields were fought out equal rights for mankind. All nationalities mingled in this conflict, and under one banner were fought out the liberties of a common manhood. American citizenship became the one blood, and eqnally within the reach of all. This hour, long looked for and prayed for, at length came. Justice ascended the throne. The accumulated prayers and tears of two aud a half centuries were now to be vindicated and answered. As the combat deepened, the sun seemed to stand still—and "a nation was was born in a day." "Ethiopia stretched out her hands unto God," and the great jubilee began. "It was peace on earth and good will to men." This glorious verdict began to be rendered when General Lee surrendered to General Grant; but the cap-stone to this edifice of freedom was laid when the people ratified the amended Constitution.

But, may I ask, what was surrendered at Appomattox? Some who hear me were there. I answer, not simply old battle flags, and old horses, and commissary and quartermaster stores—poor at that! Not by any means. The valuable things surrendered were the issues of the war. What they went to war about? They were in the surrender. Chattel slavery was surrendered. The old dogma of State sovereignty was surrendered. The doctrine that a man held his first and chief allegiance to his State was surrendered. The claims of secession and nullification were surrendered. The provisions of all State constitutions, in conflict with national authority, were surrendered. The Union of the States and the supreme national authority being indissolubly established, the great captain said, "Let us have peace," and peace has since flowed like a river.

Soon followed the "Treaty of Washington," when two great powers, England and the United States, consented to arbitrate all their issues growing out of the war. And it was done. And arbitration has now the highest example of the two great Christian nations. There it stands as an approved example for all nations.

Need I say more? Before God and all the world, we have proved our right to be a nation. Years, long ago, we vindicated our power to resist all foreign encroachments; and lately, we demonstrated a power of self-preservation amidst the throes of dissolntion.

Let this American government then live and be perpetuated down the coming ages; for it has vindicated its right to stand!

THE LESSONS FOR THE FUTURE.

I return now to my original proposition, That the American Republic is a blessing to man, and ordained of God, and that nothing short of Divine Providence could have guided to such results. But this history is chiefly valuable as it projects into the future, and points the way.

The politics of to-day should embody public virtue, the vindication of equality of rights among citizens, and enthroning God in national affairs.

This equality of citizenship I mean in the broadest and fullest sense. I include enfranchised rights, equally to be enjoyed among all citizens. The restrictions which are put upon one class must under like circumstances apply to all. To be an American citizen, either native or adopted, must be a sure guarantee of equal rights, duties, opportunities and obligations. This government rests upon the consent of the governed. Its laws apply and are enforced against, and in favor of every man and woman in the land alike. The restriction as to age and condition, when this personal responsibility shall commence, may be regulated by equal laws. But man or woman offending, go alike, and alone, to the dungeon and to the gallows. There is no logic or reason in confining the ballot—the great weapon of freemen, to the one class more than the other; why not to both alike?

"It executes a freeman's will
As lightning does the will of God."

No party can long live sustaining inequalities among citizens or upon past and dead issues. The passions engendered by these issues should die with them. The "era of peace should be crowned with good will."

The real issue, in all future platforms for a party canvass, will be for eularging or restricting the rights and responsibilities of citizens under equal laws.

THE RESTRICTION OF THE BALLOT.

Such questions as these will be presented. Is universal, unrestricted enfranchisement a prospective good or evil, as it casts its shadows adowu the future? That issue even now cannot be put aside, and the next canvass will be filled with its importance. Shall the basis of enfranchisement be citizenship, comprehensive, unlimited citizenship, and that alone, or shall it by law be restricted to race, color, sex, uationality, education or religion? This is a momentous question for a people who are citizenising one million a year from foreign countries, without deterioration, absorbing them into the body politic.

If the ballot be free to all citizens, with like restrictions only relating to time, place and manner of its exercise, then the proposition is a clear one, to say the least of it. But if restricted, where shall the restriction commence? Shall it be confined to native-born, white male citizens? And why? Not one of us have a lineage or pedigree far back to brag of! In the far off, unwritten past our ancestors were barbarians or pirates. And we all are of foreign descent, some coming earlier, some later. But no particular virtue in that. The first and the last may be alike in love of country and love of home.

This country, for all these three centuries, has been the invited home for the oppressed of all nations. Men under the heel of tyranny laid by foreign despots, longing to burst the links of steel that enchained them, here for three centuries have raised their unfettered hands to heaven in gratitude and love. Shall they be welcomed? Shall they be half citizens, or whole ones? (Indeed there can be now but one class), Shall the ballot be restrieted to education? Some of the States have this provision now, and others have provided a property qualification.

But shall the man who had limited advantages in his youth, or none at all, so he cannot either read or write, be punished for his misfortune, by disfranchisment? Shall his loyalty, patriotism and devotion to country and to home, go for nothing? Will you call upon a disfranchised man to bear arms in the support or vindication of laws he never made, either in person or by proxy? Shall they be counted in the basis of enumeration for Representatives, and have others vote for them, while their own manhood is disallowed? O, no! uo! Let them vote. If you insist upon a property qualification, it is the dollar and not the man that votes. Shall one be held to laws they have no hand in making? Under a government that confesses, that its authority rests upon the consent of the governed, and by the ballot only do we consent? Such inconsistencies will never stand, and, none of these things move me. When you enter upon any course of restrictive suffrage you are at sea, and in violation of the theory of this government. Will you confine it to men alone, and rob the mother who bore you? and thus shut away from the elective franchise, the most intelligent, virtous, patriotic and self-sacrificing portion of any community? By all the ancient memories of Spartan valor and virtue; by all the recollections of the Roman nation; and by the nobility of American motherhood, I plead for her voice and influence in the ballot.

The ballot is an educator for the ignorant, and the protector of the weak. For the defensless it is better than an army with banners. Humanity is of one flesh. Its

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE INVINCIBLES.

The following editorial from the Boston Journal on the Phœnix Park murders is worthy of being put on record in the Cynosure. It shows how bitterly one man regretted being duped by these cowardly associations and may haply be a warning to others to profit by his mournful experience. No doubt Caffrey told the truth when he said he was ignorant of the nature of the mission on which he was sent, yet he manifestly felt at that moment that it was better for him to go anywhere and do anything than prove false to the oaths he had sworn .Such was his dilemma. He did not know what was before him, he knew what was behind, and dreading the one he rushed madly on to the other. Avoiding Scylla he fell into Charybdis. Young man, be wise and do not with your own hands set such a snare for your own life.

D. MCFALL.

Kelly, the thrice-tried Phœnix Park murderer, has atoned for the crime with his life. This is the last of the series of executions by which the brutal murder of Mr. Burke and Lord Cavendish has been expiated. That crime and its punishment are now a part of the past of Irish history, but they will always be a haunting and painful memory. Before the subject quite passes from mind, it is well that the lesson which it teaches should be emphasized. This lesson could hardly be better or more succinctly expressed than in the last words of Caffrey, who preceded Kelly to the scaffold a few days ago. "I hope," said Caffrey, "that my fate will be a warning to young men not to join secret societies." These mournful words had a special bearing upon Caffrey's case. He was sworn into the Invincibles with all the usual mummeries, pledging himself to obey whatever orders were given him under pain of death. He was ignorant of the plans on foot until twenty minutes before the assassinations were accomplished. He knew only that he was ordered to join the other conspirators, and he believed that if he refused he would be killed. He went accordingly, and was one of the group in the Park, but he struck no blow and was filled with horror at the deed. Yet the law demanded his life as the penalty, and he died a victim of misguided patriotism and of the cruel tyranny of a secret political society. Other Irishmen before him have gone the same way, and others, it is to be feared, will follow him. In all Irish agitations the secret society, with its oaths and passwords, its pledges to unquestioning obedience, and its conspiracies against landlords and rulers, has had a large share. Mysterious orders have been issued and have been blindly obeyed; spies and informers have tracked the criminals, but usually, as in this case, the leaders who gave the orders have kept themselves out of harm's way. The Kellys and Caffreys go to the scaffold, but the disguised priests and the Number Ones are safe in hiding. What Archbishop, now Cardinal Cullen, wrote in 1865 of Fenianism is true now of the Invincibles, the dynamite conspirators and all kindred associations. They are words of truth and soberness, and we commend them to all Irishmen:

"As to what is called Fenianism, you are aware that, looking on it as a compound of folly and wickedness, wearing the mask of patriotism in order to make dupes of the unwary, and as the work of a few fanatics or knaves wicked enough to jeopardize others in order to promote their own sordid views, I have repeatedly raised my voice against it since it first became known, at the time of M'Manus's funeral, four years ago; and that I cautioned young men against promising or swearing obedience to strangers with whom they were altogether unacquainted, putting themselves at the mercy of plotting spies and treacherous informers, and risking their lives and liberty, and endangering the lives of others, in attempting to carry out projects hopeless in themselves, which, doing no good to any class, might involve the country in ruin and bloodshed. Would to God that more attention had been paid to such friendly admonitions. If they had been listened to we would not now have to regret that so many young men are suffering the hardships of prison, and that their families are overwhelmed with affliction, while their seducers are far away from danger, laughing at the simplicity of their dupes, and enjoying the wages of iniquity.'

WHY NOT?

OLATHE, Kan.

It is well known in Johnson county, and elsewhere, that the bank of John Harris & Co. was not opened for business on Saturday morning, the 5th., ult. Our usually quiet citizens were excited to a white heat, and fears were entertained for the personal safety of the ex-banker. He is now beyond the reach of violence, in the county jail, awaiting his trial at the approaching term of court. For some cause or other the impression has gone abroad, that Mr. Harris will not be made to suffer the penalties of the law which it is alleged he has broken. We have heard different persons express decided convictions on this subject. However diverse were the reasons on which their opinions were predicated, there was but one conclusion reached, namely, the wrong doer would slip through the meshes of the law, and go unwhipped of justice. From what we learn from different sources it is by no means impossible but that their fears may be realized. A book lying on our table informs us that there is an order of men who have entered into a combination for purposes offensive and defensive, as the case may be. A person entering into this compact is required to take an oath, or rather a series of them, with a death penalty attached. We give an extract from the oath, as follows:

"Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that I will not give the grand hailing sign of distress, except when I am in real distress, or for the benefit of the craft when at work; or should I ever see that sign given, or hear the word accompanying it, and the person who gave it, appearing to be in distress, I will fly to his relief at the risk of my life, should there be greater probability of saving his life, than of losing my own."

John Harris is a member of this order, and perhaps those who say he will not go to the penitentiary even though he is guilty of a State's prison offense, take it for granted that his brethren of the mystic tie, whether they are on the bench or in the jury-box, "will fly to his relief" the moment he gives "the grand hailing sign of distress," and ask, if there is "no help for the widow's son." Perhaps such persons are not reckoning without their host, and they may know whereof they speak. More than one eye is watching this matter closely, and more than three times three raps will sound the alarm at the outer and inner door. Men may swear saying, "I will aid and assist a companion, when engaged in any difficulty, and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, if within my power, whether he be right or wrong." But the day is rapidly passing away when that kind of thing can be done with impunity, for the community at large are rapidly learning why it is that justice is so often put to the blush in the halls which bear her name. B. F. WORRELL.

JESUS CHRIST, THE MINISTRY AND THE MASONIC LODGE.

MARYLAND, N. Y.

In conversation with a lady a short time ago, she asked why I was so opposed to the Masonic lodge. "Because," I said, "it is a religion, but a Christless religion, as the name of Jesus Christ is never used in the Masonic lodge." She said, "You are mistaken; it is used." I told her to ask her father, an aged man of about 90 years, an infidel and an atheist, and also a Mason of about 32 degrees, and very deaf. His daughter said to him, "Father, do they ever use the name of Jesus Christ in the Masonic lodge?" He said, with emphasis and much earnestness, "No, we detest and abhor the very name of the impostor."

Said I, "That proves my statement true, and you now have the testimony from headquarters by one who knows."

A word on Masonic ministers who have been in the Masonic lodge where they dare not use the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. I don't believe that God ever puts his ministers in a place where they ought not to use the only name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved. I therefore conclude that the professed minister in the Masonic lodge is no more the representative of Jesus Christ than the devil was when on the mountain with him. I therefore wish to give to all Masonic ministers a text to preach from the first Sabbath after their last lodge meeting. Turn to 1 Cor. 2: 2, which reads as follows: "For I determined not to know any thing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Please harmonize your treatment of him in the lodge, and your now open profession of him before your church and congregation. Who can have any confidence in a Masonic minister of Jesus Christ. Deny Jesus in one place and owning him in another. Titus 1: 16: "They profess that they know God; but in works [in the lodge] they deny him; being abominable [in their Masonic oaths] and disobedient and unto every good work reprobate." Reprobatus in the Latin means:

1. Not enduring proof or trial, not of standard purity or firmness, disallowed, rejected.
2. Abandoned in sin, lost to virtue or grace.
3. Abandoned to error or in apostacy.

Let all Masonic ministers resolve at once to preach from the text above named, for reprobate silver shall men call them. G. W. HOWE.

HEAR THE WORD OF GOD.

FT. WAYNE, IND.

All secret oath-bound societies, by whatever name called or known, are not from God but from the devil, the father of lies (John 8: 44); for God thy Creator, Jesus thy Saviour, the Holy Spirit thy Comforter, and heaven with all the shining hosts therein, are all against it. Even nature protests against it. Conceal a plant in the dark upper loft of a high building, or in the dark, damp cellar, and see if it will grow and thrive as it would if in the "open, free sunlight." Much less will the sons of men grow spiritually, while concealed in "the darkness," than if they were in the free, open Gospel light of the Son of Righteousness. You may, and can conceal your deeds in secret for time, whatever they may be, but the light of God's truth in eternity will reveal them. "For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret" (Eph. 5: 12).

But listen what God says: "For there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, and hid that shall not be known" Matt. 10: 26; Mark 4: 22; Luke 8: 17; 12: 23). Better go to God now and have your sins "blotted out," forgiven, than to stand before the light of God in the last day, and there have made known to all the world what you have done in secret. Be wise in time. "The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his Lord" (Matt. 10: 24; Luke 6: 40; John 13: 16; 15: 20). Then why not obey God? He says, "I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth" (Isa. 45: 19). Come ye near unto me, hear ye this, I have not spoken in secret from the beginning" (Isa. 48: 16). "Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing" (John 18: 20). If the Lord be your God, why do you not follow his example? Did Christ hide, conceal, cover up, go in secret orders? No, no; he spake openly to all. He had no signs, grips or passwords to recognize by. He went about, not with closed doors, but openly to do good, to all who would come and hear him. He did not creep up several flights of stairs, into the dark upper lofts where several guards had to be passed, and be examined there. He had no closed doors, or initiation fee to pay. No, indeed, his was an open service, free to all, "without money and without price" (Isa. 55: 1). Now of this grace, "Freely ye have received, freely give" (Matt. 10: 8). Yes, give it freely. Do not charge. Be as your Master. He is the way, the truth and the life. He was the light of men (John 1: 4. 9). God commands you to "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" (2 Cor. 6: 14). Now in those secret orders you are unequally yoked, for in them are found the infidel, who says "There is no God" (Psa. 14: 1; 53: 1); the drunkard maker, who deals in liquor, his doom is "Woe to him that giveth his neighbor drink," etc. Hab. 2: 15); the blasphemer (Matt. 12: 31, 32; Mark 3: 29, 30; Luke 12 10); the drinker of intoxicating liquors or drunkard (1 Cor. 6: 10); the professing Christian who is neither hot nor cold (Rev. 3: 15, 16); the stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart (Acts 7: 51); those who reject the counsel of God (Luke 7: 30); the wicked who will not seek after God, nor is he in their thoughts Psa. 10: 4); the unrighteous (1 Cor. 6: 9); the unbeliever (Matt. 16: 16); the unprofitable servant (Matt 25: 30); the swearer or profane (Matt. 5: 33–37; Jam. 5: 12); the murderer; idolatry, variance, unclean in heart, etc (Gal. 5: 19–21). The proud, the boastful, the self righteous, etc., are to be found among the orders, and of all such God's holy word declares they shall not inherit the kingdom of God; but bids them all to "Come out from among them and be ye seperate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you" (2 Cor, 1: 17, 18). If God's grace is sufficient for thee (2 Cor. 12: 9), why then seek for light in darkness, among such a set of wicked and ungodly men? Is God there? "Ye cannot serve God and mammon" (Matt. 6: 24; Luke 16: 13). Now, therefore, if the Lord be God serve him, but if Baal, secret oath-bound societies, with all their abominable and idolatrous worship, and ungodly men, etc., then serve it. But do not try to serve both, for you can not do it. Anything that must be done and kept in secret, covered, concealed, and in the dark, is not of God, for "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all" (1 John 1: 5). Yes, nothing secret or hid in the dark—all open, free to all, and in the light. All evil deeds, committed in the dark, belong, by the tie of natural affinity, to the dark and secret orders. It is also a Christless religion, for they reject the name of Christ Jesus, notwithstanding the word of God declares, "Neither is there is there salvation by any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved (Acts 4: 12). Jesus says, "He that is not with ME scattereth abroad." How will you escape the impending danger of the wrath of God on the disobedient and wicked people, if you neglect this great salvation? "Choose you this day whom you will serve." Are you on the Lord's side. If not, why not? Prepare to meet thy God. JOHN H. NEFF.

THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

AN ENGLISH VIEW OF THEIR CHARACTER.

The leading article in the British Quarterly Review for April is "The True Character of the Pilgrim Fathers," by Samuel Pearson, M. A. It concludes as follows:

Puritanism took one course in the Old World, and quite another in the New. It was expelled from the National church in 1662 in England, and at once betook itself to those vigorous Independent churches which had had time to develop during the Commonwealth. It was thus that independency became a great and growing power in this country. But in the New World it had to fight against the enervating influences of a prosperous semi-Presbyterianism and of a favoring State. The Boston Congregationalism of the seventeenth century was hardly distinguishable from Presbyterianism. But the Pilgrim element has proved an energetic, if not a vitalizing, force to the present day. It is a significant fact that up to 1836 not less than eighty-one of the Evangelical churches of Massachusetts had separated from the societies with which they had been previously connected, and that of these forty-six had been driven from their houses of worship by town or parish votes. The Congregationalists have surrendered a large amount of property in order to maintain their evangelical character, and they have had to discover by slower processes than that of 1662 how incompatible is pure evangelicalism with State patronage and control. They have moved in a large degree on Presbyterian lines; but this policy has not saved them from lapses into Unitarianism, even as it did not save the Puritans of our own country. They have overwhelmed the Pilgrim principles of separatism by their superior numbers; but none the less has that element told upon our ecclesiastical and national life; it has often been an undetected ozone in their moral atmosphere. The forces which build up a great nation like the United States are most complex. We have called attention to only one of these, but it is one of supreme importance. Our contention has been that the Mayflower carried in it no lurking seeds of persecution, and that its passengers possessed, considering the time in which they lived, a clear comprehension of the meaning of religious and political freedom. We have not sought to vindicate their children or their immediate and remote successors. It is sufficient, and from every point of view important, to endeavor to prove that they themselves were the true pioneers of liberty.

COLLEGE ANNIVERSARIES.

WHEATON.

The commencement exercises at Wheaton which closed last Wednesday evening were undonbtedly among the best ever enjoyed in the history of the college. Especially was the last day worthy to be renowned for a literary entertainment of the highest order, and continued throughout the entire day and evening with two brief intermissions, but with no relaxation of interest nor unnatural decrease of attendance.

The fair Sabbath morning on which the anniversary opened was a picture of promise for the week. The Baccalanreate sermon by Pres. C. A. Blanchard was from the text Psalms 84: 11: "For the Lord God is a sun and shield; the Lord will give grace and glory." The address to the graduating class was made by ex-Pres. J. Blanchard. In the evening Rev. James Tompkins, Secretary of the Illinois Home Missionary Society, addressed the Society of Inquiry from the words, "Who knoweth whether thon art come to the kingdom for such a time as this." The opportunities and responsibilities of young Christians in this country for the evangelization of the world was the theme discussed. Miss E. Dryer, a lady well and widely known for her success in Bible work, and who organized and yet manages that work in Chicago, followed with an earnest, pointed and practical talk upon the dnty of consecration to Christian labor and the privilege of beginning it without delay for place or time. A delightful portion of the exercises was the singing of Mr. Charles Herald, leader of the "Moody" chnrch choir of this city. His selections were simple Gospel hymns, but the rare sweetness of his voice and manner brought their truth home to every heart.

On Monday afternoon the graduation exercises of the Preparatory School, in charge of Mr. D. A. Straw, were attended by a large audience and warmly appreciated. Fifteen young ladies and gentlemen formed the class. The literary societies were united in the exhibition in the evening.

The board of Trustees met Tuesday morning. The Board was well sustained in its councils by a good attendance of its members. M. R. Britten, of Vienna, Wis., and E. B. Thompson, of Highmore, Dak., were re-elected to fill the vacancies which the expiration of their terms of office required. Mrs. Samuel Plumb, of Streator, Ill., was elected to fill the vacancy made by the death of her husband, and Mr. John Christie was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the decease of his father, John Christie, Sr.

The financial report of the college, as given by Treasurer H. A. Fischer, showed a better condition of the material resources of the college than for many years. The old boarding hall, which for many years has been private property, and has several times changed hands, since financial stress required its sale on the part of the college, has now, in the better financial condition, been repurchased. It will be removed as soon as practicable to a neighboring lot, and neatly remodeled as a dormitory for young ladies. There having been a lack of rooms for stndents, they will now be better snpplied. Young gentlemen will probably be granted rooms in the west wing of the bnilding. The promises of future prosperity are deemed by the Trustees as abundant. Several thousand dollars of snrplus fnnds for putting everything into good order seems an undoubted prophecy of a successfnl school for ensuing years.

Donations of cash and land amounting to $8,000 during the year were reported. The students in attendance during the year have numbered 216. Mr. J. J. Dunkleberg of the gradnating class was appointed agent for the college. The following memorial was adopted by the Trnstees in respect to its deceased members, Samuel Plnmb and John Christie:

"Two members of our Board, Samuel Plumb and John Christie have been called from earthly labor during the past year. We record our tribute to their memory as friends of Christian education, and as our departed associates in this Board of Trust. Thus friend after friend departs and their departure reminds us of the admonition of the Scriptures, 'Be ye also ready.' They lived to see the institution of which they were guardians prosperous and useful, and died with the hope of a blessed immortality."

The meeting of the Alumni Association on Tuesday afternoon and eveniug was in some respects one of the best. The number present overflowed the tables of the entertainment committee, and the latter hours of the afternoon were spent in most agreeable social enjoyment, followed by snpper in the Ladies' Hall. The public exercises of the evening were in the presence of a fine audience. Mr. W. B. Guild, of Wheaton, presided and made a brief address of welcome to the class of 1883 just taking its place in the Association. Mrs. Carrie S. Kennedy, of San Jose, California, read a beautiful essay on "Pictures, Old and New," in which she described the glowing and marvelons landscape seen from the summit of Mt. Hamilton, where the famous Lick Observatory is now being constructed. Mr. D. A. Coy, of Pierre, Dakota, was expected to give the address, but a telegram came dnring the day telling of necessary absence on acconnt or sickness. Brief addresses were given instead by Revs. E. D. Bailey, of Worcester, Mass., and W. L. Ferris, of Dundee, Ill. Miss Stella Laughlin, of Streator, also read a choice selection from Emerson. At the bnsiness meeting which followed these exercises, measures were taken looking to a successful quarter-centennial gathering in 1885. Rev. E. D. Bailey, of Worcester, Mass., was chosen to make the address next year, and Miss M. C. Bent, of Wheaton, to read the essay.

COMMENCEMENT DAY.

Wednesday morning the mnltitude was welcomed in the cool and tastefully decorated hall of the college.

The exercises opened with an organ solo by Prof. S. W. Martin, and Rev. A. J. Chittenden, pastor of the College church, offered the opening prayer.

Miss Annie M. Bent of Wheaton was the first representative of the class. She gracefully gave the salntations of the class to the President, as the first that had issned nnder his administration, also to the faculty, trustees, alumni, and friends. "Horizons" was the theme of her essay, and the easy application of the natural phenomenon was made to narrow minded politicians, sectarian leaders and scientific theorists, and she charmingly plead for men of wide horizons, broad views, sincere and noble souls.

J. J. Dunkleberg improved upon a popular theme, "Leaders", and exalted the character of supreme courage and profound wisdom which marks a real leader of men. Such men do not dodge and avoid great evils but conquer them. If the lodge is attacked meu cry, "Let us have peace in God's name;" bnt yon cannot have peace in the devil's name.

Miss Fannie S. Dana's essay, "The Outlook," began, without the formality of exordinm, a vigorous discussion of the present agitation in European nations upon questions of self-government and land ownership. Her ideas on land monopoly and the immense armaments of Europe would have pleased a Penn and almost a Parnell, and her outlook upon the political horizon caught too many shadows for the hopeful eye of a young woman.

Mr. J. F. Skeel spoke upon the excellence of high moral character and the necessity of a wise use of passing opportunity. Napoleon's trite saying, "There is a time when the pear is ripe" suggested his topic "Ripe Pears." He applied the sentiment vigoronsly to the Mormon abomination, urging that a constitutional amendment was as much needed as for the obliteration of slavery; and the time to strike was now. The political exigencies of the day call for a new party, American in fact and in principle to grapple with the dangers arising from the lodgery, intemperance, corruption in cabinets and courts.

Miss Nellie E. Ruddock in her essay, "Sails set," retired to the quieter paths of moral topics. Men are like ships voyaging to a haven on the shores of eternity; the preparation of the mind, the formation of character fits the mariner for the voyage of life. The soul of God-like nature will best make the desired haven.

H. J. Orelup concluded the class performances with an oration on "American Poets" followed by the valedictory. Poetry inspired by patriotism and religion must always be of the highest order, and from this fact we mnst look for the finest examples of such literature to America. The farewell words contained a reference to the first valedictory given in Wheaton College, the speaker [Prof. L. N. Stratton] being present on the platform. Only one member of the Faculty, Prof. O. F. Lumry, of that day remains with us, and but one has beeu removed from us by death. The reference to Prof. F. G. Baker was touching and faithful to the excellent character of the departed.

The class of 1880 was nobly represented in the Master's Oration by C. W. Hiatt, of Oberlin Theological Seminary. "Consecrated Might" was the theme of a masterly address most eloquently spoken, a noble gem in the coronet of the day.

The anniversary address was given by Rev. W. T. Meloy, D.D., of the Memorial United Presbyterian church, Chicago, on "The Educators and the Educated." The exercises had already been prolonged, and a large portion of the audience had been in their seats nearly or quite three hours, but the strong, eloqnent and witty address of Dr. Meloy held the undivided attention of every one present.

After annouucements for the remainder of the day's exercises and a brief review of the encouragements of the past year and the hopeful enterprises projected for the next, the degrees were conferred upon the class in usual form. This final and pleasant duty was performed by the ex-President The exercises concluded by a grand rendering of the Hallelnjah chorus from Handel's oratoric of the "Messiah," by the Philharmonic Society.

It was already after three o'clock and nearly time set for the afternoon address of Senator Pomeroy when the great congregation broke up. A timely admonition to make the lnnch time brief supplimented the universal desire to see and hear the hero of many battles for liberty on the plains of Kansas and in the halls of Congress. Again the hall was filled with a sympathetic, expectant audience, to whom Mr. Pomeroy was introduced for his address, "Liberty under Law." The argument, calm, profound, philosophical and statesmanlike, aroused enthusiasm and frequent applause.

The evening hour quickly followed, and again the people, with their enthnsiasm uo whit abated, assembled for the concert of the Musical Conservatory. The music of the entire anniversary, with slight exception, was in charge of Prof. S. W. Martin, and the excellence of his training, shown by the singing of the chorus of the Conservatory from Sabbath morning till Wednesday night, was prised on every haud, and aided in no small degree in making this one of the best Commencements ever known in the history of the institution.

Of more than 3,000 samples of wine analyzed at the Paris Municipal Laboratory dnring the last ten months, only between 300 and 400, or about one-tenth of the whole, were found to be of good quality. The rest were pronounced either passable or bad, without, however, for the most part, containing any poisonous ingredient; but some 300 or 400 revealed on analysis the presence of deleterious and noxions substances, such as sugar of lead, alum and sulphuric acid. One-half of the brandy tested at the laboratory was declared bad, not in the sense of being spurious—that is of course—but of being made from insufficiently rectified spirit produced from some substitute for grapes.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 28, 1883.

"GRIM-VISAGED WAR."

Mr. Peter H. Grisham has favored us with his scrap-book made up during the war of the Rebellion. It reads like a bloody dream; and, though true, seems "stranger than fiction."

Mr. Grisham was born in Washington county, East Tennessee. His father and grandfather were both alive when the war burst upon them, and his great-grandfather lay buried in sight of the house where he was born. They had been soldiers of the Union in the Revolution and in 1812; and their son and great-grandson may be regarded as a specimen of the best East Tennessee people, who stood firm and voted for the Union and flag, till overborne, and taken out by middle and west Tennessee votes. Then they enlisted and fought. When their country was overrun with rebels, and Cherokee Indians were let loose to scalp and murder Union men, young Grisham fled through the mountains and enlisted in the 2nd Kentucky cavalry. Years of war passed before he could get word from his home. He was, as a soldier in the ranks and clerk of his regiment, at the bloody battles of Green River, Shiloh, Rock Island, and Perryville, and received commendations of his officers. But, though in the capacity of a private, he comprehended the cause and cure of the rebellion, and wrote and published letters and appeals, which ring like the stormy song of a Hebrew prophet. This is from his tocsin in the Nashville Union:

"Once more, O my countrymen! do I pray you in behalf of our suffering, bleeding, dying kindred beyond the Cumberland Mountains. Twenty thousand of us, perhaps, have run this mortal gauntlet, and are now among you. We come from 'the Switzerland of America'—the garden spot of the continent—East Tennessee."

"Did not the warning of Washington, Adams, Madison, Monroe and Clay come down to us, that slavery would bring these bloody scenes upon us if it was permitted to go on? Then why do we cherish and nourish this venomous viper in our bosoms, striking its fangs into our very hearts? Let us emancipate forever, and emancipate NOW."

"When the rebels bring Indian savages to murder, scalp, and cruelly mutilate our noble fellow-citizens, why, in the name of freedom, should we hesitate to use every available ageney to exterminate the brood of traitors?"

"Turn the key; let SLAVERY loose; the great strength and pretext of this rebellion."

"President Jackson prophesied, thirty long years ago, that the tory nullifiers would make slavery their pretext for rebellion and civil war—the darkest and bloodiest ever known. Upon the heads of a few hundred thousand proud, selfish, lordly slaveholders of the South, rest all the horrors of this war; and they should be made to foot the bill as long as they have a foot of land or a dollar left."

"The Constitution never did justify these proud people in holding slaves. Its whole tenor is against slavery, and for liberty, for all men of all colors, except as punishment of crime after trial. Wipe it out! now and forever!"

These are but condensed paragraphs, running through long letters in the Nashville Union and Louisville Journal, and they stir the reader like the blast of a bugle on the eve of onset.

In some remarks at Washington, it was said that if slavery was the cause of the war, the lodge was the soul of that cause; that the South never could or would have been dragged into rebellion, if their leaders had not been drilled and sworn to abject, unquestioning obedience in the lodges.

The thought struck Mr. Grisham with great force. "How," said he, "does that appear?" He was answered, "Rhett and Keits, Parker and Inglis, in the first secession convention, said, 'We have been working this thing up for thirty years.'"

Where and how? There were no open meetings in which this "thing" was "worked up," in the towns and cities of the South. It was not "worked up" in churches, halls and court-houses there. It was "worked up" in the lodge-rooms. These were the secret council chambers of treason in perpetual night session. And the blood of a million dead Americans is hid in those lodge-rooms. These lodges, the papers openly stated, raised the money for the raids to make Kansas a slave State; when Kansas was the battle-ground of the Republic and Gen. Pomeroy was the leader on the Free State side.

Mr. Grisham was an Anti-mason before. He is doubly one now. He took out his wallet and paid for chairs to seat the audience-room in our Washington headquarters; and his prayers and efforts are henceforth devoted to the overthrow of that dark power which swears men to secession from all government, human and divine, but its own.

CORRECTION.—It is almost unaccountable how in the first letter in the "Correspondence" department of last week, the name of Harvard College should have been printed Howard several times. Every reader must have marked it as an error. Several verbal mistakes occurred in Generil Phelp's speech which we are pained to note. They did not very seriously mar the address.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Bro. F. W. Capwell, of Wyoming, N. Y., who was elected President of the National Christian Association, after spending the Sabbath at Wheaton returned home on Monday. He has with characteristic energy entered into the preparation of a State meeting in New York during the early autumn.

—Rev. W. W. Ames, of Menomonie, Wis., attended the annual meeting and preached on the Sabbath to the College church, Wheaton. His son who has been attending the College during the past two years, is now telegraph operator at Wheaton railway station.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman started for Ohio on Friday afternoon, expecting to be joined by Mrs. Hinman, and soon with her to go to Washington. He will probably remain to work there or in that part of the country through the fall and winter, while Mrs. H. will soon return to their home in Wheaton.

—Senator Pomeroy after his great speech in Farwell Hall, which appears elsewhere, visited Joliet, and Hinsdale, Ill., and went on to Washington Saturday. He expects to return this way later in the summer on his way to Denver.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard, who made a successful colporteur trip in western Illinois and the adjacent portion of Iowa not long ago, accompanied Bro. Capwell to New York to engage in a similar work in that State preparatory to the State Convention.

—Friend Starry of Clarence, Iowa, has lately experienced the culmination of a series of disasters in the burning of his home on the 11th inst. Two or three years since part of his farm buildings were swept away by a whirlwind, without serious loss, however, except the destruction of the buildings. A year ago last winter while he was lecturing and working the degrees in Missouri, he lost a number of cows and young cattle by poison. The animals were fed, regularly and carefully, nothing but dry feed. They would all be well at night but one or two would be dead in the morning and greatly swollen. None who examined into the matter could think of any reason for the trouble but poison; nor was there any one so hostile, personally, to Bro. Starry as to attempt such a fiendish act. It was well known that the Freemasons had little affection for him, however. The burning of his house has entailed a loss above insurance of about $1,100. The fire caught in a part of the building occupied by the tenant on his farm, and is supposed to be accidental. The tenent saved most of his effects from the building. Bro. Starry hardly anything. It will be a kindness worthily bestowed, if friends who are able can send him a contribution to help make up his loss. He is ready for lecture and degree work at any time, and will be glad to answer applications for such work.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING, JUNE 21, 1883.

The annual business meeting of the National Christian Association met according to regulation at 10:30 A. M. in Carpenter Hall in the N. C. A. building, Chicago, the president, Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, calling to order and occupying the chair. Rev. S. Collins, D.D. of Pittsburgh, president of the National Convention, offered a petition to Almighty God for the presence of his Spirit during our deliberations.

Before opening the business of the meeting the president made a few remarks suited to the occasion. He referred gratefully to his election last year at a time when he was in much physical weakness. He hoped we should not forget the dead who had walked together with us in the past and stood shoulder to shoulder in the conflict, and to whom Christ has reached out his hand and taken them to himself. We have been surely taught by God's providence that the sick do recover in answer to prayer. He referred to this fact, since he did not see the venerable form of Mr. Carpenter present. He hoped that prayer might be made that he might recover and be actively with us again. The removal of the Cynosure, January 1st, has met with universal approbation, and was a wise and important movement. A mutual arrangement had been made by which the former editorial management continued with slight change, though the names of the editors have not appeared. Mr. Stoddard has been in control as General Agent. It was suggested that the title of his office be changed to Corresponding Secretary and General Manager. Reference was also made to the American party and its near relation to the Association which had always adjourned to allow political meetings to be held. The speaker had been long acquainted with Senator Pomeroy's history; had visited his old home in New Hampshire and become acquainted with his neighbors and learned from them all that a man's neighbors can tell about him when he is away from home. The record is all good and when it was known that the loss of letters in the mail had prevented Mr. Pomeroy's acceptance in 1880 from being published it did not take so long to decide what was duty respecting the withdrawal of the speaker as to raise the right hand to heaven. The reasons for prompt action were given, and the hope expressed that there would be hearty unanimity of purpose and effort in politics.

At the close of the president's remarks the minutes of the annual meeting of 1882 were read by the secretary, J. D. Nutting. The roll of members was also called, twenty-three members responding. The following named persons were also regularly recommended for membership: Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, Joseph Bowes, Isaac N. Gibson, and Milton Ford of Washington City; W. T. Meloy, D.D., J. M. Hitchcock, Rev. Joseph Travis, W. W. Wait, of Chicago; M. V. Clute of Aurora; S. P. Poole, Bellevue, Mich.; F. W. Capwell of Dale, N. Y.; S. A. Pratt, Worcester, Mass.; J. F. Porter, Tonica, Ill.; and Mrs. Wm. Morrell, St. Charles, Minn. The Association voted that the above named be included in its membership. The name of Alexander Thomson, Bartlett, Ill., was afterward added.

The report of the Corresponding Secretary and General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, was presented. The report was received. The report of the Treasurer, W. I. Phillips, was also read and received; also the report of the Board of Directors was read by their secretary, Bro. Phillips. The report was accepted.

The following were chosen as a committee to nominate officers for the succeeding year: M. R. Britten, Thos. A. Gault, A. G. Laird, F. W. Capwell, H. H. Hinman.

The following were nominated as committee on the Cynosure: D. P. Baker, Dr. S. Collins and Prof. L. N. Stratton.

On the Washington building and headquarters, after remarks from Senator Pomeroy, the following were chosen as committee: C. A. Blanchard, F. W. Capwell, S. Collins, E. D. Bailey and J. B. Crall.

The views of Mr. Pomeroy being called for he said that the building purchased in Washington was well adapted to the purposes of the Association, beside allowing a considerable part to be rented and so provide an income to carry on the work. Everything had been put in fine repair and was ready for occupancy. As Washington is the political center of the nation it is natural that the political part of our work should be centered there. There is no doubt that we must go into political action. In the early days of Abolitionism we were kept back from politics. Garrison and his friends were very urgent in this matter and very denunciatory toward the Constitution and the government. But some of us insisted that we must vote, that we must carry out our principles. When we nominated the effect was immediate. The Liberty party was successful and then had a glorious translation; or else the Whig and Free Soil parties were translated. The new issues that have arisen must have attention; a new party is needed, and an organization should be made there at the center of political influence. The Cynosure should remain here and go on with its important work among the churches. Our small and scattered political papers must be united and make one strong paper. Now I want President Blanchard to go there to Washington and work with us. He has the ability and standing that fit him for that work, and the rest of us have not got. He can see men and speak in the churches and write here his observations and suggestions.

The Association then adjourned till 2:30 P. M.

AFTERNOON.

The name of Alexander Thomon, of Bartlett, Ill., was added to the roll of members by vote, it being properly proposed.

The report of the committee on the Cynosure was first presented by Dr. S. Collins, and was adopted after amendment as follows:

1. That we approve of the purchase of the Christian Cynosure by the Board of Directors.
2. That we are gratified with the continued ability and management of the paper, and ask for it an increased support.
3. That the business management of the paper be in the hands of the General Agent under the supervision of the Board of Directors and that this body now proceed to elect editors.
4. We recommend that when practicable regular correspondents be seenred in distant cities, especially in Washington, D. C.

The next business of the Association being the election of editors for the Cynosure, that election resulted in the choice of Pres. J. Blanchard for editor, and Henry L. Kellogg for office editor.

The committee on nominations presented their report through M. R. Britten which was voted as follows:

President:—F. W. Capwell, Wyoming, N. Y.
Vice-President:—Rev. Jos. Travis, Chicago.
Recording Secretary:— J. D. Nutting, Oberlin.
Corresponding Secretary and General Agent:— J. P. Stoddard, Chicago.
Treasurer: —W. I. Phillips, Chicago.
Directors:—John Gardner, M. R. Britten, L. N. Stratton, J. M. Wallace, Thos. H. Gault, Joseph Travis, O. F. Lumry, W. T. Meloy, Alexander Thomson, Thos. Hodge, J. B. Blank.

Pres. Blanchard retired from the chair when Mr. Capwell, his successor, was elected and the latter presided through the session.

The report of the committee on the Washington purchase and enterprise was read by Rev. E. D. Bailey and was adopted item by item after some discussion:

1 We recommend that the General Agent and Secretary make a deed of the Washington property purchased for the use of the N. C. A. to said corporation, and that said corporation assume the General Agent's obligation to Vice-Admiral Rowan for said property.

2. We recommend that there be established in the city of Washington a paper, to be published by a joint stock company, and that so soon as may be, the various State American party papers be consolidated in the same.

3. Respecting the care of the building in Washington, we recommend: (a) That such rooms as are required be set apart to the uses of the Association by the General Agent; (b) That such other rooms as may be in the building be rented at current rates; (c) That the Board of Directors be instructed to employ some competent person or persons to take charge of the building continuously, and that at such times as they may see fit they send President J. Blanchard to Washington to act for the cause, paying him therefor at the rate of one thousand dollars per year and expenses unless he be paid for his services as editor, in which case he shall receive his expenses only.

The Secretary presented several letters from absent friends which were turned over to the Cynosure editors.

The Association then adjourned.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE NEW ENGLAND BOARD of the National Christian Association has its headquarters at No. 8 Portland St., Worcester, Mass. A full supply of books and tracts constantly on hand. Orders promptly filled. Correspondence solicited.

E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.

REPORT OF THE NEW ENGLAND SECRETARY.

To the National Christian Association,

DEAR BRETHREN:—It is proper for me to render a report of the work done by your agents in New England in order to place before you a proper survey of the field of your operations during the past year. I have no words of discouragement to offer. If we have not witnessed all the progress we could have wished we have at least had enough of success to inspire faith and stimulate zeal.

Our labors have been expended in the distribution of books, tracts and papers, in preaching and lecturing, in correspondence and house-to-house visitation. The well-known conservatism of New England people has rendered rapid progress impossible, but by making due allowance for this we have escaped discouragement and found abundant reason to persevere in the work. Last year a partial report of work done prior to June 1st was made to you, but we have found it necessary to include some of the items of that report with this, and accordingly, to avoid confusion, the statements herewith given have all been made to cover the time since January, 1882.

STATISTICAL STATEMENT.

Number of lectures and sermons by myself, 200. Number of States in which work was done, six. Amount of money collected for the New England Board, $1425.21. Amount of book sales $821.45. Amount collected for reform papers (in part estimated) $224.70. Collected for special work in Worcester $20. Besides the foregoing about $300 has been used in conventions, in local lectures, etc., which does not pass into the treasury of the Board. I have, during the time, traveled over the greater part of the New England States, visiting friends of the reform, lecturing and otherwise endeavoring to arouse to activity the latent forces.

Mr. A. F. Spaulding has now been in the employ of the Board sixteen months, as a colporter, though he has also made arrangements, in some instances, for lectures to be given by myself.

THE COLPORTER'S REPORT.

The statistics of his work are as follows:

Number of villages canvassed, averaging two days each, 170. Cities canvassed, averaging one week in each, seven. Number of miles traveled by rail and stage 5,000. Tracts have been distributed in 150 churches, 100 high schools and twenty-five academies, theological seminaries and colleges. Number of lectures arranged, nine. Number of conferences attended, twenty-five. Amount collected $440.01. Mr. Spaulding has worked conscientiously, patiently and with great persistence, in the face of great difficulties. The books and papers were very little known in New England, hence he has been doing pioneer work constantly and has therefore not had large sales, but his work seems necessary and important, and we have felt that it was an expenditure of means which the circumstances fully justify.

MR. O. C. BAILEY

has worked two months and ten days, under a temporary arrangement with myself. His labors were undertaken at my request to supplement my own inadequate efforts and his success has been beyond my most sanguine expectation. He undertook the work without any stipulated salary and has been able to collect his expenses in the field. He has preached and lectured about twenty-five times. He rendered good service in arranging the Connecticut State convention and the success of the Vermont convention was due in no small degree to his efforts.

OTHER WORKERS.

The work of Mr. J. Tanner last year was reported and also the valuable services for a few months of Mr. George Smith. The latter also worked some for the Board last fall. Elder J. L. Barlow has steadily employed his pen for the reform and also by request attended the Massachusetts and Vermont conventions, besides the convention of his own State. Although not employed by the Board his services in these respects are worthy of honorable mention. It is due also to mention that Rev. H. T. Cheever by request attended the New Hampshire convention and rendered good service. If it were proper, honorable mention might also be made of a number of volunteer workers whose unremunerated service is not the less valuable.

THE TREASURER'S REPORT

shows $1,425.21 collected and the same disbursed. All the workers have been promptly paid, the only indebtedness of the Board being to the Secretary.

THE NEW ENGLAND AMERICAN.

With some reluctance I undertook the publication of the New England American, hoping thereby to introduce the reform to the notice of many uninformed persons. The experiment was successful beyond our expectation. About twelve hundred copies have been regularly distributed monthly, and extras also have several times been issued. The receipts during the year have equalled the expenses. No arrangements for continuing this paper have been made and this will constitute a question for future consideration. My services as preacher have been sought by two churches (or a church and a mission) during the year but the remuneration for these services was turned into the treasury of the Board and appears as a part of the receipts.

RESULTS.

It would not be safe or proper to attempt any estimate of the results of these efforts, but it seems evident that encouraging progress has been made. We are not without abundant evidence that the enemies of the cause have felt the power of this movement and are becoming sensitive to every new evidence of vitality in the reform.

In conclusion let me give utterance to the great sense of gratitude to God which we have reason to feel for his great mercy unto us.

Respectfully submitted,
E. D. BAILEY, N. E. Sec'y.
Worcester, Mass., June 1, 1883.

THE theory, not altogether new, that cyclones are the result of electric force, is being discussed with earnestness by several amateur scientists of the West, and some of the opinions presented are certainly sound. One of these abstract solutions of a rather perplexing problem may be found interesting. This idea takes the position that the cloud area forms the positive pole and the earth the negative of the constantly operating current, and that as the response is ineffective the equilibrium is disturbed and the force let loose. A cloud one mile square is supposed to have attraction enough to lift a weight of 40,000,000 pounds, the whole power of attraction being focused to the diameter of a small area of destruction. But the electricity develops the pair of poles, so that the positive the cloud holds is confronted by the exact equivalent of the negative of the earth beneath. The concentration of force causes the matter of earth to become so intensely negative as to be self-repulsive, and is hurled up by a force probably equal to the attraction of the cloud. —Inter Ocean.

ADDRESS OF SENATOR POMEROY.

many voices blend into one chorus. In American citizenship, as in the gospel of Christ, they are "no more twain, but one flesh," one interest prevades all households, and cements all hearts. This element secures love of country and love of home. Bind this interest together in the ballot. It will be as the moving of waters at the pool of Bethesda, and a prelude to the healing of the nation. The advent of woman at the elections will be only another testimony to her good influence upon man in all the relations of life. Shut her away from this sphere of influence and you reflect upon the wisdom of her creation, and publish that there is one place—better than the God-made Eden—where it is good for man to be alone.

AMERICA FOR MANKIND.

I have spoken of the mission and influence of this American nation—and of what will make and continue it a blessing. Need I say more? I might address myself to the opening future, which begins already to be visible, without prophetic ken; for the shadows of coming events are already cast upon us. But I need not prolong. The future comes as fast as we are ready and prepared for it. Every day opens new pathways of light and influence. Distances become a question of time, not of miles; scientific accumulations of all the ages are in store for us.

And is there no purpose in all this? Is there to be no grand consumation of all these instrumentalities, producing some great and desirable results? Why such a preparation for a conflict with ignorance, oppression and tyranny, if no conflict is at hand? Why such struggles for a higher civilization if no higher awaits mankind? Why are we now connecting ourselves with all the rest of the world, in more intimate relations, if we have no mission to mankind? The 400,000,000 in China (one-third of the whole human family) have by treaty become men and brethren in the family of nations. The field of our efforts to absorb and nationalize men is as extensive as mankind, and no bigotry or superstition is so ancient or besotted, but can be overcome and enlightened. The European, the Asiatic and the African are all admitted to citizenship, and are drinking deeper, year by year, into the fountains of liberty, fraternity and union, and will yet, and at no distant day, kindle upon other shores the fire of American liberty regulated by law.

This is the divine commission of this nation to mankind. For this has America triumphed. For this have all nationalities bled in her defence. By this sign—Equality of citizenship—we conquer!

Nothing valuable has ever been lost. There is no annihilation in science, religion, or matter. "The lost arts" are already restored, and no deed ever accomplished by man on the earth, but that I can find a man in Chicago who will take the contract to duplicate it at one half the original cost. Noah was 120 years preparing the ark. It could here be built in 120 days. Reckoned by the old standards of events accomplished we have lived and seen a century. Then let us not sigh over this unprecedeuted activity. Let it all be marshalled for the triumph of truth, and the elevation of man. This God-given government, and country, I believe, is to be perpetuated down the ages for-ever-more. Let it go laden with blessings for mankind. It shall send forth its illuminating rays, like the sun in the heavens. Other nations will revolve about it, in their own orbits; but held to it by the attractions of a generous acknowledgment that it blesses and elevates humanity. This enobles its aspirations and allies it to God.

Then cast away temporiziug expedients and partial remedies. Freed from proscription and favoritism, let us exalt and fraternize our humanity, for which Christ died; and commence the one song of universal brotherhood on earth, as there can be but one in the heavens.

THE HOME.

GOD'S CALL.

BY ELIZABETH T. LARKIN.

"Come out, come out, my people!"
Oh! hear the clarion call;
It ringeth down the ages,
To you, to me, to all,
"Ye are a royal priesthood,
Your ransom is unpriced,
Bought not with gold or silver,
But the precious blood of Christ."

"Ye are the living temples
Of God, the living God;
Oh! follow in the footsteps
Your blessed Master trod;
Shun aught that can defile you,
He'd have you walk in white,
Heirs of his royal glory
And children of the light."

"Come out! I will receive you,
Touch not the unclean thing;
Ye'll be the sons and daughters
Of an Almighty King,"
Oh! cleanse both flesh and spirit,
His blessed promise claim,
He'll perfect what concerns you,
For Faithful is his name.

WESLEY ON DRESS.

"Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel."—1 Peter 3: 3.

What harm can there be in the wearing of gold, or silver, or precious stones; or any other of those beautiful things, with which God has so amply provided us? May we not apply to this what Paul has observed on other occasions, that "every creature of God is good, and nothing to be rejected?"

It is certain, that many who sincerely fear God have cordially embraced this opinion.

And their practice is suitable thereto; they make no scruple of conformity to the world; putting on, as often as occasion offers, either pearls, or gold, or costly apparel.

And indeed they are not well pleased with those who think it their duty to reject them; the using of which they apprehend to be one branch of Christian liberty. Yea, some have gone considerably further; even so far as to make it a point to bring those who had refrained from them for some time, to make use of them again; assuring them that it was mere superstition to think there was harm in them. It is, therefore, certainly worth our while to consider this matter thoroughly; seriously to inquire whether there is any harm in the putting on of gold, or jewelry, or costly apparel?

You know in your hearts, it is with a view to be admired that you thus adorn yourselves; and that you would not be at the pains, were none to see you but God and his holy angels.

Now, the more you indulge in the foolish desire, the more it grows upon you. You have vanity enough by nature; but by thus indulging it, you increase it a hundred fold. Oh, stop! Aim at pleasing God alone, and all these ornaments will drop off.

The wearing costly apparel is directly opposite to benig adorned with good works.

Nothing can be more evident than this; for the more you lay out on your own apparel, the less you have left to clothe the naked, to feed the hungry, to lodge the strangers, to relieve those that are sick and in prison, and to lesson the numberless afflictions to which we are exposed in this vale of tears. If you could be as humble as when you choose plain apparel (which I flatly deny); yet you could not be as beneficent, as plenteous in good works. Every shilling which you save from your own apparel, you may expend in clothing the naked, and relieving the various necessities of the poor, whom "ye have always with you." Therefore, every shilling which you needlessly spend on your apparel, is, in effect stolen from God and the poor! And how many precious opportunities of doing good have you defrauded yourself of! How often have you disabled yourself from doing good, by purchasing what you did not want! For what end did you want these ornaments? To please God? No! —but to please your own fancy, or to gain the admiration and applause of those that were no wiser than yourself. How much good might you have done with that money? And what an irreparable loss have you sustained by not doing it, if it be true that the day is at hand, when "every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor?"

I pray you consider this well. Perhaps you have not seen it in this light before. When you are laying out the money in costly apparel which you could otherwise have spared for the poor, you thereby deprive them of what God, the proprietor of all, had lodged in your hands for their use. If so, what you put upon yourself, you are in effect tearing from the back of the naked; as the costly and delicate food you eat, you are snatching from the mouth of the hungry. For mercy, for pity, for Christ's sake, for the honor of his Gospel, stay your hand! Do not throw this money away. Do not lay out on nothing, yea, worse than nothing, what may clothe your poor, naked, shivering, fellow-creature.

Many years ago, when I was at Oxford, in a cold winter's day, a young maid, (one of those we kept at school) called upon me. I said, "you seem half-starved. Have you nothing to cover you but that thin gown?" She said, "Sir, this is all I have." I put my hand in my pocket, but found I had scarce any money left, having just paid away what I had. It immediately struck me, "Will thy Master say, 'Well done, good and faithful steward? Thou hast adorned thy walls with the money which might have screened this poor creature from the cold.'" O justice! O mercy! Are not these pictures the blood of this poor maid? See thy expensive apparel in the same light; thy gown, hat, head-dress!

Everything about thee which cost more than Christian duty required thee to lay out is the blood of the poor! Oh! be wise for the time to come. Be more merciful. More faithful to God and man. More abundantly clad (like men and women professing godliness) with good works. I conjure you all who have any regard for me, before I go hence, that I have not labored, even in this respect, in vain, for near half a century.

Let me see before I die, a Methodist congregation, full as plain dressed as a Quaker congregation. Only be more consistent with yourselves. Let your dress be cheap as well as plain. Otherwise you do but trifle with God and me, and your own souls. I pray let there be no costly silks, among you, how grave soever they may be. Let not any of you who are rich in this world, endeavor to excuse yourself from this by talking nonsense.

It is stark, staring nonsense to say, "Oh, I can afford this or that!" If you have regard to common sense, let that silly word never come into your mouth. No man living can afford to waste any part of what God has committed to his trust. None can afford to throw away any part of that food and raiment into the sea, which was lodged with him on purpose to feed the hungry and clothe the naked. And it is far worse than simple waste, to spend any part of it in gay or costly apparel.

For this is no less than to turn wholesome food into deadly poison. It is giving so much money to poison both yourself and others, as far as your example spreads, with pride, vanity, anger, lust, love of the world, and a thousand "foolish and hurtful desires," which tend to "pierce them through with many sorrows." O God, arise and maintain thy own cause! Let not men and devils any longer put out our eyes, and lead us blind-fold into the pit of destruction!—Wesley's Sermons.

"THE BEST-DRESSED LADY IN IRELAND."

Most ladies have a very natural ambition to be well-dressed; and most people admire neat, elegant, and tasteful apparel. It is to be regretted, however, that many persons array themselves at great expense, but without good taste and a proper discrimination.

An Irish preacher named Thady Conellan, who greatly assisted Dr. Monck Mason in his labors connected with the revision of the Hibernian Bible Society's Irish Bible, was eminent not only as an orator, a wit, and a humble, unostentatious Christian, but was unmoved by the splendor and gayety which surrounded him, and retained his simplicity amid it all.

A magnificent duchess having one day asked him, "Pray, do you know Lady Lorton?" was quickly answered,—

"Yes, madam, I do, and she is the best-dressed lady in Ireland."

"How very odd! Best-dressed lady in Ireland! What a strange man! Pray, how is she dressed?" But her Grace's surprise was converted to satisfaction when Thady rejoined,

"Yes, madam, Lady Lorton is the best-dressed lady in Ireland, or in England, either, for she is clothed in humility."

Here is a hint for those who are looking for new and seasonable clothing.—The Christian.

A NOBLEMAN'S CONVERSION.

Adolphe Monod, at Lyons, France, one Lord's day, was preaching from the text, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." He spoke of Christ as the true God-man, and announced that the next Lord's day he would show how men could be saved by faith in this God-man. The authorities of the church were opposed to a doctrine so purely evangelical, and informed Monod that if he did not omit the sermon he had announced, they would have him arrested and brought before the Prefect, and dismissed from his office. Monod, notwithstanding, preached his sermon, and the authorities made their complaint. The Prefect demanded the two sermons, and Monod sent them to him.

The Prefect was a Catholic—Count de Gasparin. He came home at evening to his wife, and found the sermons. He never liked sermons, especially evangelical sermons; but he was a man who discharged faithfully the duties of his office. It was necessary that the sermons should be read. He came to his wife with the manuscripts in his hand, complaining that he would have to give up the whole evening to this irksome and protracted labor. She offered, as her husband's worthy helpmate, to read them with him. They began. With every page they grew more interested. They forgot that it was evening and night. that which at first was an official duty became a service of the heart. They finished the first, and eagerly grasped the second. And what was the result? As a magistrate, Gasparin was forced to deprive Monod of his place, because all the authorities demanded it. But he and his wife became evangelical Christians,—living, joyful, and happy believers in Christ. They found that night "the pearl of great price," and it has remained in the family. Their son, Count Agenor de Gasparin, has long been a leader and a pillar among the evangelical believers in France.—Moravian.

A TERRIBLE RETRIBUTION.

The following blasphemous act occurred on a Sunday at a hotel in a village in Northampton county, Pa., in the spring of 1870.

A young man, then about twenty-seven years of age, while more or less under the influence of liquor, then administered to eight companions the holy sacrament with whisky and crackers. Next day, Monday, while the young man was preparing a blast in a slate quarry, a premature discharge blew away both his hands, and destroyed, completely, the sight of both eyes.

This blasphemer is still living, and an inmate of the Northhampton county almshouse, where the writer, a few months ago, interviewed him. It is a noticeable fact that nothing about the face or person is in any way disfigured, only that the instruments used in the blasphemous work are completely removed.

There is a point in every deliberate blasphemer's progress in evil, beyond which the forbearance of God ceases. We do not suppose that the premature discharge and its results were mere coincidents, but are we not justified in asserting that God, working through natural laws, often causes sudden and awful retribution in immediate connection with bold and impious blasphemy, and that we do no wrong in regarding such terrible mutilations as a direct judgment of God in consequence of the great blasphemous act of this young man.—Dr. L. B. Balliet.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE AFRICAN RAIN-MAKER.

In Africa every tribe has a rain-maker. As he is supposed to have the power to bring rain, much of the comfort of the people, and even their lives depend upon him, and he is a great man among them, even greater than the king. Dr. Moffat tells the following story about one of them:

"In a certain part of Southern Africa there had been long droughts for many years, and there had been dreadful suffering. All the rain-makers had done their best to make it rain, but all in vain. At last the people heard of a very distinguished one in the Bahurutsvan Mountains, and they sent ambassadors to beg him to come and live among them. They promised him that, if he would only come, he should be immensely rich. His flocks should cover the hills and plains, and 'he should wash his hands in milk; while all should praise him in song, and mothers and children should call him blessed.'

"The ambassadors were gone a long time, and the people began to think that he had been murdered; but at last one day a great shout was raised, and the whole town was in motion; the rain-maker was coming! He had sent a messenger before him, and ordered all the people to wash their feet; and every one flew to the river to obey his commands. Great and small, old and young, ran as fast as they could. All the world couldn't stop them. Soon the clouds began to gather in the sky, and a crowd went out to welcome the mighty man, who, as they imagined, was now collecting his stores of rain in the heavens.

"Just as he came into the town, the crowd danced and shouted so that the very earth rang. At the same time the lightnings flashed and the thunders roared, and a few heavy drops fell on the dry ground; and the great man proclaimed that the women must make their gardens on the hills, and not in the valleys, this year, because there would be so much rain. The chiefs and nobles hung on his words when he told them how beautiful their corn-fields would wave in the breeze, and their cattle would enjoy the fresh green grass. He told them wonderful stories of the way he had destroyed cities by stretching out his hand, and commanding the clouds to burst upon them; had stopped a large army by bringing down floods of rain so as to make a large river.

"But, in spite of all his boasting, the great man seemed to find the clouds rather hard to manage. They came and went; but there was no rain.

The people began to grow impatient; and the rain-maker knew he must do something; so, because he knew that baboons were very hard to find, he said, that to make rain, he must have a baboon, and that he must be a perfect one—not a hair wanting on his body. After a a long time, and after many scratched bodies and broken toes, a young baboon was brought to the town with great joy. But the wily rain-maker put on a sorrowful face, and exclaimed:

"'My heart is rent in pieces! I am dumb with grief!' And, pointing to the ear of the baboon, which was scratched, and the tail, which had lost some hairs, he asked, 'Did I not tell you I could not make rain if there was one hair wanting?'

"Soon after this the rain-maker discovered that the clouds required strong medicine, and that a lion's heart would do the business. If they would bring him the heart of a lion he would make so much rain that every one must be under shelter as whole towns might be washed away. After a long time they brought the heart with songs and shouting. The rain-maker prepared his medicines, kindled his fires, and stood on the top of a hill, stretched out his hands, and beckoned the clouds to come near, even shaking his spear at them, and threatened them if they disobeyed; but no rain came.

"'What is the matter that the great man doesn't succeed with the clouds?' asked the missionary of a man who was standing near.

"'Ah!' he answered, 'there is some reason why the clouds are so hard-hearted, if the rain-maker could only find it out.'

"After that the people began to suspect that the missionaries were the cause of all the trouble, and they watched them very carefully. At last they thought they had made a grand discovery; the missionaries had brought a bag of salt into town, and that was what was keeping away the rain. An examination was made with great ceremony. The chief and one of his servants went to the storehouse, where the bag stood open, with the white contents in full view.

"'There it is!' exclaimed the chief triumphantly; but when they looked at it more closely they found it was only white chalk, after all. The men couldn't help laughing themselves at their mistake.

"Still the people believed that the missionaries must be to blame in some way. First they thought it was the bell on the little chapel that frightened away the clouds; then it was their prayers.

"'Don't you bow down in your houses and pray, and talk to something bad in the ground?' asked the chief fiercely.

"One day the rain-maker came to the missionary's house, looking troubled and sorrowful. The people were getting dissatisfied with him, especially the women, and he was growing anxious.

"'How are the women in your country?' he asked.

"'They are like she,' answered the missionary, pointing to his wife; 'only some are taller, and some shorter.'

"'That is not what I mean,' said the man. 'I want to know what part they take in public affairs, and how they act when they do. I wish all our women were men; I can get on with the men, but I cannot manage the women. What can I do?'

"'Well, you have promised them rain,' answered the missionary; 'but their land is dry and their gardens are burned up. If I were a woman I would complain.'

"'But what can I do?' asked the man.

"'Be an honest man,' was the answer, 'and confess that you have been deceiving the people.'

"'They will kill me if I do that,' he said.

"'Be an honest man, whatever happens; and, if you get into danger, we will do what we can to save you.'

"At that the rain-maker went sorrowfully away. He kept himself quiet for a fortnight, and then he appeared and proclaimed that at last he had found out the cause of all the trouble.

"'Do you not see,' he asked, 'that, when the clouds come over us, the missionaries look at them?'

"'Yes, yes, yes!' cried all the people.

"'Well,' he added, 'their white faces frighten away the clouds. You need not expect any rain as long as they stay in the country.'

"The missionaries said they would gladly look on the ground all day long if it would do any good, and so that excuse didn't last long. Soon after they found out that the people had determined that the rain-maker should be speared, and one of them went to the Council of Thirty to plead that his life might be spared.

"A well-known old man arose in a great rage, and, quivering his spear, he exclaimed:

"'What has he done? Look at that dreadful drought! at lean cattle, and the dying people, and the cattle he has eaten! I am determined to plunge this spear into the rain-maker's heart. Who is to hinder me?'

"'I shall hinder you if I can,' answered the missionary—'first, by my entreaties; and, if those won't do, I will give you a ransom for his life.'

"'Don't you know that he is your enemy?' asked the chief. 'If he had his way you would have been dead before this.'

"The people had often thought the missionaries were very silly to persist in telling them the same things so often about 'one Jesus;' but to see a man try so hard to save the life of his enemy was something they could not understand.

"His life was spared; but they would not allow him to be their rain-maker any longer, and the chief sent him across the plains to go to his own country."

So ended the doings of the celebrated rain-maker, and so will end all the deception and cruelty of heathen nations when they hear the Gospel and live by its precepts. Will you help send it to them?—Missionary Echoes.

TEMPERANCE.

ARRESTS DURING 1882.—New York City, 71,696; drunk and disorderly, 48,192; females, 12,982.

Philadelphia, 44,829; drunk and disorderly 26,205; females, 9,431.

Boston, 25,897; drunk and disorderly, 13,538; females, 1,823.

San Francisco, 25,599; drunk and disorderly, 19,000; females, 2,310.

Chicago, 31,713; drunk and disorderly, 13,443; females, 4,119.

PEOPLE TALK with bated breath of the dangers of a tornado, and speak of the terrible accidents of this year in various sections, by which over two hundred lives have been lost, and yet the same men stand listless and inactive at the cry of 60,000 men and women who are annually sacrificed by strong drink. It is all well enough to dig cellars in which to hide from the fury of the storm, but who will deride the fathers and mothers who desire protection from the great scourge of intemperance.—Inter Ocean.

DEAD DRUNK.—"Dead drunk', is described by savants of the Paris Biological Society to be a condition in which there is a proportion of one part of alcohol to one hundred and ninety-five parts of blood in the circulation. Should the proportion ever come to be one part of alcohol to one hundred of blood, death would ensue. This might happen, and in fact has happened repeatedly, where a very large quantity of alcholic liquor is swallowed at one time and quickly. In ordinary drinking consciousness is lost, and with it the power to drink more, before the proportion of alcohol in the circulation becomes fatal.

THE HIGH LICENSE CRAZE.

The great battle for prohibition now being waged in so many parts of America and Europe, is one of the most serious and most important that can occupy the attention of men and women. Yet it is amusing, to say the least, to notice the stratagems which are used continually by the whiskyites to meet the different phases of our question and necessities of the conflict. The trick they are now playing upon the people, and too successfully in some cases; is that of assuming in pretence the form of angels of light and mercy in desiring as they declare, to diminish the number of saloons by increasing the license. When a Christian sees the devil recommending anything, that fact is enough to show the thorough Christian that the measure recommended can not possibly be one acceptable to him. When it is borne in mind that the instigators and prime movers in this high license scheme are liquor dealers, that alone should suffice to show temperance men that a measure instigated and urged by liquor dealers can not by any possibility be acceptable to thorough temperance men. It must be a repetition of the devil stealing the livery of heaven, etc. Whilst we can afford to be amused at the tricks and strategems employed by our enemy, it is really provoking to think of how many so-called temperance men are blinded by the artifice and captured by the trick to become servants of the evil one in agreeing to license evil and sin, if a good round sum be paid for it. And how the emissaries of sin and death are working through the soft backed professors of Christianity and temperance to present high license as the great panacea for the afflictions arising from the liquor traffic and the grand palladium to protect the rights and interests of the people. In some places this seems already to have become a kind of craze and the idiotic thing has even reached the Pacific Coast and infected some persons that must be fearfully stupid if they don't know better, or fearfully wicked, acting in this way, if they do.

We protest against this idiotic craze. It is senseless in the greatest degree and is terribly sinful. Do not those good people, church members, ministers and others, know that to license sin is one of the greatest iniquities of which men can be guilty, an iniquity which is devilish and damning, an iniquity which in their sworn allegiance to God and his church, they are called upon, yea, bound to the very extent of their power, to crush out and entirely destroy? and yet, recreant to their ministerial vows and gospel obligations, they are found in communion with the liquor dealers, recommending and urging high license. To license sin is wrong. To compromise with sin is wrong. To aid and abet sin is wrong; and as Christian and temperance people we have nothing to do with sin, except to kick it out wherever we find it. Let not the people be deceived. The high license scheme is only another stratagem of the enemy to throw us off our guard, to thwart us in our purpose and to prevent if possible the success of prohibition.—Rescue.

In Denmark, also, there is an awakening. The number of licensed saloons in Copenhagen has been reduced from 1,350 to 300. Sales to minors and intoxicated persons are strictly forbidden, and when a man is found drunk he is to be taken home in a close carriage at the cost of the dealer who sold him the last glass.

LESSON II.—July 8, 1883.—Passing over Jordan.—Joshua 3:5-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee.—Isa. 43:2.

NOTES.

"And Joshua said unto the people, Sanctify yourselves." The command now given was undoubtedly of the same import with that given by Moses, on the eve of the delivery of the law upon Mount Sinai (Ex. 19: 10-14). They were to wash their persons and their garments, and to abstain from everything that might indispose their minds to a serious and devout attention to the miracle about to be wrought in their behalf. A similar command was generally given on great and solemn occasions (Lev. 20: 7, 8; Num. 11; 18; 1 Sam. 16: 5; Joel 2: 16). The special manifestations of God's presence should be awaited by his people in a posture of deep humiliation, and penitence, and prayer, and by diligent efforts to cleanse themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit.—Bush. To sanctify is to make holy, to set yourselves apart from common to sacred uses. Set yourselves apart to God—yield yourselves to him—put yourselves in that attitude in which he can with perfect readiness take you up. Draw nigh unto God, for he is drawing nigh unto you.—Miss Smiley.

"The Lord will do wonders." (1) Why? To prove that he is God. Miracles are God's signature to his word. (2) By this miracle (a) God inspired his people with faith and courage for their future work (ver. 10); (b) he put fear in the hearts of their enemies; (c) he gave those enemies new proofs that he was the true God, and thus called on them to repent; (d) the miracle was necessary to make the entrance upon Canaan a true type of entering heaven, or of entering upon the new and higher life; (e) this miracle being done through Joshua, endorsed him before the people as their divinely appointed leader.

"Went before the people." There was to be a space of 2,000 cubits, or nearly three-quarters of a mile, between the ark and the people, so that all could see the sacred symbol of the divine presence (Josh 3: 4). Had the multitudes crowded about it, those at a little distance could not have kept it in sight.—Johnson.

"That he will without fail drive out....the Canaanites." They greatly needed this proof, for the difficulties of the Hebrews were immense. To the iron chariots, the horses and the fortresses of the country, and its formidable leagues of chiefs and kings, they could oppose only a rude, half-armed militia, with inadequate military training. They had to overcome those who fought for their homes and their country, and were familiar with every part of it.—Geikie.

"Therefore, take you twelve men." These men were to take from the bed of the Jordan twelve large stones, as a memorial of this great miracle, and carry them to their first camping-place in the promised land, which was at Gilgal, and there to set them up, probably in the form of an altar, as a perpetual witness of what the Lord had done for them (Josh 4: 1-9). (1) The first lesson suggested is the duty of well remembering whatever the Lord has done. The blessed influences of a moment may thus be diffused over a life time. On the other hand, forgetfulness of our God is unspeakable loss; for as remembrance means renewal, so does forgetfulness mean forfeiture, and is one of the surest signs of unbelief. (2) These stones represent the word and promises of God. They were taken out of the place where the priest's feet stood firm, on a rock; where each one had experienced the security. (3) Each priest stood firm upon his own stone, and each of the twelve appointed ones brought up each one a stone. Any one of the promises appropriated singly in an hour of need will yield far more support than a general conviction of the truth of all. Christian biography abounds with instances where an epoch of life was characterized by the vivid apprehension of some single saying out of all the many words of God. (4) It is well that there were many stones and many witnesses, that as human needs are definite and varied, so should be also the instrumentalities. Each true witness for God can only bear witness from his own experience, and in his own way, and there will always be those who could receive no other. "Upon this stone," says one, "my feet stood firm." Each faithful confessor becomes a rock, and is built up as a living stone in that monument which witnesses to the power and wisdom of God—his holy church. It would furnish an interesting study to consider in the case of the apostles what it was that was the personal standpoint of each, or what twelve true sayings of God would best set forth the manifoldness and adaptiveness of his truth. (5) The twelve apostles were twelve goodly stones, taken out of the common quarries of humanity, to show before the world what forms of God-like manliness the great Sculptor could shape and polish. "What mean ye by these stones?" From simple peasants and fishermen, such dignity and grandeur? Out of a nation so narrow and rigid, such breadth and pliability? These are witnesses of Christ's resurrection, each of whom can say, "Christ liveth in me."—Miss Sarah F. Smiley in Fullness of Blessing.

"For Jordan overfloweth all his banks." The Jordan flows at the bottom of a deep valley, which descends to the water's edge on either side in two, occasionally in three, terraces. Within the lowest of these, the stream, ordinarily less than 100 feet wide in this lower part of its course, is confined. The margin is overgrown with a jungle of tamarisks and willows—the covert, during the latter months of the year, of wild beasts. But in the spring-time these thickets are reached by the rising water (Jer. 49: 19; 50: 44); and the river, occasionally at least, fills the ravine which forms its proper bed to the brim, as Robinson saw in 1838. Its highest rise takes place about the time when Joshua had to cross it. —Cook.

"All the time of harvest." This season of high water was wisely chosen for (1) the miracle was the more stupendous and impressive to the Israelites. (2) It inspired their enemies with greater terror. (3) Those enemies, had the crossing been attempted when the water was low, would have appeared upon the opposite shores to annoy the Israelites. Why, then, did they not dispute it upon the present occasion? The answer is simple. They trusted to the swollen river, which they knew no army could cross. (4) The crossing in harvest was also providentially ordered with reference to the food of the people; they entered the land when it yielded abundance (see Josh 5: 11, 12).—Johnson.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.—No. 12.

OUR COUNTRY AND CHRISTIANITY.

1. There are probably just as devoted Christians now as ever lived in any age of the world.

2. All great reforms have begun in the Christian church, never outside of it. It is true that irreligious people sometimes join in reforms, but it is usually after they have grown popular.

3. Martin Luther was a devout Christian before he attacked the abuses of the Roman Catholic church. Wilberforce was a Christian before he began to battle against the slave trade. The same can be said of those who began the temperance agitation in our own country sixty years ago. The anti-secret reform of the present day is carried on by Christian men and women; many of whom have been active in other reforms.

4. Our great philanthropic agencies are carried on by Christians. Infidelity may boast great things. It has never reformed any evil or abuse in the nation or in society. It cannot point to a single hospital, home or infirmary which it has founded; nor has it ever made one organized effort to reclaim and enlighten the poor, degraded or vicious.

5. Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, and kindred orders propose to do a good deal of benevolent work. They even claim to be more benevolent than the church, so that many people are deceived into thinking that they really do a vast amount of good. If these people would reflect that they only help their own members, and that each one who joins has to pay an initiation fee and be taxed a certain sum monthly or quarterly, they would see that if these secret orders helped all their sick and disabled members and took care of their widows and orphans it would not be charity only honesty. But they don't even do this. Statistics show that only a small part that is paid into the lodge is received again by its members. If an insurance company did so we should call it swindling.

6. We thus see that if the vicious and degraded are to be reclaimed, the poor helped, abuses put away and evils reformed, it must be through the self-denying efforts of Christian men and women.

7. The Christiau men and women of the future are the children of to-day. So that if we would be sure of blessing society and making the world happier and better for our having lived in it we ought to become Christians now.

8. We ought to read the lives of the noble men and women who have lived before us, for this will rouse in us the desire of imitation. People that we admire we naturally want to resemble.

9. If the majority of our nation were Christians we should see a great change. There would be no oppression of the weak and poor; the Indian and the negro would have equal rights. No liquor would be sold. Secret societies would not be allowed; for the Christian sentiment of the people would put down all legalized wrong and evil.

10. Our country would be happy and prosperous beyond any nation the world ever saw. Shutting up the dramshop would alone shut up most of our penitentiaries and almshouses, and hospitals and insane asylums would not have near so many inmates. These and other happy results would follow the application of Christian principles simply to the temperance question. Political expediency says, "License." Christianity says, "Prohibit."

11. Thus we see that in the triumph of these principles lies the salvation of our country. We also see that in becoming Christians when young; by meeting together to learn about these great reform questions, and pledging ourselves to stand firm for the right, we are helping our country; and through our country we are helping the human race.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Christianity is the world's only reforming agency—she cares for the poor and the outcast.

Infidelity may talk reform—it never does anything more. Secret societies swindle their dupes and call it charity.

Christianity alone can save our country from the national perils which threaten it.

Christian men and women are the hope not only of their country but of their race.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord. Ps. 33:12.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—The truest Christian is the truest patriot.

QUESTIONS.

1. Are there any Christians now like those who lived in Bible times?

2. Where have all great reforms begun? Are the irreligious ever reformers?

3. What can you say of Martin Luther? Wilberforce? Of temperance workers? Of the anti-secret reformers now?

4. Who carry on our great philanthropic agencies? What has infidelity done to help mankind?

5. What do Freemasonry and Odd fellowship profess to do? How are many people deceived by them? Prove that even if they did all they pretend to for their sick and disabled members it would not be charity. What do statictics show? Then if their pretended benefits are neither honesty nor charity, what must we call their method of business?

6. Then what is the only hope of the poor, the vicious and degraded?

7. What alone will insure our future usefulness?

8. What will greatly aid us in living noble lives?

9. If the majority of our nation were Christians what should we see?

10. How would the application of Christian principles to the temperance subject alone increase our country's happiness and prosperity? What does political expediency say on this subject? What does Christianity say?

11. Where lies the salvation of our country? Then why is it needful that we should become Christians when young? Why that we should understand about the great reform question of the day?

12. What practical truths are contained in this lesson?

LESSON TALK.

It is our duty to learn all we can about the evils that need reforming.

A man once said when urged to come out on the side of temperance, "It is a subject that does'nt concern me." But unknown to him his son had acquired a taste for liquor and that very night was brought home a corpse—killed by an accident that happened to him when intoxicated. We may think that an evil does not affect our own welfare and happiness, but we can never be certain that it may not at some future time.

In the days of slavery there were those who thought it such a disagreeable subject, that they did not care to hear or read about the sufferings of the slave. And now there are many people who do not wish to read the books that oppose secret societies or hear an Anti-masonic lecture. They say "they are not interested in these matters, that they don't know and don't care anything about them."

We cannot be true patriots and feel indifferent to any evil that is threatening our country's welfare. We cannot be true followers of Christ and care nothing about the things that work injury to his cause.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,
JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,
JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

MINUTES OF THE MEETING OF THE AMERICAN PARTY HELD JUNE 21, 1883.

The committee met after the adjournment of the N. C. A. corporate meeting, and was called to order by the chairman, Ezra A. Cook. J. D. Nutting was chosen secretary.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That we call a mass covention of the American Party in the city of Washington, D. C., during the early autumn, to consider the following items:

1. The resignation of our candidate.
2. The revision of our platform.
3. The nomination of candidates.
4. Such other matters as may properly come before the convention.

The following persons were chosen a committee to fix the time and perfect the arrangements for the convention: E. A. Cook of Illinois, chairman; E. D. Bailey of Massachusetts, F. W. Capwell of New York.

Some remarks were made by Pres. J. Blanchard, Senator Pomeroy, M. R. Britten, and others on the purposes of the party and ways and means of accomplishing them.

Adjourned with prayer by Pres. J. Blanchard.

J. D. NUTTING, Sec'y.

ARTICLE FOURTH.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

1. Such charters are a grant of a monopoly, and no monopolies should be granted that are not for the public good. Secret societies do not even profess to be for the public good. They are purely private concerns, existing solely for the benefit of their members. But

2. A charter from the government implies the right of inspection on the part of the government. Secret societies deny this right. They deny all right of any members to divulge any of the regular doings of the society, and especially repel all intimations that any outsider can possibly know anything of their internal character.

Now what would be thought of an insurance company or a bank that persistently refused to permit any inspection of its business affairs. Nay, that swore all its employees under death penalties not to give such information, and denied all responsibility either to the government or to public opinion for what it did inside of its doors? Would such an institution be regarded other than as grossly dishonest? If it were affirmed before hand, that such an institution would deny all right of investigation and refuse all public exhibit, would it ever obtain a charter?

The right to charter carries with it the right of inspection, and they must stand or fall together.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE CHURCHES.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard went to Kalamazoo, Mich., and preached on the Sabbath.

—Captain Henry Bundy has built another Gospel ship which he has named "Glad Tidings" after the one that was lost. He hopes to begin the season's trip around the lakes soon. Services held on Sabbath afternoon on the new vessel moored in the lake basin at the foot of Randolph street, were of unusual interest. A large number of people assembled on the decks of the vessel and on the wharf, and were attentive listeners. The singing, led by Mr. Hauser, of the Y. M. C. A., and his associate Yoke Fellows, was full of spirit.

—The session of the American Home Missionary Society, which began at Saratoga on the 5th inst., surpassed in point of numbers any previous gathering. The First Methodist church, the largest of all, was packed to suffocation with two thousand people, many of whom could not find seats, and most of whom were delegates from abroad. The Rev. Edwin B. Webb, D.D., of Boston, the permanent Moderator, presided, and Rev. Dr. McKenzie, of Cambridge, Mass., preached the annual sermon. This Society was originally a combination of Congregationalists and Presbyterians. In 1862, the two denominations separated their mission work, the Congregationalists finding that the more organic condition of the Presbyterians gave them undue advantage in the field. The average annual income of this great organization is about $300,000.

—The evangelistic movement in Southern Russia an off-shoot of the Baptist German Mission, was at first among German settlers in Russia, but of late has begun to extend among Russians. A church is established at Tiflis, composed mostly of Russian dissenters, and the work is spreading in the region round about. After many trials the Government has granted toleration, and there is an open door.

—The memorial statue to William Tyndale, the translator of the New Testament and martyr to the truth, representing him in his doctor's robes and holding an open New Testament in his right hand, will soon be placed on the Thames embankment, London. The names of about twenty towns, counties, and societies contributing to the cost in Great Britain, the colonies, and the United States are cut into the pedestal.

—Says the Observer: "The change in popular thought in Italy is said to be from faith to science. That is not strange. The reaction from the Roman doctrine of submission to authority is naturally toward the denial of all religion. The mind of France is thus saturated with infidelity. Italy is said to be going through the same process. Men are more likely to reach the truth by the way of science than by the way of Rome."

—The old slave-market of Zanzibar, where formerly 30,000 slaves were sold annually, has been transformed into mission premises, under the charge of the Universities' Mission, started in 1859 at the suggestion of Dr. Livingstone.

—A prominent citizen of Brooklyn, while on an ocean steamer, recently, heard a British officer, who has served under the Queen in the East, say that "American missionaries and American schools are doing more than all of us to solve the Eastern problem."

—There are now in successful operation forty-eight Woman's Missionary Societies. Of these thirty-seven are in the United States, four in Canada, four in England, two in Germany, and one in Sweden.

—At the recent meeting of the Presbyterian Board of Aid for Colleges and Academics, held in this city a few days ago, an important and new office was established. The Rev. Dr. Arthur Mitchell, formerly pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Chicago, and now of Cleveland, Ohio, was elected Secretary of that Board, at a salary of $4,000 per annum, with the promise that it should be increased as soon as practicable. This position is one of great trust and honor, as it involves, virtually, the management of the organization of a system of colleges and academies for the securing of a higher education under Christian influences capable of preparing young men for the ministry.

—The eminent missionary, Dr. Somerville, is meeting with much success in Southern Africa. Among the Zulus he has been received with hearty welcome at Peitermaritzburg, Durban, Umoote and Manda. In company with his assistant, Mr. Cumming, he has visited the diamond diggings, where the miners turned out in great numbers to hear the preaching.

—The Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D., in an article in the Foreign Missionary, states that the number of Christian converts during a period of thirty-five years of missionary labor, in the Island of Madagascar alone, is computed to exceed the number of converts in the Roman Empire during the first three centuries of the Christian era.

THE BATAVIA CONVENTION MINUTES.

A correspondent writing of the grand addresses in this pamphlet says:

"Let me call particular attention to the address of our noble banner-bearer, the candidate for the suffrages of the nation, under the title "Christian politics." This admirable and timely paper is one which will open blind eyes to the causes of the war and future dangers and ought not to be merely read and shelved. It is like LIVE SEED; Let every reader get and sow it abundantly, and scatter it abroad through every State, and for every year, until victory shall crown our efforts to place a representative of our principles in the Presidential chair of the United States! Print and reprint and circulate in tens of thousands or millions! Our people are intoxicated with national prosperity, and are disregarding "the higher law." In every age the multitude is led more by the senses than by the unseen, but the Ruler of the universe brings to naught things that are by the things that are not! The things that are right and pure are eternal, and in the grand war must finally overcome the cunning and craft of every system like Freemasonry.

[From the Wayne County Herald, Wooster, O.]

"This story, published as a serial in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE, was so warmly appreciated that it is now presented to the public in a more attractive form.

The story is intensely interesting, and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Anti-masons."

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

FARM NOTES.

SCALE.—A French composition for destroying scale insects, plant lice, etc., on fruit and other trees, is as follows: Boil two gallons of barley in water, then remove the grain (which may be fed to the chicken), and add to the liquid quick lime until it approaches the consistency of paint. When cold, add two pounds of lamp black, mixing it for a long time; then add a pound and a half of flowers of sulphur and a quart of alcohol. The mixture is applied with a paint-brush, first using a stiff bristle brush to remove moss, etc. It not only destroys the insects, but gives the bark greater strength.—Prairie Farmer.

FLIES AND HORSES.—Dr. J. J. Ridge, of Enfield, writing to the London Daily News, recommends, to prevent the torment inflicted by the flies on horses, application to the latter, before harnessing, of a mixture of one part crude carbolic acid with six, or more, parts of olive oil. This should be rubbed lightly all over the animal with a rag, and applied more thickly to the interior of the ears and other parts most likely to be attacked. This application may need to be repeated in the course of the day, but while any odor of the acid remains the flies decline to settle, and the horse is completely free from all their annoyance.

CUTTING GRASS FOR HAY.

It was once a saying among farmers, and may be so still to some extent, that grass ought to be cut as close as possible to the ground, for it was so much thicker at the bottom, that an inch there was worth two or more at the top. This may be true or not, according to circumstances, and the kind and quality of the grass to be cut. If it be the natural growth on the broad meadows of the Connecticut, or similar river bottoms, or a very fine-stalked variety, like June grass, or the short-growing white clover, then an inch at the base may be worth two at the top. If it is timothy, orchard, or any other coarse-stalked grass, or red clover, then two to four inches at the bottom may not be worth one at the top, especially if left standing until passed blossoming and the seeds begins to form.

Coarse, rank grasses are usually divested of leaves near the ground when attaining their full growth; and if they are cut close, the stubs are left so short as to be no protection against the hot summer sun. If dry weather follows for a few weeks subsequently, it will greatly injure the grass, and sometimes kill it. When protection is left by not cutting too close, a fair second growth is ensured, which, if not sufficient by autumn, for rowen or pasture, it will be at least a good protection for the roots during winter, and give an earlier start in spring and a better crop in haying time.

The invention of mowing machines has given the farmers a great advantage in harvesting their grass, for they can so set the bars and cutting knives, etc., of these, as to cut high or low, as desired. There is a considerable difference of opinion still existing among farmers as to the best time for cutting their grass for hay. Some contend, if for milch cows, it should be cut before the grass begins to blossom, if for other kinds of stock, at the time of flowering, while some contend that for horses the seed should be nearly ripe. In order to settle this point satisfactorily, it would be well for the agricultural colleges to extend their careful experiments with the various grasses and clover cut at three to four different stages of growth. —American Agriculturist for July.

AN EFFECTUAL INSECT KILLER.

Kerosene, showered upon plants, is very penetrating, and destroys insects in all stages of developments, even to the eggs. Two parts of kerosene to one of sour milk is a proper proportion. If fresh milk is not at hand, condensed milk, diluted to the same strength, may be employed. This mixture is successfully used for the scale insect in the orange groves of Florida, and can be, it is thought, employed to destroy Chinch-bugs. A mixture of water and three per cent of kerosene is deadly to the bugs, and does no harm to the growing corn. By spraying a few outside rows, nearest a ripening field of wheat, the whole area of corn can be protected from the second brood of the destructive Chinch-bug. The apparatus for the cheapest and best application of the emulsion is yet to be devised. Doubtless a sprinkler drawn by two horses could be made, that, by passing between the rows of corn, would spray them quickly and effectively.

All farmers seriously troubled with insects should give kerosene a trial. By using a cheap grade of potroleum, the expense is small, and, with the necessary apparatus for applying the emulsion, a safe and successful war may be waged against the insect enemies. Much depends upon promptness and energy: therefore, the farmer should be prepared to act at the earliest warning. A barrel of kerosene, and a garden force-pump, with necessary attachments, ready for use, may come to be as essential a part of a well equipped farm or fruit and vegetable garden, as fire extinguishers in a city. Try the mixture on a small area, to determine the proper strength. It may be that one proportion is best for the Potatoe-beetle, and another for the Cabbage-worms, etc.; but the emulsion must never be so strong as to injure the plants upon which it is sprayed.—American Agriculturist for July.

—A tornado at Neligh, Neb., Friday night, demolished the upper story of Beekman's flouring mill, unroofed a portion of the Atlantic House, and damaged many dwellings. One woman was fatally hurt.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.

In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN THE COILS;

—OR—

THE COMING CONFLICT.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

MASONIC OATHS,

BY

E. Ronayne,

Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

A masterly discussion of the Oaths of the Masonic Lodge, to which is appended "Freemasonry at a Glance," illustrating every sign, grip and ceremony of the Masonic Lodge. This work is highly commended by leading lecturers as furnishing the best arguments on the nature and actual character of Masonic obligations of any book in print. Paper cover, 207 pages. Price, 40 cents,

The Master's Carpet.

BY

E. Ronayne.

Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639 Chicago.

Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Lodge, thus showing the principles on which the order is founded. By a careful perusal of this work, a more thorough knowledge of the principles of the order can be obtained than by attending the Lodge for years. Every Mason, every person contemplating becoming a member, and even those who are indifferent on the subject, should procure and carefully read this work. An appendix is added of 32 pages, embodying which gives every sign, grip and ceremony of the Lodge together with a brief explanation of each. The work contains 429 pages and is substantially and elegantly bound in cloth. Price, 75 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance,

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expoaitions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

MISCELLANEOUS.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Usea of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies, 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

MASONIC AND ODDFELLOWSHIP WORKS.

(ACKNOWLEDGED STANDARD AUTHORS.)

Sickels' Freemasons' Monitor. Containing the degrees of Freemasonry embraced in the Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery, embellished with nearly 300 symbolic illustrations, together with tactics and drill of Masonic Knighthood. Also forms of Masonic documents, notes, songs, Masonic dates, installations, etc. By D. Sickels; 32mo. In tuck, $1.50.

Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry. Containing a Definition of Terms, Notes on its History, Traditions and Antiquities, and an Account of all the Rites and Mysteries of the Ancient World. 12 mo., 526 pages, $3.00.

Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, or Monitorial Instruction Book. By Albert G. Mackey, Past General High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of the United States, Knight of the Eagle and Pelican, Prince of Mercy, etc. Price, cloth, $1.25; tuck, $1.75.

Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, or Monitorial Instructions in the Degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft and Master Mason, with Ceremonies relating to installations, dedications, consecrations, laying of corner-stones, etc. Price, $2.00.

Mackey's Mystic Tie. A collection of Masonic Anecdotes published for the avowed purpose of showing "the character and tendency of Freemasonry. Such chapter headings as "Freemasonry Among Pirates," "Masonic Courtesy in War," "The Soldier Mason," etc., show it is a very valuable work, especially for lecturers. Price $1.50.

Richardson's Monitor of Freemasonry. Containing the ceremonies of Lodges, Chapters, Encampments, etc. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.25, paper, 75c.

Although extensively used in conferring the higher degrees, it is publicly called an exposition, and not allowed as authority.

Duncan's Masonic Ritual and Monitor. Profusely illustrated with explanatory engravings, and containing the entire ritual and work of the order for the seven degrees, including the Royal Arch. Scores of Masons have privately admitted that this is a standard text-book in the lodge and is strictly correct; but publicly it is not acknowledged as authority, though many officers of the lodge make use of it. Price, in cloth, $2.50.

Female Masonry. Manual of the Order of the Eastern Star. Containing the ritual, symbols, lectures, etc., of the five degrees of "Adoptive Masonry," Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, profusely illustrated and handsomely bound. Price, $1.50

Donaldson's Odd-Fellows' Text-Book. Profusely Illustrated, containing a sketch of the history, defense, principles and government of the order; the instructions of each degree principal odes, with music, business forms, funeral ceremonies, list of Bible proper names and their signification, with a steel plate of Hon. Schuyler Colfax. Large 12mo. cloth, $2,00; pocket size tuck, $1.50.

Donaldson's Odd-Fellows' Pocket Companion and Minstrel. History of the order, its teachings, regulations, emblems, etc., profusely illustrated, with the instructions for each degree suited to the work as revised by the Sovereign Grand Lodge in 1880. "The Odd-fellows' Minstrel," comprising a large number of odes of the order, a list of Biblical names etc. In tuck, $1.50

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—The President, on Friday, appointed Capt. S. L. Phelps, of the District of Columbia, Minister to Peru, and Richard Gibbs, of New York, Minister to Bolivia. These appointments were made necessary by the resignation of Partridge, and the return to the United States of Manly, who is ill and unable to remain at his post. These gentlemen have been selected because of their familiarity with the language, people, and customs of the Pacific Coast of South America and the President's confidence in their discretion.

—The American Consul has gone to Bitlis, in Asiatic Turkey, to inquire into the case of two American missionaries who were attacked and nearly killed by the Kurds near that place. General Wallace demanded, and the Porte promised, that the persons guilty of the outrage should be punished.

—John Gibson & Co.'s Nos. 2 and 3 warehouses, at Gibsonton, Pa., containing 1,000 barrels of old whiskey, burned Thursday afternoon, involving a loss of half a million, fully insured. Four men received burns and two are seriously injured.

—On Friday a fearful explosion took place in the South Chicago rolling mills. The thirty-five or forty tons of molten slag and iron in the interior of the furnace burst into the iron water tank at the base of the furnace. The result was a loud explosion, quickly succeeded by the bursting of several small water pipes supplied by the tank, and three or four more explosions within the furnace. Several large pieces of the tank, weighing from 100 to 300 pounds, were hurled a distance of 200 feet, and smaller pieces of iron were scattered in every direction, as was the molten iron which was forced out of the furnace. Eight men were injured, some of whom may die.

—The southern portion of Livingston county, Missouri, known as the "low-gap country," was swept by a tornado Wednesday night, numerous farm houses being swept away and great damage to crops resulting. Two men were reported killed and several persons were wounded.

—An interesting discovery was made on the south bank of the Yellowstone River, near Miles City, on a great sandstone rock, where appears carved in large characters the name "William Clarke, July 25, 1806." Clarke was associated with Meriwether Lewis in 1805–6 in exploring the northern half of the continent.

—The steamer Nevada, which left Queenstown Thursday for New York, among other passengers brings 671 Mormon converts.

—Carey, the Irish informer, has been informed that he may remain in Dublin without police protection, or proceed to some of the British colonies.

—The French Cabinet were informed Thursday that the Queen of Madagascar has been dead six months, but the military party in the island kept the matter a secret.

—Alexander Sullivan, President of the Irish National League of America, headed a deputation, who waited upon President Arthur Saturday, and explained, by statistics and facts, the question of "assisted" Irish immigration to the United States, and the burdens it placed upon citizens, when the British Government should properly be contributing to the support of these persons. The President replied that already the Secretary of State had the subject under consideration, and that a searching investigation on both sides of the Atlantic would be ordered by this government.

—Dr. Herrick Johnson, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago, contemplates resigning, so as to devote his entire time and attention to the duties of the professor's chair, which he occupies in the Theological Seminary.

—The first results of Fourth of July fire-works are reported from Jacksonville, Ill.—one man killed, one man seriously wounded, and $1,500 worth of property in an explosion.

—At 3 o'clock Sunday morning a break occurred in the Chicago and Alton embankment of the Mississippi, in Madison county, Ill., and 20,000 acres of land under cultivation were inundated. The damage, through loss of live stock and other property, is estimated at half a million dollars.

—The New Zealand passenger vessels, the Aurunui and Waitara, collided in the English Channel Friday night, and the latter went to the bottom in two minutes. The steerage and second-class passengers, numbering twenty-five were all drowned.

—Fifty-two persons died of yellow fever at Havana, Cuba, last week. A malignant type of the disease rages at Vera Cruz, Mexico, and within two months 1,000 people have perished. The heat is terrible at Vera Cruz.

—A protest was recently sent by the Pope to President Grevy regarding church matters in France, couched in an amicable though firm tone. His Holiness points out the painful position of the church in France because of the policy of the Republic during the last few years, and says laws hostile to the church are now being prepared. He hopes the pacific assurances made by France at various times really signify a desire to avoid a conflict which would be equally disastrous to both church and State, and requests President Grevy to use his high influence to prevent such a conflict.

In Victoria Hall, Sunderland, Eng Saturday evening, in which a magician has been giving performances, 178 children were killed by a crush and panic. When the entertainment was finished, the little ones (between the ages of 4 and 14), who principally occupied the gallery, descended the stairs hurriedly, and encountering a door which opened but twenty inches, a jam resulted. Here some were lifted from the stairs by the struggling mass, and fell, only to be trampled to death. This brought on a panic, resulting in scenes similar to those which recently occurred on the Brooklyn bridge, and ending by nearly two hundred children perishing. The excitement in the town was terrific, and soldiers were sent to the scene of the horror to preserve order. A later dispatch says that 200 lives will be lost.

BUSINESS.

FULL OF GRAND IDEAS.

"Masonry and Mormonism are political engines with religious driving wheels. Their conductors are kings; their engineers, priests; their motive power, popular depravity combined with popular conscience, and their practical end is the luxury and power of leaders who form men's interests for eternity that they may tax and govern them in time."

The above is a sample of the vigorous and striking thoughts, the grand ideas of which the pamphlet on the Batavia Convention is full. Get this book by all means. Price, post paid, 25 cents each.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

A fine recommendation of this wonderful book appears in the Lutheran Standard of Columbus, Ohio. Read the notice and send to the N. C. Association for a copy. Price in cloth $1; paper 50 cents.

"The title well characterizes the book. It is a serial that appeared in the Christian Cynosure, and was so warmly appreciated that it has been issued in book form. This is richly deserved. It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read, and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation, and its occasional defects in English grammar and style do not materially detract from its value. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."

"Dr. Benson's Skin Cure has cured my Eczema of the scalp." John A. Andrews, Attorney, Ashton, Ill.

Mrs. P. Rucker of Davis Mills, Va., says: "Dr. Richmond's Samaritan Nervine cured my daughter's fits." Call for it at your druggists.

HORSFORD'S ACID PHOSPHATE.

In Dyspepsia.

DR. A. JENKINS, Great Falls, N. H., says: "I have prescribed it and can testify to its seemingly almost specific virtues in cases of dyspepsia, nervousness and morbid vigilance or wakefulness."

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

The local authorities of St. Louis began last week with prompt measures for the suppression of the toy pistol during our national celebration. The ordinance under which they act is a just one and conveys a reasonable suggestion that the prohibition of intoxicants is not a whit less demanded for the safety of peaceful citizens. And why, too, should not most of our noisy and irrational methods of celebrating our great national day be supplanted by such instructions respecting the American principles underlying the day as shall inform the young of the duties they must soon take from the hand of their fathers, and impress the unlearned foreigner with the true excellence of "liberty regulated by law." The Fourth of July must become a great teaching day for the nation before its mission is quite fulfilled.

Dr. McCosh who presented his report the other day as President of the College of New Jersey has no rival among the educators of our country. Under his administration the institution at Princeton has taken a foremost place among American colleges and graduated this year a class of 112. The scandalous practices and societies among the Princeton students have been abolished, and so popular has his work been with all the friends of the college that his resignation, offered with the report, was refused, and an assistant appointed who should assume part of the duties heretofore borne by him. In his report Dr. McCosh expresses the hope that the college has done "forever with rakes, with hazing, with smoking students in their rooms, with secret societies, with denying guilt to the faculty in the idea that there is no evil in it, with mobs making noises around professors' houses, and with unbecoming levity in the chapel." With regard to athletic sports, the report goes on: "I am bound to state further that within the last few years, gymnastic games have been carried to too great an extent. The public press, as a whole, are telling the colleges very plainly that they are going to exeess in sports. Let them encourage those colleges that are seeking to lay restraints on the evil. Some eolleges are refusing to join in the exertions we are making, not to stop sports, but to keep them within due bounds....It may come to this, that we have to refuse to allow our students to play with those colleges which lay no restraint on the time devoted to games."

Butler has been snubbed again—and this time by the representatives of the social order which holds the opposite extreme from the Harvard College Board, and among whom Butler has aspired to be leader. The Central Labor Union of New York is to have a grand parade and picnic September 15th, and the managers were anxious that the chief demagogue should appear in all his glory. Some wanted him for orator of the day, others for grand marshal; but an unabashed chairman ruled against both: first, because he was a politician and second because he did not belong to any labor organization. It was charged in the warm debate that Butler is a designing politician, a capitalist, and stockholder in three mills at Fall River where miserable wages are paid. The great "Inspector General" must execute some dextrous movements if the two wings of popular opinion close in upon his political aspirations.

The Chicago daily papers, having already led the way in the sin of Sabbath violation with their "Sunday" editions, seem to have a desire that everybody should follow their bad and destructive example. They sneer at the management of the Welland Canal in Canada for refusing to allow navigation on the Lord's day and in the same breath blame the elevators of this city for shutting down on the same day. "Chicago has picnics, dances, theaters, prize-fights, etc.," why cannot the elevators also work the week through and not compel vessels to lay by a whole day. This policy they decry as "behind the age," and those sheets that should have most conscience seem most depraved in the matter, and most anxious to drag down to the bad level to which they have fallen the managers of every other business.

The Irish League are in trouble because their poor countrymen are taking advantage of the offer, by the English government, of a free voyage to this country. The president of that body, the homicide Sullivan, went to the President with a long protest. The government has been looking after the matter long before the Irish League had begun to borrow trouble over the affair. Of the hundreds, perhaps thousands who have thus been landed the United States' officers have found and returned just twenty-three, who may be classed as paupers, and who, according to the rule set for us by the secret lodges, are undesirable as citizens of this glorious country. But this brave Irish League with the slayer of unarmed men at its head wants these ship-loads of emigrants bundled back without so much as setting foot ashore! For what reason is this outburst of Know-nothingism? None can be imagined except either that the noble League is ashamed of its poor relations, or the fact of their paltry assistance by the British government brands them forever in the eyes of an Irish-American. The latter have been sending money by the hundred thousands to Ireland; but if they are really Irish patriots and have not beastly hearts in their bosoms let them welcome these two dozen paupers, give them a few dollars each and start them in honorable business. This pother about Irish oppression and then kicking back a few poor bodies that are escaping from it shows the mean hypocrisy of the leaders in this business.

The cholera plague which has broken out with such virulence in Damietta at the mouth of the Nile will certainly make an embargo upon all Suez Canal commerce. Vessels have already been warned away from Havre, France, with cases on board and when it is remembered that the shipping from the vicinity can come to New York as easily as to Havre the importance of a strict quarantine in every quarter is quickly seen. The deaths in the single city named numbered about five an hour late in the week, and the wretched construction of Egyptian cities with their narrow, filthy streets, but invites the visit of the pestilence. The commercial highway to India and the East cannot safely pass through this pest-hole, and the derangement of business is awakening apprehension. The first point our own papers mark is that America must supply European markets if the Indian supply is cut off. But prosperity at so great cost must be loss in the end, for the ends of the earth are now so close bound together that all tend to an equilibrium.

A Hindu lady reformer has appeared in India, a widow of the Brahmin caste of about twenty-five years of age who is speaking to large and crowded houses against the infant marriage custom, and advocating the education and enlightenment of her race in India. She speaks with great modesty, self-possession and eloquence and is arousing great interest in the reform she urges with so much ability and grace. The attention of the government, which already patronizes schools for boys, is also engaged, and it is probable that provision will be made for girls as well. The custom of giving young girls in marriage is only a little less than selling them into slavery by their parents and has been always spoken of as one of the curses of heathenism. The reform may come through whatever channel its fountain is in the promulgation of the Gospel in India.

IRELAND AND THE POPE.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

The good done to Ireland by the Roman priesthood exists only in the imagination of the mentally blind. There has been no confession of guilt, and not a shadow of regret expressed by any of the Phœnix Park murderers who have recently forfeited their lives to the law. It has been shown that all these murderers have been regular in their attendance at confession and holy communion during the time they were planning and carrying out their diabolical designs, and the natural inference is, that the priesthood connived at, if they did not encourage the outrages. The whole is a strange comment on the moral worth of the guidance offered by the Roman church, and the value attached by many of the priests and people to religious honesty. Read in the light of recent events popery is a vast system for making people live and die easy in sin.

It is well known to the readers of the Cynosure that the Pope has recently addressed a circular to his bishops in Ireland condemning secret societies and their work in that country. There are some of the bishops and priests who are faithful to the Pope and revere his statements as if coming from God; but there are many who are treating him and his advice with something akin to contempt. This circular, which is one of the most sensible documents ever issued by a Pope, is said by the abettors of disloyalty not to be the utterance of the Pope speaking ex cathedra, and therefore not possessing the amount of infallibility sufficient to bind men's consciences. Lord Brougham once illustrated the value of this ex cathedra doctrine by flouncing down on the Woolsack and off it again. This is a very convenient doctrine, enabling the facile Irish conscience to yield just as much obedience as is desirable and no more; though how the Pope will like the treatment is another matter. He is further charged with having acted under erroneous information, and so to have written under misapprehension. This is appealing from Philip drunk to Philip sober with a vengeance—but what becomes of infallibility? In the old times when infallibility was only imputed to such utterances as the universal church accepted, there was always left a way of retreat, but when the Pontiff has been accredited with personal infallibility what is to be done? Nine bishops, with hundreds of zealous priests and pious laymen are said to come under the censure of the Pope, but instead of taking the rebuke with a pious submission they are charging him with ignorance. One of the most sensitive points is where he condemns such collections as are raised in order to inflame the popular passions, and to be used as the means for leading men into rebellion against the laws. Parnell & Co., who are said to have received at least £51,000 from their admirers in America more than they have accounted for, are exceedingly sensitive on the subject of collections, especially on the condemnation of the Parnell Testimonial Fund, toward which about £10,000 has already been subscribed. At present America seems to have far more fascination for the Irish leaders and priesthood than Rome has; probably because money comes from America, but it only goes to Rome, and that is a great difference. The utterances of the Pope will be treated by a large number of the priesthood, as all such have been whenever they have upheld British rule, from the time of Henry II. to the present day. What will be the outcome? Is there not a rent in the seamless robe of the church? Is the church to be split by disloyal priests, or is the infallible Pope to acknowledge that he has made a blunder? We wait for further unfoldings of the marvellous drama.

ENGLAND IN EGYPT.

HER WASTED OPPORTUNITY, AND WHAT WE ARE TO THINK OF IT.

BY GEO. B. CHEEVER, D.D.

It is a position that will not be disputed that a government ackowledging the Word of God as its rule of duty, is bound to square its policy by the principles and provisions of that Word. And the clearly defined responsibilities of the government toward the people, of the people, toward the government, of both toward God, are to be honorably met and fulfilled. Now the government of England justly boasts of Christianity as the common law; and the very fact of being a Christian government gives her the right, wherever her power is established, of securing the freedom of conscience for the profession of the Christian faith.

But England has not exercised that right, although both the right and the power were put into her hands for all men under her dominion, and were secured by the very construction of her own government as a government of church and state. Her political oath is one of conscience toward God. The ruling bishops of her church are members of her law-enacting and executing Parliament. The right of all men to become Christian believers, and the protection of all such believers, and of all men in the freedom of their faith, and of free instruction in its principles from the Word of God, become an admitted trust, and the fulfillment of that trust a bounden duty.

Whatever republics may affirm as to the union of church and state, whatever conflicts of opinion there may be in them as to its wisdom or rightfulness, the Christian religion is known as the ground and rule of England's imperial dominion; and as such a government whose fealty is due to the Christian religion, she is bound to act up to it. This being confessedly the intent and meaning of her Constitution, she possesses the privilege of a freedom and power in its administration for the conservation of its political and civil franchises and of all the rights of the people, such as any people that have put God and his Word and a religious responsibility to him out of their constitution, are quite incapable of; forasmuch as they have made themselves moral and spiritual eunuchs by such political atheism. They cannot even make mention of Christ's name in their public schools, much less teach their children there the simplest elements and forms of Christian piety and prayer, for the guidance and loyalty of the conscience toward God, because their constitution is their only conscience, and there is no religious obligation in the bond. It is all a pure political pound of flesh, no life-blood, no heart. They have condemned and despotised themselves by such state-atheism to eternal impotence and infamy.

What is now taking place to-day in Madagascar, and the intrusive manifestations and movements of the French and Spanish governments in Africa and elsewhere, against the rights, both religious and political, of the people, are a warning that good men and watchful guardians of liberty cannot safely disregard. And all the courses of history, all the lessons of God's Word and providence show the necessity of keeping up a distinct and positive affirmation of the responsibility of both church and state to the law of God as revealed for the obedience, guidance and salvation of mankind through Jesus Christ our Lord. And this responsibility must be plainly and unalterably declared in the people's political constitution. It must be in the political, or it will not be at all. For the roots and reasons of the Constitution are in the existence and needs of the people, and not the people in the Constitution.

The people's rights are from God. If their rights could be given by the Constitution, by the same document they could be lawfully taken away by one year's majority of voters amending the Constitution against God, so as to throw off the supremacy of his law for all generations. But men's rights, as well as their duties, stand in their nature as immortal beings, responsible only to God and to one another for God. Political slavery must be the final consequence of a political constitution without God, that is, with all reference to God and his law excluded. For what is that but a public denial of God and his law, which by the virtual exorcism of God's truth makes the will of the rulers the supreme law?

Rulers and people annihilate their own freedom by the parchment and seal of their voluntary atheism. They are virtually sworn nihilists; and the sacrificers of men have only to "kiss the calves" which the men themselves have ordered. See Hosea 13: 1–3. This would be the consequence the world over, of shutting out the Bible and its religion from the common schools, and from all State institutions of discipline and reformation, and from the colleges and universities of learning and literature, of science and art. Says the London Saturday Review: "It is not only Egypt that has to be considered. We have enough to think of when we think only of Egypt, but it is impossible to think only of Egypt."

Had England exercised the rights and fulfilled the responsibilities and oaths of her own Constitution, she would long ago have broken up and annihilated the accursed opium traffic, from which, in her own dominions, she obtains such an immense body-and-soul-destroying revenue. The slave-traffic would also have been abolished, and slavery, as being man-stealing and piracy, on pain of death. Partially, but with exceedingly blessed and glorious results this last has been accomplished.

But now, when the opportunity and power, by conquest, of sealing up the very fountains of this iniquity and cruelty are put at her disposal, or at least the power of cutting its main arteries near the heart and its jugular vein in Egypt, not one expression is intimated of any such purpose, not the first diplomatic word is published looking that way; and the missionary organs of American churches, even our own beloved American Board, at its last meeting in Portland, have regarded it as so delicate and difficult a matter to handle, that they have refrained* from suggesting the propriety and wisdom of a decisive enactment of religious freedom by the British Parliament, lest the proposition should be a stumbling-block in the way of a successful diplomatic peace. But what is any peace or treaty good for, the foundations of which are not laid in the freedom, responsibility and protection of the conscience toward God?

The lost opportunities of Christian nations loom up to distant ages like the pillars of salt before the plains of Sodom. Oh Jerusalem! Jerusalem! If thou hadst known, at least in this thy day! And thou Capernaum! !" "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave whither thou goest." The warning is for all, individuals, and nations. "It is not only Egypt that has to be considered." DE TE FABULA NARRATUR. Let us take care, let the American party now take care, that no lost opportunity of fidelity to God and man loom up reproachfully in its remote future!

*See in the Cynosure of Oct. 19, 1882 the rejected amendment to the Report on Turkish Missions offered at the annual meeting of the American Board of Foreign Missions, at Portland, by Rev. Henry T. Cheever, in these terms: "That the secretaries of the Board be instructed to address a memorial to the government of Great Britain, asking, in view of the significant success which God has lately given to British arms and intervention in Egypt, thereby putting it in the unquestioned right and power of Christian England to do whatever she will that is just for the hitherto oppressed people of that land—that the English Premier and Parliament will now use their providential opportunity to secure perfect equality of rights as to religion, and the untrammelled profession and propagation of the Gospel in those parts; so that henceforth Moslem and Christian throughout all Egypt shall be alike free from persecution and restraint in the exercise and inculcation of their chosen faith."

WEEK-DAY SERMONS.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

We are apt to take it for granted that men and women whose theories of life are entirely worldly will be consistent with their own opinions as a matter of course, but in point of fact is this always the case? The inconsistencies of Christians have been a fair mark from time immemorial for the wit and the scoffer, but nobody, strangely enough, seems to think of showing up the inconsistencies of the other side.

A lady who makes no pretensions to piety said to me the other day with an air of triumph: "The L—s think it wrong to buy a Sunday paper, but they will come and borrow mine without the least scruple." Now this was surely a glaring inconsistency, but how far was she herself any better? She defends dancing, card-playing and kindred amusements, and in doing so she is perfectly consistent. And when the subject of theatre-going comes up, and she carelessly remarks, "I am no radical in these matters. I go to the theatre when I want to, and I see no hurt in it," one's sense of congruity is not shocked. But when it was once stated in her hearing that the wife of a certain presidential candidate had been in former days an actress, her unfeigned horror at the idea of a lady with such antecedents ever being mistress of the White House was slightly ludicrous in the light of her declaration that she saw no evil in the stage. If the theatre is a noble, elevating, refining amusement, why should she object to an ex-actress as a President's wife any more than an ex-schoolteacher? Why this scorn of the profession on the part of many a theatergoer if there is really nothing about the modern stage inimical to a virtuous manhood and womanhood?

I have in my mind at this moment two brethren of the mystic tie who are quarreling over some property question like common cowans. In the light of the vows these two gentlemen have taken, buttressed up as they are with solemn oaths and horrible penalties "not to wrong each other the value of a cent," could anything be more inconsistent? But the world does not seem especially scandalized thereby as would certainly be the case if these two Masons were two quarrelling church members.

These cases might be multiplied; but it is needless. The life of every worldly person is one vast inconsistency. To live for this narrow present when death stands a terrible certainty in every path; when but one inexorable, sure fact, "We must all die," looms out of the shadowy future for every human soul—the most glaring inconsistency of the weakest and faultiest true Christian is beside it as a mole hill to Mount Blanc.

A Christian is like a city set on a hill, he cannot be hid. He is a child of light and one failing, one indulged sin is enough to cast a terrible eclipse. But there is still another reason why the inconsistencies of Christ's followers are seen so much quicker than those of the opposite side. Nor is it far to seek if the reader will take the trouble to turn to the fiftieth chapter of John, nineteenth verse. Like a doting mother the world seeks to cover up the follies of her own children. When she judges leniently of our faults we have ceased to be Christ's

The world is a very inconsistent world. It has never been anything else. While it has a beam in its own eye it has always been trying to cast the mote out of the church's eye. But is there not a grand encouragement, Christian brother and sister, in the thought that by her very argus-eyed vigilance to discern a sign of faltering on our part she bears the strongest possible testimony that we are none of her's? We are Christ's and he has overcome the world.

THE TIDE IS TURNING.

A leading editorial in the Toledo Blade, "Petroleum V. Nasby's" paper, commenting on the Dublin Park murder, closes up with these general remarks:

"No man has the right to place himself where he has no moral control of his own actions, yet this is what he does when he joins a secret society and binds himself to blindly obey all orders from headquarters without hesitation or thought of whether they are right or wrong. Indeed he dare not question the mandates of these persons whom he does not know. He must simply do as he is bidden, even though it makes him a partner in the most atrocious crimes, when he has no intention of committing a moral wrong. The lessons these disclosures teach is to become a member of no societies whose purposes are not openly declared, to take no oaths to obey persons whose very names are unknown."

AN ECHO

nearer home comes from the Atchison County (Mo.) Mail, where Mr. M. N. Butler has been lecturing on oath-bound secretism. The editorial says:

"Truth seeks the light. Error loves darkness. Truth courts investigation; error dreads it. Truth says, Agitate, agitate; error says, Let there be no agitation. Truth encourages intelligence and virtue, and demands for its devotees freedom of thought, free speech and a free press; error encourages ignorance, vice, superstition, bigotry, intolerance and actual persecution. Truth is, as we have said, essentially aggressive, and hence it is ever seeking new conquests, and will only accept that peace which is the result of the triumph of virtue over vice, of right over wrong. So when truth makes an assault and error cries, as it has ever done, 'Let me alone,' truth will promptly and with great emphasis answer, 'I cannot, I dare not let you alone. The interests involved are too vast, too momentous, and the demand for action and prompt action, is so great, so imperative, that were I to let you alone I would be untrue to myself, unfaithful to God, unfaithful to suffering humanity, and unfaithful to everything pure on earth or in heaven.'"

This comes from a county where Masons lock school houses to stop investigation. Lodgism cries,

"Let us alone." The Bible says, "First pure and then peaceable."

STILL ANOTHER

from the Chicago Tribune upon late action of the "Harness-makers Union," to-wit:

"This is carrying matters with a high hand. Is it not about time that this sort of interferenee was stopped? The strikers are nearly all foreigners, many of them not naturalized. Same of them get as mueh wages in a day as they received in a week in the country they eome from. These foreign know-nothings organize themselves into oath-bound secret societies to prevent American boys from learning trades. What right have these aliens to exelude American boys from shops and factories? They make themselves public nuisances by so doing. Perkins, Campbell & Co. and every other employer should look out all such foreigners as enemies of the American people. They are unwelcome in this country. To exclude American boys from learning is an attempt to deprive them of the means of making an honest living now or supporting a family hereafter when they beeome married men. It is striking at the very vitals of society and should not be tolerated."

The Iowa State Register says eoncerning the above:

"This is sensible, and hits on the head, and drives home to the shoulder, a nail that needs it."

The anti-American doctrine so bitterly denounced should not be tolerated. A Missouri Masonic Grand Lodge report declares:

"We are all equal eitizens of one eommon government, having equal rights, equal privileges and equal duties; and in whieh government, thank God, the majority does not govern. For our order in its very constitution strikes at the root of that which is the very basis of popular government. Not only do we know no North, no South, no East and no West, but we know no government save our own. To every government save that of Masonry, and to each and all alike, we are foreigners."

Shall these foreign elements rule?

TRAFFIC IN INSTRUMENTS OF DEATH.

Herman O. Naerger was arrested in New York a fortnight since for attempting to dispose of some fifteen hundred "slung-shots" whieh he had manufactured in Baltimore and brought to the former city for sale. The laws of the State make the manufaeture or sale of slung-shots a misdemeanor, while the earrying of a slung-shot eoncealed about the person is a felony. The principle of prohibition, as applied to intoxieating drinks, receives illustration and support from this statute; for the law, in either ease, strikes at the manufaeture and sale of that whieh is certain to be used to the injury of human interests, or the destruction of human life. The duty of government not only to punish but to prevent erime, is recognized in such legislation. And our law-makers will yet advanee to the suppression of other weapons more deadly than the slung-shot. The pistol is an instrument of death for the manufacture and sale of whieh no good argument can be presented. It is never useful in the chase. Its only purpose is to kill men. It is used for murder ten times, where it is onee employed in self-defense. Any fool or villain like Guiteau ean buy it eheaply and eoneeal it effeetually until the moment for his fatal deed. If the purchase of pistols were rendered impossible at onee and forever, none but eriminals would regret it; for all good men would gain more in personal security than they would lose in the means of self-defense. The number of murders would be greatly diminished and the stain of blood now resting on our land would lose something of its terrible dye. To provide legislation looking to this end seems an immediate duty of our legislators and public opinion ought to be edueated to demand it. —Christian Statesman.

PROF. C. A. YOUNG of Prineeton College, in a leeture used the following language relating to the subjeet of gravitation: "Do not understand me at all as saying there is no mystery about the planets' motion. There is just the one single mystery—gravitation—and it is a very profound one. How is it that an atom of matter ean attraet another atom, no matter how great the distance, no matter what intervening substanees there may be; how it will aet upon it, or at least behave as if it acted upon it, I do not know, I eannot tell. Whether they are pushed together by means of intervening ether, or what is the aetion, I eannot understand. It stands with me along with the fact that when I will that my arm shall rise, it rises. It is inserutable. All the explanations that have been given of it seem to me merely to darken counsel with words and no understanding. They do not remove the difficulty at all. If I were to say what I really believe, it would be that the motions of the spheres of the material universe stand in some sueh relation to Him in whom all things exist, the ever present and omnipotent God, as the motions of my body do to my will—I do not know how, and never expect to know."

BATTLE HYMN.

Fear not, O little flock, the foe
Who madly seeks your overthrow;
Dread not his rage and power;
What though your courage sometimes faints;
This seeming triumph o'er God's saints
Lasts but a little hour.

Fear not, be strong! your eause belongs
To Him who eau avenge your wrongs;
Leave all to him, your Lord:
Though hidden yet from mortal eyes,
Salvation shall for you arise;
He girdeth on his sword!

As true as God's own promise stands,
Nor earth nor hell with all their bands
Against us shall prevail;
The Lord shall mock them from his throne;
God is with us, we are his own;
Our vietory eannot fail!

Amen, Lord Jesus, grant our prayer!
Great Captain, now thine arm make bare,
Thy ehureh with strength defend;
So shall thy saints and martyrs raise
A joyful ehorus to thy praise,
Through ages without end.

AVOID SECRET SOCIETIES.

It would be a noble thing if young men in this country would heed and act out in good faith, the timely suggestion given to the priest by Michael Fagan, who for the murder of Burke and Cavendish, in Phœnix Park, Dublin, Ireland, was hanged on Monday of last week. While protesting his personal innoeenee to the last, Fagan is said to have expressed "the wish that Irishmen would avoid secret societies." The Irish, like those of every other nationality, who allow themselves to enter sueh societies, have suffered a thousand fold more of evil, than they ever reeeived of good, from their eonnection with these organizations. Had Fagan not joined the seeret band of murderers that took the life of Burke and Cavendish, he would not have paid the penalty of eomplieity in the bloody crime of this elandestine and lawless eombination with his life, on the gallows. He sowed to the wind and reaped the whirlwind. He joined hands with a seeret soeiety and shared the doom and disgraee that attached to the murders they eommitted. Oh, young man, keep yourself free forever from all sueh assoeiations as are afraid to eome to the light, and whose secret works must be eoncealed from popular knowledge, by savage oaths, in taking which you are ealled to surrender your liberty, manhood and moral convietions. Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. Eph. 5: 11.—Sandy Lake News.

"SUNDAY" NEWSPAPERS.

What has been the result of this new invasion of the Lord's day? At first no Christian man or woman would buy or touch a "Sunday" sheet. The great irreligious rabble were the patrons. Bar rooms and saloons were the appropriate places where they could be found. But as irreligious men are found in religious families, the "Sunday" paper was at length introduced into the Christian family, and it was not long before the Christian members of the family took it up, first to glance at, and then to read deliberately. Public stands on the streets everywhere sold the insidious evil, and many on their way to church would stop and purchase. Even some miuisters of the Gospel are now regularly supplied with their Sunday newspaper.

But reading the secular newspapers on the Sabbath not only consumes precious time that should be given to the Word of God and to the study of spiritual things, but it unfits the mind for such study at any other part of the day. It fills the head with political, literary, artistic or commercial subjects which will naturally maintain their interest during the day, and will render the higher subjects of thought distasteful. For the young people of a Christian family it is a most successful snare. It is their golden opportunity to make the first overt resistanee to a religious training. They count it manly to be like the ungodly world without. It shows independence to manifest a disregard for God's day, and the "Sunday" newspaper is the first step to the "Sunday" novel reading, "Sunday" visiting, and "Sunday" amusements.

The church of Christ is on every side yielding to the pressure of a Christless world. It is adopting the customs and habits of a thoroughly worldly society. The Sabbath negleet is but one phase of this widespread evil. There is but one thing for earnest souls to do. It is to become singular, to bear any degree of reproach or loss for Christ's sake. Let the world call us Puritans, let it deny us recognition in its high places, let it hinder our success in business; if all this is for Christ's sake, happy are we. We must go back to a true Sabbath, not a gloomy and severe Sabbath, but a holy Sabbath, one in which the prayerful study of God's Word shall be a eonspicuous feature, in which the gathering of God's saints shall be a delight; one that shall be altogether different from the week-day in its thoughts and employments, from which the world's business and pleasures shall be banished, and our Father's business and heavenly pleasures shall be substituted. Miuisters and elders and deacons should use their offices to promote this sanctification of the day, and should make their own example tell upon the church at large. Sabbath observance is the key of spirituality, and if the chureh is going to lose its Sabbath it will be a dead church, a mere name. In this reform we must decline the advice and guidanee of the secular press, which knows as much about religion as it does about the other side of the moon, and yet which is ever ready to put its profane feet within the holy of holies. We must be separated in the true sense from those who have no spiritual discernment, and let God's Word and Spirit alone be our instructors.—Congregationalist.

HONORS TO LAFAYETTE.

A LETTER FROM GEN'L. PHELPS TO PRESIDENT BUCKHAM.

BRATTLEBORO, Vermont, June 18, 1883.

M. H. Buckham, President of the University of Vermont.

DEAR SIR:—I have received a programme of the exercises to he observed June 26th, at the dedication of a new college bnilding and the unveiling of a statute to Geu'l. Lafayette at Burlington, together with a printed general invitation from yourself to be present to join with the Presideut of the United States, the Secretary of War, the General eommanding the army, the French Minister, and other distingnished persons to do honor to the occasion. I am greatly obliged to you, personally, for this distinguished favor; but am under the necessity of declining it, for the following reasons. From the devotion to our republican government which I have ever striven to maintain, I feel impelled to observe some logical consisteney in my public acts. It is not long since that I was present, as a principal actor, in the nnveiling of a monument to Willliam Morgan, who fell a victim to the malignity of the Masonic lodge in its eovert aggressions upon our republican liberty, which aggressions he bravely and generously attempted to resist and defeat. While I honor the personal enthusiasm that animated Lafayette in the defence of our liberties, I must not forget the generous devotion in favor of our Republic which was manifested by Morgan. Lafayette was a distinguished Freemason, who has been heaped with honors and benefits, while Morgan was a distinguished Anti-mason whose award has been odium, martyrdom and death.

Vermonters may violate their own laws in favor of Freemasonry, but for my own part, I cannot honor two such widely varient characters as Lafayette and Morgan without making a clearly understood distinction; and the time has come when liberty and Christian civilization require such a distinction to be made in all our political and religious affairs. This blind persistence on the part of men in publie office at the present day in concealing the fatal tendencies of Freemasonry while honoring some of its members, is threateuing the destruction of that very republic which Lafayeite helped to found. As Lafayette felt impelled by a heroic enthusiasm to defend our republican institutions against the old time notions of George the Third, so I, though iu a humbler sphere, feel impelled to make as determined a stand against the un-Christian tyranny of the Masonic lodge, which is far more barbarous than was the domination of Great Britain that Lafayette helped the American colonies to throw off.

It is for these reasons that I decline the honor of your invitation, and beg the liberty to make my excuse through our National Anti-masonic organ, as the only possible medium, perhaps, through which my views on the occasion could be made known to the publie, so intensely interested are our "statesmeu" in concealing and protecting the hidden springs of a foreign institution which it is their duty to destroy. I would like to have it understood that I could gladly honor the memory of Lafayette as a person and as a Frenchman; but not until it is unmistakably admitted that his Freemasonry is more deserving of reprobation than his personal qualities, however great and good, were worthy of praise, and with these sentiments, I remain, Very truly yours

J. W. PHELPS.

—The magnificent Cologne Cathedral is at last actually completed, 635 years after its foundation, and nothing remains but to take down the last shed and put the terrace in order. Over $2,600,000 ha been spent in this work since 1864, and about $120,000 more than the money on hand is needed to tear down the incumbrances, and this will be raised by another aud final lottery.

REFORM NEWS.

ANNUAL REPORT OF REV. H. H. HINMAN.

To the Board of Directors of the N. C. A:—As your agent for the South it is perhaps appropriate that I give an account of my stewardship during the past year. I have visited and lectured in the following different States, viz., Illinois, Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and in the District of Columbia. I have visited and addressed the students of the following institutions of learning, viz.. Howard and Wayland Universities, Washington, D. C., and Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va. These were supplied with reform literature, and I have also visited and supplicd Raisin Valley Institute, Mich., and the Indiau School at Carlisle Barracks, Pa. In each of these institutions I have had the earnest endorsement] and co-operation of those who so ably couduct them. I have attended and addressed important conventions as follows: At Grand Rapids, Mich., Batavia, N. Y., Clifford, Pa., Chambersburg, Pa., and Marquette, Nebraska. I have delivered about 125 lectures and sermons and collected on the field, in money and pledges for the general work and the Washington building, and have distributed a large number of the tracts of the Association in the cities of Philadelphia and Chambersburg, Pa., Baltimore, Md., and Washington, D. C.

I visited Washington with the expectation of remaining but a few days, and then passing on through Virginia and the Carolinas. I found there so important a field that I was constrained to remain for much longer period. Of the state of the work there, both present and prospective, your Secretary and General Agent will inform you. I will confine myself more particularly to its relations to the colorcd population. About one-third of the inhabitants of the District (say 60,000) are colored. Nowhere in the nation are their rights more carefully respected, and nowhere are there better facilities for their education. Many of them are persons of wealth and influence and some hold important official positions. But like their paler brethren, and even to a greater extent, they are under the dominion of the secret orders. They have been delivered from one species of bondage only to be sold into another, scarcely less demoralizing and injurious. There are in the District far more secret lodges than churches, and the cost of maintaining is greater, and there is scarcely any open protest against their enormous pretensions and exactions. The colored ministry, though often men of ability, are like their white brethren, either in the conspiracy, or awed into silence by the greatness of its power. A few of the more enlightened and pious of the ministers are beginning to realize and deplore the malign influence of the lodges, but in nearly all the congregations both young men and young women are lured into these pit-holes of Satan, and hasten to them as a bird to the snare that knoweth not that it is for its life. Happily both Howard and Wayland Universities, both large and prosperous institutions, which provide for both general and professional education, and are yearly sending out educated colored ministers, favor the discussion of this subject, and welcome appropriate arguments and testimonies against the system of secretism. Quite a number of students in both these institutions have become much interested in the reform. What is true of Washington applies also to Baltimore, a much larger city; but here there are two strong churches, the Reformed and the United Presbyterian, that bear faithful testimony against this iniquity, and there are a number among the colored ministry who do not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. Some of them have preached on the snbject, and in three of the colored Baptist churches as well as in the United Presbyterian, I was permitted to speak freely in reference to the secret orders.

In the city of Richmond and the smaller cities of Maryland and Virginia it is believed that a similar state of things exists, and that in all this region there is an open door for wide and extended usefulness. I have therefore felt inclined to make the following suggestions:

1st. That the region of country with Washington, D.C., as its center, included within a radius of 100 miles be regarded as a district of labor under the care of an agent with more special refercnce to the colored population. A lecturer here could labor both among white and colored, which is impracticable in many parts of the Sonth, and while all classes need and should receive instruction, the colored are more teachable and more in need of enlightenment on this snbject.

2d. That a small monthly paper adapted to the wants and within the means of the colored people of the Sonth be published at Washington, D. C. It is believed that such a paper could have a considerable circulation and could be made self-sustaining.

3d. That the reform work in the more Southern States be continued by one or more agents, and that especially Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi be revisited and our faithful co-workers in that field be aided and encouraged.

LODGE CONSPIRACY AGAINST FARMERS.

Mr. M. N. Butler, during his American lecture at the M. E. church in Westboro, uight of June 2d, startled the audience by saying:

"Geutleman, did you know that a secret ring handles your grain? It is called the 'Grain Buyers Association of Southwestern Iowa, and Northwestern Missouri.' It is a regularly organized ring, operating in our very midst. It has its Constitution and by-laws, and its legitimate mission is to secure the farmer's grain at its own prices. It is a secret order, purely Masonic in principle and practice, as will fully appear from a few quotations from its Constitution.

"Constitution, Art. 3. No person or firm shall be admitted a member of this Association except reputable grain dealers, who have facilities for, and do conduct a regular and steady business of buying and selling grain.

"Article 11. The governing committee shall use the 'Robinson Cipher' in notifying members of change of prices.

"Article 15. Any member divulging any of the proceedings or advantages received by this Association to any person not a member of the same, shall be subject to expulsion by the Governing Committee or Association.

"Article 16. No person shall be allowed at any meeting of the Association or Governing Committee unless a member in good standing, except in case of trial.

"Article 10 of by-laws makes it the duty of the Governing Committee to telegraph simultaneously to grain dealers of the ring any change in prices, and the Constitution empowers that Governing Committee, composed of the president, secretary, and three other members, to call meetings and govern prices.

"Action taken May the 4th is: Resolved, That we, as members of the Association, pledge ourselves not to sell grain to any track buyer who shall buy grain on track, of any person uot a member of the Association.

"Another resolution adopted is: Resolved, That the Association recommend concert of action among its members at all local points in regard to division of grain and pooling profits as far as practicable.

"The first thing noticeable in this neat game is, no person is eligible to membership in the ring nnless a regular dealer with ample facilities. Again, the ring committee sets the prices through its secret cipher, and is it not a fact that any member going above that set price would forfeit the neat sum of five hundred dollars? Let any member deny it if he dares. Article fifteen shows the regular lodge despotism and coercion, while sixteen shows clearly its underhanded secret nature. Next, five nabobs govern prices of grain at their own sweet will and pleasure. All dealers act at once, driving track buyers to the wall and forcing farmers to sell to ring men alone. The last, but not least, is pooling profits. Now, then, gentlemen, why has grain been selling so far below the regular market prices? Who pocketed the fat margin? Who lost it? How long are you going to leave yourselves at the tender mercy of such secret lodge manipulation? We venture the wager that nine-tenths of these ring men learned to do business in a Masonic or Odd-fellow's lodge and wear badges. Farmer's what do you say to turning that ring out iu the cold?"—American Freeman.

LETTER FROM BRO. HINMAN.

215, 4½ ST., N. W., WASHINGTON, D. C.,
June 29, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Leaving Chicago on the 22d at 10:30 P. M., I reached Wakeman, Ohio, next day at 1 P. M., and remained until the 27th. I found the few subscribers to the Cynosure in hearty sympathy with our plans for work in this city, and ready to aid in carrying them ont. There are others there who are in sympathy with our general work, but not well informed as to what we are doing. Some of them concluded to take the Cynosure and will be better posted in future.

On Sabbath evening I preached in the Congregational church, and was glad to know that when I told the people, "That as slavery made war on the nation, and had to be destroyed in order to save our national life, so the secret orders are at war with Christianity, and will destroy the church unless they are destroyed by it," it met the hearty approval of the pastor. May the Lord help this dear brother, who is about to leave for another field, to be faithful in declaring this important truth.

We left Wakeman on Wednesday the 27th, at 9 P. M., but were detained near Pittsburg by a washout on the N. Y. P. & C. R. R. This caused us to stay over night at Pittsburg, and we left there at 8:30 A. M. of the 28th. Our ride over the mountains to Cumberland, W. Va., and thence down the Potomac to this city, was a succession of ever chauging, ever beantiful scenes. The small fields in the mountain region seemed very backward, but as we came into this valley we found a constant succession of wheat fields just beginning to turn yellow in the upper part, and near here the harvest is nearly or quite completed. The yield everywhere seems to be excelleut. The corn, though not as forward as usual, is promising, but all crops have been injured by the deluging rains.

We reached here at 8 P. M. and went directly to this building, where we fouud the brethren assembled for prayer meeting, and were most cordially greeted. We felt especially blest in being able to enter on our work in an atmosphere of prayer. We found the rooms in excellent order and the outlook most encouraging.

H. H. HINMAN.

MAKING DRUNKENNESS INFAMOUS.—The veuerable Rev. Dr. Andrew P. Peabody, late preacher of Harvard Uuiversity, in a recent letter on the sale and use of intoxicating liquors, says: "I believe that the only remedy for intemperance is to make drunkenness the prime offense, and to bring about a state of public feeling in which drunkenness and all approaches to it shall be looked upon with the same disesteem, loathing and intense moral disapprobation with which the attempt is made to brand the sale of spiritous liquors. Stigmatize the sale aud the seller as you please, I care not with how deep a brand, if you will only make one deeper still for these whose vice makes the sale infamous. What the law makes ignominious society will hold in like disesteem. If a young man of respectable family is likely to be locked up in a house of correction for coming home drunk from a convivial gathering, not only will he be restrained from excessive indulgence but his parents and friends will be very careful how they start him on the first steps of the evil way. Making drunkenness infamous would do more than all things else toward checking, and to a large degree entirely preventing the use of strong drink of any kind in families and on occasions of social festivity, and would multiply beyond any other conceivable cause the number of total abstinents."

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures shonld be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution shonld be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and snre method of securing and perpetnating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies shonld be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the pnblic credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

THE RIGHT MAN.

President Jonathan Blanchard has well said: "No man can read Pomeroy's record without seeing that God has called, qnalified, and chosen him to head the American ticket." That is just the feeling we had concerning the matter on reading the able sketch of the worthy Senator by Mr. Blanchard. We have a peculiar regard for one who stands, as has Mr. Pomeroy, for unpopular principle, which standing, owing to the baseness of man, always costs something. But a godly ruler of yore said, with heart Divinely inspired by the impulse of true nobility, "I will not offer burnt offerings unto the Lord my God of that which doth cost me nothing." (Read 2 Samuel 24). An inspiring lesson, somewhat in point, can be drawn therefrom.

All true principle is based on truth. It takes a noble nature to stand for it. He who sacrificeth himself for righteousness sake, is but following the example of Jesus of Nazareth. There is something Divinely beautiful and glorious in the composition of one who, having selfishness under his feet, doth stand upright in all things, with heart imbued with love to God and man. Surely it is more noble even to be a "defeated" freeman than a "victorious" slave. O for a host of men of godly integrity who will stand for the right at any and all costs! We think it but proper to here say that the reading of the Pomeroy sketch aroused us to a realization of the great importance of the American movement. The question is, Shall the nation be blessed, or shall it continue to writhe under a daily increasing curse? Let all true men strive for the blessing.

We believe Mr. Blanchard's noble action in the premises has won him the hearts of many. Considerate, true, kind, just, and generous, his judgement is worthy of great honor. May the gracious Lord spare him long to watch "the movement," and deal mighty blows for the defeat of Satan. T. F. DOLAN.

THE AMERICAN FREEMAN makes a strong plea for the nomination of Senator Pomeroy at the next National Convention. The mistake which the writer makes in supposing that this nomination has been made, only helps strengthen the endorsement of the proposed change:

Dr. Blanchard, having withdrawn from the American ticket, and Senator Pomeroy having accepted the place tendered him, and having taken the field as we judge by the notice published elsewhere in this paper, augurs well for the party we defend. Now let every man who loves the liberty inherited from our fathers, the suppression of the curse of intemperance, the preservation of the religious features in our government and peace of nations, examine the question and vote for Pomeroy and Conant, in 1884. Let every American consider himself a committee of one to canvass the country, and to sow American literature knee deep all over this country. Mr. Pomeroy is a man of sterling qualities and worthy the support of any man and able to defend the principles of truth and righteousness against lodgism and tyranny, monopolies and rum. In the next issue we will give a sketch of the life of the man who is to carry our banner through the next Presidential conflict.

ASSIMILATION.

The New York Witness gives a cordial endorsement to the principles advocated by Senator Pomeroy in his Farwell Hall speech:

"A great change is silently, slowly, but certainly taking place in these United States, namely, the assimilation of a dozen of different races and peoples into one. What are the descendants of the French Huguenots, and what language do they speak? They are Americans and speak English. It is the same with the descendants of the Dutch of New Amsterdam., and with the Moravians and other Germans who early settled in Pennsylvania. English is the prevailing language of Louisiana, though its first settlers were Frenchmen and Spaniards, and there cannot be a doubt that the Celtic Irish, Scotch Highlanders, Welsh, Germans, Scandinavians, Poles, Russians, Hungarians, Italians, Portuguese, Chinese, and other races who have come or may come to our shores, will all in the second or third generation be English-speaking Americans. That they might all become enlightened, evangelical Christians, must be the prayer of every real Christian, and the church has a great work on hand to win them all to Biblical Christianity. It is a pity that some better name could not be found to designate enlightened Christians than Protestants? The Catholic Apostolic church is a far better designation if the words were used in their true meaning, namely, Universal Missionary church."

ONE IDEA IN POLITICS.

The history of the anti-slavery movement contains a lesson most valuable for instruction on this point. It was long the fashion among the election-machine politicians to sneer at the Abolitionists as "the party of one idea." But in that fact, which struck the vote-mongering demagogues as so droll, was the strength of a party which wrought the greatest social and political revolution that has taken place in any land since Cromwell. The little fingers of the men who led an organization of one idea—such "one-idea men" as Garrison, Phillips, Giddings, Lovejoy,—were stronger than the loins of all the vote-catching demagogues that quadrennially and biennially spread themselves out thin enough to cover all the political ideas that had been formed since the year one. Mr. J. S. Mill has written that "one man with an idea is a stronger social force than a thousand men with only interests." The Abolition movement was an example proving the truth of Mill's proposition. The free-trade movement in England was another example. The free-trade movement in this country will be a third example of it before the end proposed is attained.

The difference between a party of one idea and a party of many ideas is just the difference between a single, united force directing its total energy to the accomplishment of a certain effect, and a collection of forces directed inharmoniously and in a fragmentary way to produce a number of different effects. The party organization which corresponds to the latter seldom effects anything of importance, while that which corresponds to the former, unless its single idea is a false or worthless one, will surely, in the end, effect a great deal. The demagogues who call themselves a Democrat party have repeatedly included free-trade, or something that looked a little like it, among their many vote-catching ideas. Though they have had a preponderance in three successive Congresses, absolutely nothing in that direction have they affected, or tried to effect. All their divided energies have been exhausted in futile efforts to effect some of their other ideas, preference being given to the most offensive of them.

The political party which is an organization of a single important political idea is sure to be a more efficient political force than the one which pretends to be or organization of a number of ideas.—Chicago Times.

DRESS PARADE AT WEST POINT.

When I was last upon the parade-ground at West Point, two or three summers ago, my little boy of nine years, who was with me, was naturally disposed to linger that he might witness the brilliant evolutions of the cadets. I briefly told him why I thought we had better pass on. So, when the youngest son of the excellent Leigh Richmond, inspired by the glitter and show of a military parade, manifested his preference for a soldier's life, the father expressed his dissent in the strongest terms. "Anything but this," said he, "anything but this—the very mention of a military life fills me with horror; I cannot bear to think of a child of mine engaging in scenes of bloodshed and destruction. No consideration on earth could extort my consent." And to his eldest daughter he wrote: "There is a subject which often hangs heavy on my spirits,—I mean my poor dear T——'s inclination for a military life. Hating war as I do from my very heart, convinced as I am of the inconsistency of it with real Christianity, and looking on the profession of arms as irreconcilable with the principles of the Gospel, I should mourn greatly if one of my boys chose so cruel, and, generally speaking; so profligate a line of life. I could never consent to it, on conscientious grounds, and therefore wish this bias for the profession of arms to be discouraged. I dislike and oppose it with my whole heart."

Whilst I do not forget my own feelings of delight and exhilaration, as a lad, in witnessing with all its "pomp and circumstance" the soldiers' march, yet I do confess that the Spirit of my God has brought me to a better mind upon the subject, and that now to behold a parade of the military—especially when participated in by the orphan-pupils of a Girard College, or Soldier's Home—will bring moistened eyes, and quivering lips, and an averted face.

I do not deny that Christian men may have been soldiers, but can their be any question that the profession of arms is an occupation which the followers of him who defended not himself with the legions which he could have called, and who said that "my kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight," are enjoined to come out of. The primitive Christians of the first three centuries saw it so, and one of those best known to us (Tertullian), writing upon the unlawfulness of the military pursuit, pointedly says that "when a man has become a believer, and faith has been sealed, there must either be an immediate abandonment of it, which has been the course with many, or all sorts of quibbling will have to be resorted to in order to avoid offending God."

Strong language indeed was that used by "Fighting Joe Hooker" to Dr. Prime, when the latter spoke of the reconcilability in some cases, or war and Christianity. The General said, with emphasis: "The truth is, a man cannot be good and be a fighting man. He must have the devil in him. To kill one another, men must have their blood up, and then they are just like devils." And herein the hero of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge but echoed the sentiment of the first Napoleon, that "war is the business of barbarians," and of the Duke of Wellington, that "men who have nice notions of religion have no business to be soldiers." Ought we not therefore to unite with the conclusion of the editor of the Boston Christian, who, after referring to the vehement expression of Sir Charles Napier, in the midst of his triumphs in India—"Accursed war! May I never see another shot fired!"—aptly says: "What have Christians to do with such cruelties and crimes against humanity and against the God of peace?"

In conclusion, I have remembered those last plaintive words of the lamented Hedley Vicars, when, fatally wounded beneath the tower of the Malakoff, and carried away from the field of blood, he faintly exclaimed—"Cover my face! Cover my face!" We know not the revelation of those last awful moments in the young soldier's ebbing life, but we may well believe that the penitent thought came powerfully to mind: Had he, and these comrades of his, and those, his enemies, observed the command of the Lord Jesus Christ, to love one another? And had not this same Lord instructed his disciples how they, and all others after them who called him Master, should effectually conquer their enemies? Coming like a flood to the remembrance of the dying soldier, whilst the roar of cannon and the rattle of musketry mingle with the curses of the combatants, and moans of the wounded and dying, how appropriate then this last request to his carriers—"Cover my face! Cover my face!"—Josiah W. Leeds in Episcopal Recorder.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BE NOT DECEIVED.

Let not the reader of anti-secret literature be deceived into the belief that we are all Ishmaelites, for such is not the case. We are not wild hunters, with our hand against every man, and every man's hand against us. One of the deceptions practiced by the secret orders upon those outside their company is, to persuade them that those who oppose secretism are a sort of disaffected monomaniacs or hobbyists, whose brains, by contact with society, or from some other cause, have been driven into a corner, and hence can think only on one theme.

From what we have already seen and heard, we are ready to conclude that a large portion of those who have been deceived into the secret orders are rejoicing at our work, and the prospects of success which they see are sure to follow our efforts. Thousands are waiting for the great iron gate of secretism to swing back upon its black hinges that they may once more breathe free as in former days. Let not the observer conclude that all the members of the various secret orders are at enmity with us because of the position we take on the important question of the abolition of secret societies from church and state, for such is not the case. We receive warm handclasps, and pecuniary aid, and smiles, and various tokens of appreciation and good will, given, sent, or handed, as silently as any act of secretism itself, yet conveying their own peculiar meaning to our mind and heart. In our own city, while there are some (and they are more numerous than we wish,) who foolishly frown upon us, there are many who, though entangled themselves, very evidently are friends to us and the cause we represent, and in many ways indicate that they only hope we will succeed. And we are going to succeed, our enemies themselves being judges.

As one of Michigan's political orators said not long since to an audience of Freemasons, "That a storm is gathering of no mean dimension is too evident to admit of denial. Along the west of our beloved order's horizon there lies the ominous line of black. Keep silent as we may, the fact remains the same." This language is the unspoken feeling of many a heart within the lodge to-day, and while some are fearful that the lodge is doomed, others are praying that such may be the case. Thus is the outlook more encouraging each day. "Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not."

Many a worker has become faint because he did not know the deep feelings of his brother's heart. Men do not always speak their thoughts, nor tell what they desire or believe. Therefore, let us not be deceived by outward appearances, but continue, with an honest purpose in our hearts, to do all that we can while here below (our stay is short) to redeem our fallen humanity from these awful curses of darkness and death. H. A. DAY.

LET THE CHRISTIAN BE TRUE.

Is the fact that a sin is so popular and so strongly entrenched in the world that those who participate in it can and do frown upon and persecute its opposers, a sufficient reason why a Christian should let such sin pass unrebuked by him at all proper times, so well as in all proper places and ways?

Should not a Christian, above all others, stand firmly by his colors, daring to be "true" to his real sentiments? Will it be the "faithless crew," or those who stand and abide faithful, that will at last receive the commendation, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord?"

But let us be careful to be governed in our rebukes by such a Spirit that will carry the conviction to the minds of those we rebuke that we are not their enemies, but true friends seeking their highest good, and enemies only to the false, sinful habits or principles by which they are enthralled, and seeking to deliver them from its coils. But who is sufficient for these things? Our sufficiency is of God, and to him let us constantly and truly look for help. R. D. NICHOLS.

OPTIMISM.

President Seelye of Smith College sees things in a rosy light. Dynamite in politics will pass away, he thinks. Men will not always use dynamite as a political force. It is a custom of the day that will have its run, and finally run out, like all other novelties. The ideas of Brutus and Cassius did not long prevail. Both came to a bad end. He that uses dynamite shall perish by dynamite, etc.—very comforting doctrine.

But how about the ancient and honorable institution, with immovable landmarks, that teaches the use of dynamite, pistols, daggers, throat-cutting, tongue-pulling, bowel-opening, etc., etc.? Will that pass away too, President Seelye?

Among the men sentenced to punishment in England for the use of dynamite, are one or more Americans. They threatened to play the Guy Fawkes with Parliament, for which they had been fitted by a Masonic schooling here in the United States. It was not the using of the dynamite for which they were punished, but for the infernal spirit of secret conspiracy, fostered by the Masonic lodge. The pious and hopeful President Seelye sees nothing of this spirit. He goes backward, like the reverent sons of Noah, and hides it—under the same blanket that conceals the devil. Good, honest, unsuspecting President Seelye! His young ladies' should vote him a pair of quartz spectacles. SO MOTE IT BE.

"IRISH NATIONALITY."

This subject pervades society with more or less acuteness of feeling. Allow me a word or two also on the subject.

No one doubts that Ireland is a nation as much as England, Scotland or Wales. Each race inherits features of character which differ or blend more or less with the others. But some of the Irish try to make out that they are oppressed by the others and that independence is the only remedy. This seems to me a mistake. However, I do believe that some more municipal government would be useful, and relieve the general government of much anxiety and care. Corrupt as are the affairs of New York, how would it help that to vest municipal duties in the State or even in the United States?

I would allow Ireland a self-government of a municipal or district character. Then local quarrels would not affect people who did not pay taxes. But to make Ireland a separate nation would be less reasonable than to make New England, or California, or some of the Southern States a separate nationality. The United Kingdom is more necessarily bound together as one people, represented by one legislature, than even the United States—for assuredly there are as many jarring elements here as there. But we are yet young as a people, and the claims of different races have hitherto been absorbed by our broad acres and wonderful material prosperity. But what wisdom is there in fostering foreign nationalities among us, whose avowed objects are political agitation abroad, and even violence against persons and committees? Such conduct is contrary to the first principle of our existence as a nation, which is, not to interfere with the internal politics of any foreign power, and yet this very thing was done by the Irish and by the Chicago judges, and others when they attended the celebrated Saturday night gathering to encourage the homicide Sullivan as a fit and proper person for president of the Irish National League most recently formed, and embracing all the varieties for which they have been distinguished—from politician Parnell to O'Dynamite Rossa!

But where have the patriotic Irish societies denounced the murders of the seceding members of their murderous secret societies? Let them wash their hands of crime and none will more reedily grant them free institution. than Gladstone, Bright, etc., the present British Ministry

THOS. HODGE.

WHERE STAND DEMITTED MASONS.

In the Cynosure of June 14th, Henry Gregory, under the heading "A Renunciation of Masonry," says: "I want to know how I can be absolved from my oaths." In a former part of the article he says: "Now I am out of it." These two sentences reveal a perplexity of mind which, we are of opinion, all persons experience more or less who pass into and out of Masonry. Doubtless hundreds who become disgusted with Masonry do not fully renounce allegiance to the institution because of this same perplexity of mind. They cease to attend lodge, or it may be, get a "demit," then continue to respect the oaths or obligations, and imagine they are out of it.

Now there can be no secret society without oaths or obligations of secrecy. These oaths or obligations, whether of a cut-throat or honor-pawning nature, become oaths of allegiance to the fungus governments that administer them.

In the opening ceremonies of the lodge, in Blue Lodge Masonry, the senior warden is asked by the Worshipful Master, in the first degree, "What makes you a Mason?" Second degree, "What makes you a Fellow Craft?" Third degree, "What makes you a Master Mason?" In each degree the S. W. replies: "My obligation." (See "Freemasonry Illustrated.") Thus at every opening of the lodge Masons are taught that the obligation makes the Mason. The reason the obligation makes the Mason is simply because it is the oath of allegiance to the Masonic government.

Now secret societies are not of divine origin. They are not essential to, nor a part of civil government. Their oaths and obligations are oaths of allegiance to governments neither divine nor civil, but are found to be opposed to both. The taking of such oaths is neither "rendering to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, nor to God the things that are God's." When such oaths and obligations are received by a soul, as binding, they usurp the place of divine law in that soul, and conscience is forced to "take due notice and govern itself accordingly."

Now a soul sins by swearing allegiance to these fungus governments that have no authority in the Word of God for their existence, and that soul will continue sinning as long as allegiance to the bogus governments is continued by keeping the oaths and obligations. Therefore, the only way for a soul to become free from the sin of allegiance to the "secret empire" is to break the oaths and obligations. Let conscience regard them as a nullity, then God for Christ's sake will forgive the sin that was committed in taking them.

All secret society oaths and obligations are of God, or they are not of God. If of God, then no absolution is necessary; if not of God, then they are of Satanic origin, and as the lodge nor the devil will not absolve the soul that has taken them, the only alternative is to continue sinning or break them.

We hold that taking and keeping these oaths and obligations is sin per se, and the church that receives persons who have taken, and who do not fully renounce them, receive impenitent sinners and fellowship them. A Mason with a "demit," who respects his oaths, is simply an impenitent sinner, with the document to prove it.

M. Y. S.

SIXTY YEARS OF IT.

JUNE 18, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am just in receipt of a paper from Camden, Me., which contains a s omewhat lengthy report of a "Masonic Gathering."

The piece begins as follows: "Amity Lodge F. and A. Masons celebrated the sixtieth anniversary in Masonry of Right Worshipful Frederic Conway, at his home, Wednesday afternoon."

The presiding officer in stating the object of the gathering said, "Sixty years ago, he [Conway] took the first step in Masonry, and it is seldom, if ever, we have in our order one spared to us so long."

The thoughts that came to me as I read this over are these: Masonry claims antiquity, and also she claims to bestow great benefits upon her devotees; and again it is a fact, in our day, at least, that the larger part of those who join the order join it at an early age. Now, if these claims are true, does it not seem strange, to say the least, that she can scarce point to one who has followed her ways for sixty years. It would seem as if they ought to pull in one, at least, of these claims. And I am inclined to believe that the time is not far distant, when both these, and all her claims, will be taken in, and Masonry be shown up in her true light, an evil imposition on man.

In response to the toast "The Masonic life of Frederic Conway," J. H. Montgomery said, speaking of the carly history of the village: "The town meetings were then held in the Mason's Hall. Dancing schools and other social gatherings were held there." Again speaking of the growth of their village he says: "Masonry has aided this advance. It has taught manhood to be more manly. It has urged mankind to be liberal, large-hearted and kind." But I am inclined to add with little or no results. "It has been a moralizing and elevating influence in the whole community." If this be true in regard to the lodge in Camden, it certainly is not true of the lodges in places where I have been personally acquainted.

Suppose there are benefits to be obtained by becoming a Mason, they can be obtained only by members, never by outsiders. Well, but nothing, not even religion pretends to help any but its followers. Yes, but Masonry, unlike religion has put up a barrier that keeps off two-thirds of the human race, and hence the good results they pretend to be seeking for, they never can obtain.

But as I read on, I am surprised that any man could in public and unblushingly, misrepresent, as I believe the speaker does, facts so well established, as the downfall of Masonry in 1838, because of its evil tendency. He says, "No Mason can read the record of the last meeting in 1838, when scandal's warcloud blackest grew, and not see in the language then used, how the good men of that day believed Masonry to be the highest type of noble principle, and the regret they express at the suspension of the work is the terrible lament whichthe good utter when villainy triumphs." My dear sir, if the man who closed "Amity Lodge in 1838, intentionally, used language which shows Masonry to be "The highest type of noble principle," don't call those men 'good,' for we know better; and if they never used such language don't lie to us by saying they did.

"I cannot tell you how many of the brightest and best of this village are to-day bowing at the shrine of truth as taught by Masonry." And its well for them you cannot, for it would draw a cloud of darkness and disgrace around every name thus mentioned.

Yours in the work,

O. C. BAILEY.

THE CONFERENCE MEETING.

Edward S. Morris, Esq., the Philadelphia philanthropist, who is sustaining a native school in Liberia, Africa, says of the Cynosure, which he sends to his school over the ocean:

"I read it with pleasure and profit, and then send it to my school. The teacher reads from it and all I send him adapted to the mental parts of the children; while the 200 people of the Christian settlement read and re-read everything I send them. The school teacher's last report, received yesterday while I was suffering agony of pain the result of my visit and labors in Africa, states an increase of sons of chiefs in my school. This is what I am praying for. Your brother in Christ for Africa."

Bro. Isaac Bancroft, who has already begun his season's work in Wisconsin, tells of his plan of operation. Let every community whither he journeys receive him with welcome as a man of God, bearing good tidings of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ:

"I have got a good team and am well rccruited with my long rest, and expect to spend the summer, as I have written you before, in the county north of this and west. Hope the Lord will be with me. I am going now to try to get as many subscriptions for the Cynosure as I can. Think I will spend a good deal more time this summer visiting from house to house than I did last winter."

Bro. R. A. Stewart, who has borne much for the truth's sake at Molino, Tenn., says:

"May the God of Israel bless you in your great reform work. My heart is with you, brethren, and I would say to you, press forward, for in due season we shall reap bountifully if we faint not. I fecl very hopeful for the nominations made for the Presidency. I like the American platform. I would like you to send us a man that would stir up the Baal-worshipers; and would be glad if we could organize in Tennessee against secret societies. The Cynosure pleases me well."

Bro. T. H. of Chicago has a useful comment on the renunciation lately sent us by Bro. E. D. Bailey:

"In renouncing secret societies, Rev. E. Dennett (Baptist), of Sabbatus, Maine, tells some wholesome truths from the Scripture standpoint. He says: 'I used to say that if a man lives up to the principles of this . . . order he will be good enough. But . . . I havc found out by my Bible that every time a man says THAT he slanders the Lord Jesus and denies thc power of the Gospel.' True indeed, for 'no one comes to the Father but by Jesus.' The children of God by faith in him need to be very watchful in these days of latitudinarianism when 'Lo here!' and 'Lo there!' seeretly or openly, are the calls filling the ears and drawing away many from following the plain instructions of the Master in all that appertains to his own kingdom, visible and invisible, which is 'not of this world,' nor ean its laws and ordinances be improved by 'man's wisdom.' Let us, therefore, try to be learners of his will from his own Word."

Bro. J. Griffin, of Hortonville, Wis., twenty-six miles north of Oshkosh, wants some assistance in lecture work. His request is commended to Elder Bancroft:

"I am in sympathy with your paper, the Cynosure. I read it carefully and I like its ring. I am living in Wisconsin, 200 miles from Chicago. No lecturer has ever been here. I would be glad if some one would be able to come this way and give a few lectures. I think we could get a house. There are four churches in the village, four saloons, one Odd-fellow's lodgc, and one Temple of Honor lodge. I could not promise the lecturer money, but we can board him a week or more, so he would be sure of as good a home as we could provide."

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON III, July I5.—The Plains of Jericho.—Joshua 5: 10–15; 6: 1--5.

GOLDEN TEXT.—By faith the walls of Jericho fell down after they were compassed about seven days.—Heb. 11: 30.

"And thc children of Israel encamped in Gilgal." The camp became permanent, and probably in grateful memorial of the many associations connected with the place, the people made it for centuries the great gathering-place of the tribes (Josh. 9: 6; 10: 6, 43). It was the site of the tabernacle during thc continuance of the wars, and until its removal to Shiloh (see also 1 Sam. 7: 16. Comp. 1 Sam. 10: 8; 11: 14; 15: 12; 2 Sam. 19: 15).—Cambridge Bible.

"On the fourteenth." According to law (Ex. 12: 18). It is to be noted that they were just about to go to war against foes mightier than themselves. Their only hope of success lay in the help of God. At such a crisis, the need of full communion with God would be felt indeed; and the blessing and strength of it are accordingly granted. The revival of these two great ordinances, after so long an intermission, could not but awaken the zeal and invigorate the faith and fortitude of the people. —Cook. From this remarkable portion of the sacred narrative we may learn (1) that in whatever circumstances we are placed, religion should be our first concern. If ever there were circumstances which would seem to justify the postponement of religious duties, one would think they were those of Joshua on this occasion. (2) To place implicit confidence in God, even in the midst of the most appalling dangers.—Bush.

"And behold there stood a man." It was not in a vision that this appearance took place, but it was an actual occurrence, belonging to the external world; for Joshua saw the man with a drawn sword at a certain distance from himself, and went up to him to address him, a fact which would be perfectly incompatible with an inward vision.—Keil. Observe the time. It was immediately after he had performed the great solemnities of circumcision and the Passovcr; then God made himsclf known to him. Note, we may then expect the discoveries of the divine grace when we are found in the way of our duty, and are dilligent and sincere in our attendance on holy ordinances.—Henry.

"Captain of the host of the Lord;" i. e., of the angelic host, the host of heaven (cf. 1 Kings 22: 19). Hence the expression "Lord of hosts" (1 Sam. 1: 3, etc.). The armed people of Israel are never called "the host of the Lord," though once spoken of in Ex. 12: 41 as "all the hosts of the Lord." The divine Person intimates that he, the Prince of the angels had come to lead Israel in the coming strife (cf. Ex. 23: 20), and to overthrow by heavenly might the armies and the strongholds of God's and Israel's enemies. Accordingly, the capture of Jericho and the destruction of the Canaanites generally form a fit type of a grander and more complete conquest and excision of the powers of evil which yet waits accomplishment. Comp. with this verse St. Matt. 25: 31; 2 Thess. 1: 7, 8.—Cook. It would seem to have been the main purpose of this manifestation to give Joshua a sensible and vivid impression of his superior office. To the day of his death, let him never be tempted to think of himself as the head of the armies of Israel. Let him never forget the presence, the look, the voice, the words of his supreme commanding Officer, the real "Captain of the Lord's host."—Cowles.

"Once . . . six days." Once each day for six days. Why this delay? Both to afford a continual exercise of the faith and patience of the people, and that both the beseiged and the beseigers might be the more deeply impressed by the supernatural power by which the result was to be accomplished. The delay also afforded time for the news of this extraordinary proceeding to spread through all the country around.—Kitto.

"Ye shall compass the city seven times." If we suppose that Jericho had a compass of an hour's journey, then a formal procession like this, which moved slowly, would require at least one hour and a half to accomplish it. This would give for the seven circuits ten an a half hours. But to this we must add the absolutely neccssary rests of at least a quarter of an hour each; and if we assume one after the first, second, and third circuits, and so on to the end, the six will amount to an hour and a half. This, added to the ten and a half, makes twelve hours. The fall of the wall must have taken place near evening. —Lange. As the Sabbath closed at sunset, if this day was, according to the Jewish opinion, the Sabbath, it had probably closed before the work of destruction began. The whole proceeding must have seemed very ridiculous to the enemy, as he surveyed it from his walls and towers. Much that God's people are commanded to do still excites the criticism of his foes. Yet, as the procession was armed, the people of Jericho did not dare to attack it. With all their contempt of the peaceful procession, there must have mingled some fear, as they remembered the passage of the Jordan, and saw the ark and robed priests; and this fear would also tend to deter them from attempting any demonstration like a sudden sortie, striking the army in the flank. With all the witticisms of God's enemies, there is mingled a certain uneasiness; and the forced mirth is often indulged in order to check or conceal it.—Johnson.

"All the people shall shout." This was peculiarly calculated to show how easily God can make a way for the accomplishment of his own purposes, and for the salvation of his people. If it did not tipify, it certainly well illustrates, the victories which the Gospel was to obtain over all the principalities and powers of earth and hell. No human force was to be used. Nothing but the simple announcement of the truth, and that by the instrumentality of weak and sinful men, was the means chosen for the destruction of idolatry, and the establishment of the Redeemer's kingdom over the earth. Yet how mightily has the bare sound of the Gospel trumpet prevailed for the overthrow of Satan's empire in the world! —Bush. All the people shall shout, in order that all may have their part in the victory. So when all Christians utter with all their might the words of Jesus, the kingdom of Satan will soon fall. By the weak things of earth God confouuds the mighty (1 Cor. 1: 17–24).

"The wall of the city shall fall down flat." The fall of Jericho ensuing close upon the miraculous passage of Jordan, would impress on the people, prone ever to be led by the senses, and impress them as hardly any other conceivable conjuncture of events could do, that the same God who had delivered their fathers out of Egypt and led them through the Red Sea, was with Joshua no less effectually than he had been with Moses. The same events cogently taught the inhabitants of Canaan that the successes of Israel were not mere human triumphs of man against man, and that the God of Israel was not as "the gods of the countries." (3) The details of the orders given by God to Joshua (vers. 3–6) were calculated to set forth symbolically, and in a mode sure to arrest the attention of the people, the fact that their triumph was wholly due to the might of the Lord, and to that covenant which made their cause his. (4) The employment of means like these before the walls of a strong garrison, and that for seven days, day by day, must have made the Israelites a derision to the warriors of Jericho, and so proved a trial of faith, of patience, and of obedience (cf. Heb. 11: 30). (5) The circumstances which led to the fall of Jericho are an acted prophecy, as was that fall itself, which sets forth the overthrow of the powers opposed to Christ and his cause.—Cook.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON– NO. 13.

REVIEW.

1. The chief characteristics of a false religion is the rejection of Christ, and the lack of personal holiness.
2. True religion consists in loving God with all our powers and faculties, and our neighbor as ourselves.
3. There can be many false religions—there can be only one true one.
4. Sun, or Baal worship seems to have been the earliest and most widely known of all false worships.
5. The Jews were led away by their wicked rulers to worship Baal. God punished them in many ways, and finally they were carried captives to Babylon.
6. Modern Freemasonry is a form of Baal or sun worship.
7. If this and other secret orders continue to increase they will undermine all Christian principle, and the fabric of our national liberties will fall.
8. Religious customs or observances which have no foundation in God's Word are traditions of men, and Christians should not follow them.
9. Ezekiel's vision in the temple shows us that secret societies originated in the ancient heathen idolatry.
10. Belief in Christ and faith in his name are the fundamental principles of Christianity. Rejection of Christ and faith in our own works are the fundamental principles of all false religions. Freemasonry as we have seen, is a false religion by these proofs.
11. Love to man is the natural outflow of love to Christ.
12. This is shown by the fact that all great reforms have been begun by Christians, that they carry on all the world's great benevolent agencies; and that all the most self-denying labors for the poor and outcast have been the work of men and women whose hearts were filled with love to their Saviour.
13. If the majority of our nation were devoted Christians we should soon see a new era of national happiness and prosperity; for the Christian sentiment of the people would not allow liquor to be licensed, would not grant charters to secret lodges; and would soon reform all existing evils and abuses.
14. To have a generation of Christian men and women in the future the youth of to-day must become Christians. The reformers, philanthropists and patriots that are to save our land and bless the world, must come from the children now growing up.

QUESTIONS.

1. What are the chief characteristics of a false religion?
2. In what does true religion consist? Mark 12: 21–31.
3. How many false religions can there be? How many true ones?
4. What was the earliest form of false worship? Num. 22: 41.
5. What did the wicked rulers of the Jews lead them to do, and how were they punished? 2 Kings 3: 3.
6. What is modern Freemasonry?
7. If secret orders predominate what will they do to religion? to our country?
8. What are traditions of men? Should Christians follow them? Mark 7: 1–14.
9. What does Ezekiel's vision in the temple show? Ez. 8.
10. What are the fundamental principles of Christianity? Of all false religions? What do these proofs show Freemasonry to be?
11. If we love Christ shall we love others? 1 John 3: 16.
12. How do you prove that this is so?
13. If the majority of our nation were Christians what should we soon see? What things would not be allowed?
14. Why ought the children of to-day to become Christians?

OBITUARY.

Died in Dundee, Kane County, Illinois, June 15th, 1883, at 1:20 P. M., JAMES FRANKLIN PADELFORD, aged 69 years.

He was born June 17th, 1814, in Savoy, Berkshire County, Massachusetts; son of Manly and Thankful [Crupo] Padelford. Of his father's family he leaves two brothers and one sister older than himself, and two sisters younger. He was married August 23d, 1840, to Miss Prudence Pound, of Malahide, Canada West, who, with eight of their ten children, remains to cherish his memory. In 1844 he came to Dundee, and soon made a home for his family on a farm which lies partly also in Elgin. In September, 1837, he "tasted that the Lord is gracious." In the spring of 1838 he was baptized by Rev. Samuel Baker, of Malahide, C. W. On removing to Illinois he promptly united with the Baptist church in Elgin, where his membership has since remained.

In belief, in feeling, in action, his convictions touchiug questions of duty were more than a theory. They practically controlled him. Slavery, intemperance, secret societies—all known wrongs that in any way came within the range of his responsibility and influence, roused him to words and deeds in support of what he believed to be RIGHT. He was a valued and honored counsellor among his brethren and among his neighbors, an earnest Baptist, a friend to all whom he could benefit.

Late in October, 1882, he became seriously ill by rheumatic difficulties, followed through some seven months by a complication of disorders resulting in bronchial and pulmonary developments suggestive of consumption. His constitution, as if exhausted by his protracted illness, could not rally against them. His latest hours were peaceful and comparatively free from pain. His Christian faith was steadfast—a real support. He appreciated the comforts of his home, the beauties of the surrounding verdure under the June skies. On one occasion, looking out from his room, he seemed to be observing minutely, point by point, the entire range within his view, as with a tender interest. After this repeated and lingering survey, he seemed to take his leave of it, saying deliberately and tenderly, yet scarcely with sadness, "Farewell, earth!"

His appreciation of wife and sons and daughters and grandchildren, including all connected by marriage with his family, was not left to be guessed or inferred. The love of his full heart made itself known by the holy kiss, to look, the grasp of the hand, the utterance in words, winning a response no less cordial. Mutual confidence, esteem and affection, freely manifested, comforted his heart and their hearts, intensifying, yet soothing the anguish of the approaching separation. One daughter and her family were absent, being in California, but were most affectionately remembered. The other children and their mother, bearing one another's burdens, were permitted to know the fellowship of suffering and of actual loving service. Sustained by a heartfelt assurance of the believer's safety in Christ, as also by their own experience in the preciousness of faith, and by a firm expectation of a blissful reunion in the near future —moved also by a keen appreciation of his long-continued sufferings—they were enabled in a measure to welcome the moment of his release.

The funeral occurred on the sixty-ninth anniversary of the day of his birth, Sunday, June 17th. The public services in the First Baptist church in Elgin at 2 o'clock, attended by a large assembly, were conducted by a former pastor, C. K. Colver. The text chosen as a suitable crown for the memory of a tried witness for Christ, was Psalm 73: 25: "Whom have I in heaven but thee? And there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee." The ideal aspiration of a right heart. C. K. C.

It having been alleged that the prohibition of the liquor traffic in Maine has led to a largely increased consumption of tobacco, opium, etc., in that State, ex-Gov. Dingley, in a late address, called attention to the very significant fact that the revenue reports show that while the expenditure for tobacco averages one dollar per capita in the entire United States, it averages but seventeen cents per capita in the State of Maine.

—In seventy-four counties in Iowa a man has to be a temperance man to stand any show for a nomination or election to any office. In twenty-five counties in Iowa a man has to be a whisky man to stand any good show of nomination or election to any office. This rule applies to both parties. Is there any other State in the Union that can make such a proud showing on this question?—McGregor News.

THE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING OF NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 5, 1883.

THE CATHOLICS AS ANTI-MASONS.

Prof. Claudio Jannet, has just sent us his third and last volume of Pere Deschamps great work on "Secret Societies and Society" in general. His letter accompanying Vol. III. is found in this number of the Cynosure. In this volume he devotes a chapter of above twenty large pages to "Secret Societies in the United States," and their opposers.

Of our National Christian Association he says: "Recently, an important group of Protestants, who are sincere Christians and attached to the Holy Scriptures, in 1868, founded a league entitled the 'National Christian Association' whose special mission is to combat Masonry by the press, by conventions, by sermons, and also by intervening in elections."

"It is true, in the publications of that league, we are shocked by the expression of ideas repugnant to Catholicism and its teachings. But the high honor, the perfect good faith and very delicate religious sense of the league's members, are beyond all dispute."

And then, quoting largely from our publications, Prof. Jannet proceeds to say:

"The National Christian Association, has at its head some distinguished clergymen.... It holds conventions, publishes tracts and books against Masonry and has for its weekly organ the Christian Cynosure, issued at Chicago, the center of the Association." "In engaging in a conflict so unequal, against a power strong in all political, money, and material interests, they exhibit a grand Christian courage."

Prof. Jannet translates literally into French the entire Art. 7th of the American Party Platform, thus: "To cultivate the intellect, without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions." And then, giving the whole list of the religious denominations which oppose the lodge, the learned professor adds:

"The conflict between the National Christian party and Masonry is unequal. Nevertheless, the efforts of these zealous Christians and sincere patriots must produce important results."

Such is the heralding given the National Christian Association and American party to.

"The post-horns of all Europe," by this distinguished professor. And he does this, after reading and noting the bold testimony of the Cynosure to the perpetual priesthood of Christ, and the consequent usurpation and counterfeit of all human priests! Surely, surely, this right noble man is rightly named Catholic.

Our readers will remember his sound fundamental doctrine, that the whole political, moral and social order, is based on "the revealed Word;" on "God and his Son Jesus Christ!" Contrast his large charity to us, whom he calls "sincere patriots and Christians," with the broad-gauge infidelity which, having wound its slimy way up into the pulpits of denominations built by the prayers and self-denial of a former age,

"Hangs hissing at the nobler men below."

Old Dr. Lyman Beecher used to say to his classes: "Boys! I believe that God will yet have a people out of the Romish communion, according to the election of grace, who will astonish the world. Their adhesion to Christ; their reverence for the Bible; their abhorrence of driveling infidelity, and 'oppositions of science falsely so-called' will yet shake off the 'wood, hay and stubble' which have accumulated in the past ages, and true Catholicism, in recovered purity, will again recover its power over mind; while the fagot and the stake, will stand as beacons and as pillars of salt to warn all coming generations not to look back to the Sodom of ecclesiasticism with desire."

THE AMERICAN PARTY—ITS SUCCESS.

Wilberforce moved the abolition of the slave-trade in Parliament thirteen times before it fell. American Abolitionists voted four quaternions of years before the birth of the Republican party, from 1840 to 1856.

The American party has existed, at least in name and embryo, since 1872. November, 1884, will be its third quaternion.

The elements of its success in 1884 are:

1. The inanity of the two old parties.
2. The division of the popular prohibition party into open and secret—part iron and part clay.
3. The women are not Freemasons, and are, like the Christian religion, excluded from the lodge.
4. The lodge and slavery made the war; and the lodge and liquor now run the government. The war—in its origin—and liquor are both unpopular.
5. The negroes can be shown that the Ku-Klux, Golden Circle and White League disguises are now in the chests and closets of the Masonic lodge-rooms. When shown this the negroes will hate them, or can be made to hate them.
6. We have been kept voting the Republican ticket through fear of the "solid South" which is "solid" no longer.
7. Southern politics have been bitter. Southern Republicans would rather vote for a new party than vote for Democrats and Southern Democrats vice versa.
8. The name "American party" being an exact expression of the thing, is a tower of strength. It means no "titles of nobility," Masonic or other; no privileged "orders," secret or open. The open recognition of Christianity, as the religion to swear witnesses by; the American system, in short, as against the false religions and false politics and harem and seraglio marriages of the world.

The obstructions to our success are:

1. The party is not known. But a paper in Washington, with electricity in it, will make it known.
2. The universal power of the lodges. But that power fell in the Free States in a year or two; and all are free States now!
3. Multitudes of negroes and especially ministers are in the lodges. But men like Douglass and Bruce are not. And Mr. Hinman says two things are bringing the preachers out, viz., principle and self-interest. The lodges get the money and the churches starve.

In an open fight the lodge-guns are Quaker guns—silent. They do not reply and cannot. Then the nation is getting prejudiced against secret societies.

Then we have now three months to prepare for the convention at Washington; and after that we have nine months to work before the Republican and Democratic conventions meet next June. And the hour after it is seen that we shall have the balance of power, the best part of both the old parties will join us, as they joined the Abolitionists before; and selfishness will again complete what the fear of God begins.

THURLOW WEED'S ERROR.

"Bonus homerus aliquando dormitat," which we render, "The best men make mistakes." The papers publish the following:

THURLOW WEED AND MASONRY.

Speaking of his Anti-masonic views, Thurlow Weed says: "Of course fifty years have softened all those feelings. I can very well see how the men who were in the Masonic movement might have felt it a duty to punish one like Morgan, who violated a solemn obligation when he exposed the secrets of Freemasonry. I have often talked with them upon the subject, and they have admitted to me their intense conviction that Morgan deserved punishment. My connection with Anti-masonry began with the writing of a paragraph for the paper which I owned in company with my partner. I noticed the disappearance of Morgan and the allegation that he had been made away with by the Freemasons. I said that it behooved the Freemasons to find out whether their brethren had been indicted, and, if possible, to discover Morgan and restore him. The very next day our paper began to suffer from the withdrawal of patronage. Papers were stopped and advertisements taken out until ruin stared our paper in the face. I told my partner I did not wish to ruin him. I turned the whole establishment over to him, and determined to start again for myself. I found, to my surprise, that in several directions where I expected to find employment, I was prevented in consequence of my Anti-masonic sentiments. I was threatened with the withholding of every opportunity to provide bread for my family. I had taken the Clintonian side against the Jacksonians in politics, but my services were declined in various directions. Then I made up my mind to show fight. I borrowed $400 of two gentlemen, and started a new paper called the Anti-masonic Inquirer. In eight weeks I had a large circulation. It turned out that I had the whole country with me."

"During this time," continued Mr. Weed, "my personal relations with the Masons were friendly. When I came into the taverns where they were in consultation the conversation was not stopped. But I never used against them any information obtained in this way. It is one of the consolations of my life that I have always been on good terms with leading men in political parties opposed to my own."

As a mere worldly politician Mr, Weed was right. As as Christian he was not right to be "on good terms" with Freemasons. Civil government includes wicked, worldly men. Non-regeneracy does not disfranchise them. They are "free and equal;" and Weed was right as a worldly man to love those who hated Christ. As a Christian, he was not. "If they have hated me, they will hate you," said Jesus. Hence Mr. Weed's Anti-masonry did nothing till it got to Batavia. Being "on good terms" with adhering Masons, he was more fortunate than Paul or Christ.

THE REFORMED CHURCH SYNOD.

Three years ago, June 7th, 8th and 9th, the General Synod of the Reformed church meeting in Brooklyn, had its "Great Debate" on the question of fellowship with the secret lodge worships. Overtures from the Wisconsin and Michigan classes brought forward the business then, and a memorial from the former brought it up again in the Albany meeting a few weeks ago. A letter from the church in the Netherlands broached the subject, but not in a way to demand such recognition and action as the Wisconsin overture.

Since the Brooklyn debate, which accomplished nothing against the evil, a large and influential portion of the membership of the church in Michigan, at Grand Rapids, Holland and other points, despairing of ever convincing the General Synod of its duty in the matter, since prominent members of that body year after year were also brothers in the Christ-rejecting lodge, withdrew their ecclesiastical relation from the body. They retained their distinctive doctrines, denominational name and form, and Christian fellowship with all their brethren who maintained the truth in righteousness, but determined by their resolute action to separate from their communion every taint of lodge-fellowship.

This separation and protest has not been without its effect as appears in the resolution just adopted by the General Synod, which, with the interpretation added by the Christian Intelligencer, marks an advance in the position of the church toward that platform of entire separation from heaven-defying sin, which only is founded on the Rock. Fifteen or twenty years ago some of the churches, which now are foremost in the ranks of those which disfellowship the lodge, were unwilling to do more than urge and counsel that Freemasonry be avoided on the same ground as Paul would refuse meat. We are confident that, in the progress of our reform, as the truth shall convince and conquer the hearts of men, the Reformed church will come to the side of the suffering, patient but determined Holland brethren in the West.

Among the important agencies in this grand work we cannot overlook the Heraut, a weekly paper published in the Holland (Dutch) language in Pella, Iowa, and ably conducted by Dr. H. P. Oggel.

The action of the General Synod and the narration of the circumstances leading to it are thus published in the Intelligencer:

"The second section of the report was then read in relation to a Memorial from the Classis of Wisconsin, expressing satisfaction with the position of Synod as to the rights and privileges of the Lower Judicatories, but uttering once again a protest against the toleration of Masonry in any of our churches, and asking an inquiry into the nature, ceremonies, etc.. of oath-bound secret societies. The Committee considered this entirely outside the powers and prerogatives of General Synod, and impracticable. Two other papers with resolutions were referred to them. One proposing a simple affirmation of past legislation as our final deliverence on this subject; the other proposes that somewhat more be done in the interest of peace and harmony. The Committee, while believing that past legislation embodies everything that can be justly asked or granted, yet as some churches are still troubled and distracted by controversy on this matter, in the interest of peace, and in the hope that the assurances of Western brethren that the action we propose will do much to end the agitation of this subject may be realized, offer the following:

"Resolved, 1. That General Synod reiterates the deliverances of previous Synods, and calls especial attention to Resolutions 1 and 2 on this subject, which embody the action of the General Synod of 1881 (Minutes, Vol. 14, p. 733), and those of 1882, Resolutions 1 and 2 (Minutes, Vol. 15, p. 111).

"2. That we suggest to members of the church that, out of regard to the fact that membership in Masonic and similar orders, gives offense to many Christian consciences, and has become a fruitful source of injurious agitation and division in the church, they, in accordance with the law of Christian love, refrain from connection with such societies.

"3. That the General Synod regrets the course upon which some of our Western churches have entered in severing their connection with that historic church, which should be regarded as the true home for Hollanders and their descendants, and in view thereof; and of the action now passed, the General Synod would eranestly admonish those who have severed their connection with our church to return to her communion; and furthermore, the Synod would entreat all to cherish in their affections and remember in their prayers the church which has so faithfully preserved its time-honored standards, and has clung so tenaciously thereto, while the mother church in the Old World has become unfaithful to her trust and untrue to her noble past."

—The last number of the Lutheran Witness of Cleveland, Ohio, begins an interesting series of papers entitled "Talks on Secretism." This first article has a cordial endorsement of the work undertaken by the National Christian Association and the Cynosure. The Witness represents the Synodical Conference of Lutheran churches numbering 1,800 congregations.

—The Guardian, the Odd-fellow organ published in Chicago, is circulating a small sheet entitled the "Objects of Odd-fellowship," full of soft words and amiable sentiments on benevolence, brotherly love, etc., which are intended only for a soft covering to conceal the sharp claws of false promises, counterfeit religion and actual fraud which are discovered when the victim attempts to regain his freedom and manhood.

—The Advance has a spice of impatience in its request that the Masonic demi-god (for so his titles read) at the head of the National Congregational Council should divulge his secret counsels respecting the meeting. "Will Dr. Quint," it says, "kindly consent to give his committee and the rest of mankind a hint as to where the next National Council is to be held?" We question whether it is not the very fear of the lodge, which disgraces most of the Congregational pulpits, that keeps this high representative of Satan's kingdom at their head.

—A New York correspondent of a Kansas paper tells of another witness in the Morgan case whose testimony is valuable as confirming the interesting and important evidence produced at the Batavia Convention. The letter says:

"A fortnight or three weeks ago, Mr. Thurlow Weed Barnes, the well-knowu journalist, who is writing up his grandfather's reminiscences, received a letter from a lady in Canandaigua, who is now some 85 years old, and whose memory had been awakened by the death of Mr. Weed. She makes the declaration, never made before, that the woman who, at the second inquest, testified that the corpse was that of her husband, was in reality no woman at all, but one Dr. Lewis, a dimiuutive person of her acquaintance. In 1827 she was at a dinner party in Canandaigua, when Dr. Lewis was called out and did not return. The personation, she declares, was well known to a few of his intimate friends at the time, and the boy who swore that he was Monroe's son was really Dr. Lewis' errand-boy. How much foundation there is for the lady's belief it is impossible to tell, but it will add to prevailing obscurity and confusion concerning the most important murder trial ever witnessed in America, whose issues made and remade legislatures and governors, overthrew and raised up statesmen, almost caused a civil war and fomented bitterness through a whole generation."

THE N. C. A. BOARD.

The new Board of Directors of the National Christian Association, chosen at the annual meeting, met Thursday morning at 10 o'clock in Carpenter Hall. There were present O. F. Lumry, J. B. Blank, Alexander Thomson, John Gardner, T. H. Gault, Thos. Hodge and M. R. Britten. Bro. Britten was elected chairman, but declined because of the improbability of his constant attendance. Rev. W. T. Meloy was then chosen to preside; O. F. Lumry, vice-president; and H. L. Kellogg, secretary. M. R. Britten offered prayer. The approval of the records of the annual meeting having been referred to the Board, the secretary's minutes were read, revised and approved.

The bond of the N. C. A. treasurer for $20,000 was approved.

The annual meeting having failed to elect auditors, the Board voted that S. A. Kean be chosen to that office.

The following committees were elected:

On Building: W. I. Phillips, Thos. Hodge, J. P. Stoddard.

On Publications: W. T. Meloy, L. N. Stratton, O. F. Lumry.

On Finance: T. H. Gault, J. B. Blank, A. G. Laird.

After a statement from the General Agent and Secretary respecting the prospective expenses and revenue of the year, the salaries of the General Agent was continued at $1,000 and traveling expenses; that of W. I. Phillips, treasurer, increased to $1,000; that of H. H. Hinman, special agent for the Southern work, continued at $600 and traveling expenses. A payment of $25 per month from the Worcester fund was voted toward the salary of E. D. Bailey, as New England secretary and agent.

Bro. W. I. Phillips was appointed assistant to the Corresponding Secretary.

The financial arrangements of the Cynosure were discussed; the salary of H. L. Kellogg was continued at $1,000 a year as office editor, and W. T. Meloy, Jos. Travis and J. B. Blank be a committee to confer with Pres. J. Blanchard in regard to the remuneration for his services as editor and for work at Washington.

A difference of understanding respecting E. A. Cook's page of advertising in the Cynosure being reported, it was voted that the whole matter for the present be left without change, and that M. R. Britten, J. Blanchard and H. L. Kellogg be a committee with whom Bro. Cook could confer.

The editorial and business management of the Cynosure were urged to use every consistent means to make the paper self-supporting.

The monthly Americans being reported as not paying for the expense of printing under the present contract, it was voted that the arrangement should be so altered as to meet expenses.

The General Agent reported several amounts aggregating some $200 which he had paid for various expenses of lectures, conventions, etc, and it was voted that such sums not already refunded be paid by the treasurer.

COLLEGE ANNIVERSARIES.

BEREA COLLEGE, KENTUCKY.

Editor Cynosure,

DEAR BRO.—I know that you and your readers will be interested in institutions that not only bear their testimony against secretism, but have for their object also the redemption of man from that ignorance and degradation with which human slavery had plunged them. For such objects Berea College was planted.

The institution has ample grounds; College building worth $90,000; endowment fund to amount of $106,000; five professors and six lady teachers; with an attendance of 363 pupils during the year, 245 colored, 118 white, 201 males, 162 females, average age 18. Few institutions North or South so quiet and orderly.

Last Wednesday was the seventeenth anniversary of the College. More than two thousand people were present. Because of a previous small-pox scare the number was a third less than usual on such occasions.

Though much whiskey is made in Kentucky none may be sold in Berea. By special act of our State legislature no intoxicating liquors can be sold or given withiu a radius of three miles of Berea College, and this preceded by "local option"—a vote of the people forbidding sale only under prescription of a physician for medical purposes. Such provisions for quietude and sobriety are found in many places in Kentucky.

Among the orations delivered was one by W. E. Barton, a student from your State, Sublette, Ill. His subject was the murder of a Mr. Davis by Philip Thompson, a member of Congress, and from this congressional district. Though Mr. Barton is not a graduate, yet no one oration was received with more hearty applause than his; showing that there are many in Kentucky who have no sympathy with this reckless shedding of blood.

A man who has traced the effects of slavery as long as you have, will not be surprised that there should be here yet a reckless disregard of human life and social security. The object of Christian institutions is to correct and dissipate these relics of barbarism. I send to you a copy of the oration referred to believing it will be found interesting to your readers and healthful in its sentiment.

JOHN G. FEE.

Berea, Ky,. June 25, 1883.

COLLEGE NOTES.

—Dr. D. and A. Wallace, of Wooster United Presbyterian church, Ohio, fromerly President of Monmouth College, Ill., has beeu chosen to succeed Dr. Jeffers as President of Westminster College, Pa.

—Hartsville University, Hartsville, Ind., has dropped the tittle of University for the more appropriate one of "College."

—Rev. S. B. Ervin, of Michigan United Brethren Conference, has been elected President of Lane University, Kansas. He is a classical graduate of Hartsville College, au able preacher and au excellent man.

—President S. B. Allen, says the Richmond Star, has retired from the Presidency of Westfield College, and President C. J. Kephart, of Avalon College, has been elected to fill the vacaney. Of the ability, scholarship, and Christian character of President Allen, too much could not be said; and concerning the incoming President we will say, that, from intimate personal acquaintance, we hold him worthy of like esteem in all those qualities. Enterprising, able as a thinker and a spbaker, both a classical and a theological graduate, a true friend of reform, an earnest Christian. Westfield might be proud to get him, if President Allen cannot be induced to remain; but Avalon cannot afford to lose him, and we yet doubt whether she will let him go." Thousands will read with sincere regret that President Allen has at length felt compelled to retire from the heavy responsibilities at Westfield which he has borne with the noble spirit of a martyr. His health has been considerably, if not seriously, affected for some years, and in some new field of labor we hope to hear that the change has given relief. Our reform has no more faithful friend than Pres. S. B. Allen, and he has at various times held important offices in connection with it.

LITERARY.

The Educational Quarterly is a small, but spirited journal, started at the instance of Prof. Lumry, and conducted by the Wheaton College Faculty, at 50 cents a year. It insists that it is preposterous that legislatures should cast the Bible out of schools, and put infidels and atheists in as teachers, while taxing a great Christian commonwealth to support them!

If young men coming to Wheaton get subscribers to this Quarterly, and collect and pay the 50 cents each; they will be credited every cent they bring for the paper, on their term-bills! Thus they will be paid 100 per cent. for getting subscribers; do something toward purifying the wells of knowledge from the poison of infidelity; and thus have the satisfaction of doing good while climbing the hill of knowledge. Send subscriptions and letters to Charles A. Blanchard, President of College, Wheaton, Ill.

Prof. Claudio Jannet of the University of Paris, has sent to the editor of the Cynosure the third and last volume of his great work on secret societies, which discusses the character of the secret lodges throughout the world and their relation to civil government and social order. The portion devoted to the organized opposition to these orders in the United States is spoken of elsewhere. It is a matter of no small moment that thus our effort here obtains such eminent recognition and advertisement in Europe. The cordial letter of Prof. Jannet appears herewith:

PARIS, 38 rue de Varennes, 8 juin, 1883.

CHER MONSIEUR BLANCHARD:—Puisque les deux volumes de l'ouvrage de feu le Pere Deschamps sur les societes secretes vous ont interesse, je me fais un honneur de vous envoyer un volume que je viens de faire paraître pour completer cet ouvrage et le mettre au courant des faits les plus recents.

Il n'est pas possible que nous soyons d'accord daus touts nos jugements sur certain faits, surtout sur ceux qui touchent aux possitions respectives du Catholicisme et des confessions Protestantes; mais vous verrez que j'apprecie hautement l'ouvre eminente sociale et chretienne que vous avez entreprise et que vous poursuivez par la National Christian Association. Je surs heureux de penser que mon onvrage la fera connaitre en Europe.

J'ai vu avec interest par un nombre du Christian Cynosure que j'ai reeu il-y-a quelque temps les luttes personnelles que vous avez sautenues pour combattre la Franc maconnerie et je vous en adresse toutes mes felicitations.

J'aurai grand plaisir, Cher Monsieur, a recevoi de vos nouvelles et y prie de me croire toujours votre devoue serviteur. CLAUDIO JANNET, Professeur a l' Universete Catolique de Paris.

TRANSLATION.

PARIS, 38 Verennes St., June 8th, 1883.

DEAR MR. BLANCHARD:—Since the two volumes of the work of the late Father Deschamps on secret societies have interested you, I have the honor of sending you a volume which I have just prepared to complete this work and bring it abreast of the most recent events. It is impossible that we should be agreed in all our judgments on certain facts especially on those which touch the respective position of Catholicism and the Protestant confessions; but you will see that I appreciate highly the eminent social and Christian work which you have undertaken and which you prosecute through the National Christian Association. I am happy to think that my work will make it known in Europe.

I have seen with interest by a number of the Christian Cynosure received a short time ago, the personal conflicts which you have sustained to combat Freemasonry and I send you my felicitations.

It will give me great pleasure, dear sir, to receive news of you and I pray to think me always your devoted servant, CLAUDIO JANNET

Professor at the Catholic University of Paris.

St. Nicholas for the current month is a sprightly and valuable number. The article on the great Brooklyn bridge, with its accompanying illustration is one of the finest descriptions of that wonder of modern engineering in print. The bridge proposed for the East River in 1811 by Mr. Thomas Pope, to connect New York and Brooklyn, is shown in connection. It is said that Mr. Pope, in company with Robert Fulton, the inventor of the steam-boat, and a number of other distinguished New Yorkers, on a certain day made a trip around the city in one of the new steam-boats. The afternoon was showery, and just as the boat rounded Castle Garden the rain ceased, and there was seen a rainbow spanning the East River. "See there!" says Fulton, tapping Pope on the shoulder, "there's your bridge, Pope. Heaven favors you with a good omen." Gen. Cummings states that Mr. Pope prepared a large model of his bridge, which was set up "in the green fields just above Canal street;" and he says that one account ascribes the destruction of this model to a stroke of lightning, and moreover that this disaster is said to have befallen it on the very afternoon when it was to have been publicly tested in the presence of Governor DeWitt Clinton and other distinguished gentlemen.

The Century for July is an exceptional number. Beginning with a finely illustrated article on the oil regions of Pennylvania, their product, and its journey to cheer the evening homes of the world, Mr. Ellwanger, a well-known nurseryman of Rochester writes on Roses, and in connection appear some of the finest engravings ever printed in this or any other magazine. "Recollections of the John Brown Raid" is the title of an illustrated paper, the contribution of Alexander R. Boteler, of Virginia, a member of Congress at the time of the raid and an eye-witness of the fight. Mr. Boteler looks upon the work of John Brown from the Southern side, and Mr. Frank B. Sanborn, in the paper that follows, contributes a few pages of "Comment by a Radical Abolitionist;" so the reader may see the Harper's Ferry affair from two points of view in the perspective of twenty years. The frontispiece of this number of The Century is a finely engraved portrait of John Brown, showing him with a clean-shaven face, instead of with a long beard, as he is usually pictured. His wonderful strength of character is apparent in the firm mouth and square-cut chin. John G. Whittier says of this portrait: "It is the man—not only the physical man, but his inner self also." "The Philadelphia Committee of One Hundred," the citizens' committee, which has so successfully rid Philadelphia of the worst ring of political plunderers that ever despoiled a city, is the subject of a short and pointed paper, by E. V. Smalley.

THE HOME.

THE RAINY DAY.

We dream of bright to-morrows,
Without the gloom of sorrows
To shade the golden ray.
We sing: Let life be merry!
It is a narrow ferry—
What of the rainy day?

Now, when the sun is shining,
'Tis wise to be divining
The best and safest way—
To shelter find, when weather
Brings fire and flood together
Upon a rainy day.

The blue sky we live under
May tremble with the thunder
When clouds are thick and gray;
Then how shall we, affrighted,
Unsheltered, and benighted,
Endure the rainy day?

The ship may drag its anchor,
A thief may rob the banker,
And vigor fly away,—
But he of wise discerning
Will save, from what he's earning,
Aid for the rainy day.

Now heedlessly we dash on,
Victims of pride and passion,
In currents vain and gay;
For which there no defense is,
When we should save expenses
To meet the rainy day.

Who practice self-denial,
Will stand the test of trial,
If "luck" should turn away.
True to himself and neighbor,
And unashamed of labor,
He dreads no rainy day.

THE SOCIAL PLAGUE.

The deadliest enemy ancient or modern architecture ever knew is the microscopic ivy germ. The grandest works of masonry—walls of massive granite, sand or limestone—ever built by mortal man have crumbled to the earth in dire humility at the feet of the offspring of this little demon.

No wall was ever built so solid, so compact, so ponderous, as to resist the mighty force of this particle of creation. A little seed, no larger than a pin-head at first, fastens itself within the narrow cracks or crevices of the structure, and from that instant the work of destruction—slow, silent, but sure as death—goes on. Its tendrils shoot out in all directions; its roots entangle and fasten themselves like links of iron to the wall within, and feed and fatten and grow, day after day, and year after year, until they burst asunder, the morticed and mortared rocks of ages and hurl them one upon the other to the earth. Its millions of little arms hug the ruin they love so well, and gloat over the wreck they have wrought.

Away back in the dim perspective, when civilization was rocked in the cradle of barbarism, a delicious weed grew up, wild and wonderful, in the sands of time. The weed bent its head after a time and died, but left upon the air, tossed by the storms of ages, a germ, which, century after century, has found a lodgment in the foundations of great nations, and has torn them to pieces as the ivy does the stonework of to-day. Century after century, this little germ has sent out its tendrils and its roots and its thousands of arms and to-day it is working in the sub-structure of our national institutions and threatening them with destruction.

We read that the degeneracy of her sons ruined the Empire of the Greeks. History attributes the fall of Rome to the degeneracy of her children. History, years hence, will attribute the fall of Spain, of France, of the great Western Republic—our own—to the degeneracy of their sons, but history will lie as it has lied, and children yet unborn will be taught the lie from infancy to old age.

Greece, Rome, Nineveh, Babylon, Media, Alexandria, and the thousand other nations, ruined cities, and seats of government fell, as all nations since have fallen—not so much from the degeneracy of man as the degeneracy of his mother.

It is a curse, it seems, inherited by the human family, that just as soon as a nation has reached the highest point of prosperity, civilization and culture; just as soon as the sciences and arts have charms for the masses; just as soon as wealth is poured out to make this world better, and purer, and happier than it has been; just as soon as the lines between the rich and poor are being rubbed out by the friction of centuries, just as soon as the highest era in a nation's history is about to dawn, the sexes change place and woman, instead of being reserved, modest and virtuous, becomes forward, bold and vicious; man, efete, puerile, feeble, the marriage contract ceases to be a contract; concubinage is tolerated, and harlotage is endured; family ties are unknown, for as no child knows its own father, no father knows his own child; children come into the world unwelcomed, and their young lives are nourished at fountains pregnant with poison born of the destroying germ—lust—puny, sickly, dimmed and almost impotent, they are men and women before they become boys and girls, and die early, leaving behind them a race of bastards, and a civilization no better than barbarism.

And so the nation that was rich in muscle, brains, intellect, nerve-force; the nation that was all life, with the healthy blood and robust vigor of her children, falls, humiliated, crushed, despairing, aye, ruined! Through man's depravity? No. Through woman's fall.

The bulwark of our civilization to-day, as it was in the days of Cæsar, is Woman. The nation's fate rests upon the virtue of woman. Her elevation means life—her degradation means death.

The seed of lust has taken root in our time, in our country. Its tendrils reach out in every direction, its roots are spreading and fastening themselves below the foundation of our institutions, and of our homes; its vine encircles the proudest and noblest men and women of our generation, and sometimes it seems those who have as yet escaped its embrace, that those who are still beyond the contagion of the vitiated atmosphere which it carries with it, are in the minority.

The United States has a dreadful enemy to deal with, and the sooner the mask is pulled off and hideous face becomes familiar to all, the sooner will the honest and virtuous people of the country be prepared to fight him.

Is not history repeating itself? Why are there so few marriages! Why so many illegitimate births? Why are whole blocks, whole streets, whole districts given up to the scarlet women and their patrons in every city in the land? Where do these scarlet women come from? Have they no fathers, no mothers, no sisters, no brothers—no lovers? Why are the top floors of our best business blocks given up to street-walkers, and why is it that hundreds of residences on our principal streets are known as assignation houses? Why is it that the boys, young men, and even gray-haired old men, should show so little respect for women now-a-days? Why is it that women are allowed to stand in street cars and in public halls, while men sit down and leer at them? Why is it that people cast incredulous glances at a woman who happens to address her male companion as husband? Are there no true wives; no virtuous mothers? What do all these signs portend; what does all this mean?

Does this mean either one of two things:

First—That woman has lowered herself in the estimation of man.

Second—That man has lowered woman in his own estimation.

We must say that, in our opinion, the first proposition is correct. Woman has lowered herself in the estimation of the man.

How has she done it? By stepping down to man's level to please him, to win his favor, instead of compelling him to step cautiously up to her level. A woman without pride, without dignity—an honest, holy, virtuous pride in her chastity, a glorious, heaven-born dignity, which the prospect of being a wife and a mother should give her—is in a fair way of losing her birth-right, and with it the respect which all men are willing to pay to the unblemished character, to the unsullied name of Woman.

There was a time when the society—over which woman used to reign as queen—barred its sacred doors against the entrance of a female whose character was tainted. Society does so no longer.

There was a time when it was no trivial affair for a man to keep a mistress, and when society ostracised him for doing so. It does not do so now.

There was a time when a young man could not walk the streets with a member of the demi monde one evening and a member of the bon ton the next. He can do so now.

There was a time when the morality of a young man was investigated to some extent before a young lady received his attentions. There is no investigation now.

There was a time when society did not call lewdness, giddiness; vice, boyishness; profligacy, wildness.

Society has thrown its mantle over the the sins of its sons and daughters. Concubinage prospers. Our young men have been taught to believe that marriage is not good for them. Our girls wear better clothes than their fathers can afford to pay for; our young men do not care to run any risks. In the meantime the social evil grows and fattens on society.—Chicago Daily News.

GRACE AT HOTEL TABLES.

I have known but two men, says a writer in the Dubuque Herald, who would ask a blessing upon a table in a hotel or boarding house. One of them was General Wiltse of Dubuque, and the other is Charles Lyman, Chief Examiner of the Civil Service Commission. When General Wiltse was interested in a big flouring mill at Pickwick, Minn., he sent his family to Dubuque for the summer, and went to the village hotel for his meals. I was there when he took his first meal with the men. Coopers, teamsters, millers and all hands rushed to the long table and began a hasty American scramble for the hash, when the old General pounded the table with his fist, and shouted:

"Order, here, men; you're an ungrateful lot to act like hogs at a trough in this way. Thank God for what he gives you." Thereupon he said grace before eating. This was continued during his stay at the hotel.

About a year ago I boarded at the same place with Mr. Lyman and family, and he never failed to be on time at breakfast and ask a blessing. He is a very good man and can be relied upon to do his duty in a conscientious manner. He is a sturdy New Englander, broad-shouldered, large-headed, with long black beard, which does not conceal the big red birthmark which blazes upon the left side of his face and forehead.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS.

USE BORAX IN WASHING.

In employing a common, cheap, but clean soap, I often put less than a level teaspoonful of powdered borax into the bottom of my tub, pouring hot water on it, and then cooling to the proper degree. This borax makes the washing more easy, and is good for the hands, healing them when chapped, and leaving them in good condition after washing. Whatever good soap you use, it is not necessary to boil the clothes, but this process helps in most cases, especially if the clothes are well stirred about in the boiler. It is not best to leave them actually boiling many minutes, as this will turn them yellow. The whole washing may be done without warm water, if desired, but more or stronger soap must be used, and the labor is harder. We want to loosen the dirt between the fibres of the cloth as easily as possible, and then to rinse it all away. That is the philosophy of making soiled clothes clean.—American Agriculturist.

EFFECTS OF THE PERFUME OF FLOWERS ON HEALTH.

"Contrary to a popular belief," says a writer in Cassell's Magazine, "it has been found by an Italian professor that fine vegetable perfumes exercise a positively beneficial influence on the atmosphere by converting the oxygen of the air into that powerful oxidizing and, therefore, purifying agent, ozone. The escences found by him to produce the most ozone are precisely those which usage has selected as the most invigorating, such as cherry, laurel, cloves, lavender, juniper, mint, lemon, fennel and bergamot, several of which are ingredients in the refreshing eau de Cologne. Anise, nutmeg, thyme, narcissus and hyacinth flowers, mignonnette, heliotrope and lilies of the valley also develop ozone; in fact, all flowers possessing a perfume appear to do so, whereas those having none do not. This interesting intelligence will be gratifying to all lovers of flowers, and the cultivation of these lovely disinfectants of nature should be promoted in all marshy or foul places."

DEATH TO FLIES.—JOY TO HOUSEKEEPERS.—We call our readers' attention to the fact that a fine dust of Persian Insect Powder (Pyrethum roseum or cenerariæfolium) made by blowing the powder through a small bellows, will literally rid a room of flies in twenty minutes. Our stumbling upon this fact some months ago, has saved much vexation. Much of the Persian Insect Powder sold will not destroy insect life. This is owing to its adulteration or age. We tried two lots that did not even stupefy the flies, while with another, although it made them helpless, and they lay as if dead, after a time they regained their activity. In such a case it is best to sweep them up as soon as they fall to the floor.

CRAB APPLE PRESERVES.—One quart of water, two and a quarter pounds of loaf sugar, one lemon peel. Put two pounds of loaf sugar into a preserving pan, with the peel of a small lemon and a quart of water. Boil it till it becomes a thick syrup. Take some fine red crab apples with their stalks on, prick them with a needle, and put them into the syrup. When the skins begin to crack, take them carefully out, and drain them separately on a dish; add the rest of the sugar to the syrup, and boil it up again to thicken it; then take out the peel, put the apples into wide-mouthed bottles, and pour the syrup over them. When it is cool, tie down tight, to exclude the air.

AN item going the rounds of the papers lately that a castor bean plant placed in a room would rid it of flies, probably inspired very few people with any faith in its efficacy. Being always "open to conviction," I placed in my dining-room a castor bean plant that I had grown in a pot. The flies buzzed around it, alighted upon it, and were in no visible way affected by it.—Rural New Yorker.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THE DEACON'S CHERRIES.

"Cherries? I should say so! There's no end to 'em—trees are loaded and red's a burning bush. I was by there to-day."

It was an intensely eager voice, and Davy Kent, the speaker, ended his little speech with an expressive smack of the lips.

"He'd never miss the few we'd take, would he boys?" That was Ned Rodgers. It was upon a straw pile behind Mr. Rodgers' barn that the boys were holding an earnest consultation.

"Miss 'em? No, not if we took twice as many as we will."

"A bushel will be enough to treat the whole crowd, won't it?"

"Oh, any amount."

"Now, see here boys"—and Clem Goodrich lifted himself into a sitting posture and knitted his brows thoughtfully as he spoke, "I think—isn't this—doesn't it seem a little bit like stealing? Don't you suppose he'd give us a few if we were to ask him? It looks to me—"

"But right here Clem's mild voice was drowned in a roaring, boistrous chorus.

"It's not staling, me boy," said Con O'Brien, with the faintest brogue in the world; "it's only helping ourselves to a few cherries that otherwise might spoil for the want o' the picking, and so be wasted entirely. And if Deacon Gammon don't know it, he'll be none the wiser, for he's got piles and hapes more'n he can take care of. Ten to one he'll de obliged to us for helping him out a little—he isn't a bad old gintleman at heart, you know. And its for the fun of it as well as the aiting we take 'em, that's the truth."

"So 'tis," echoed a good many of the boys.

As for Clem, he gazed into Con's serious face doubtfully, yet, it must be coufessed, very willing to be convinced.

"I suppose you know best," said he, "you fellows that have lived here all your lives."

"Of course," laughed Jerry Parker. "Why, my father says he always plants an extra water melon for us boys as well as for the bugs."

So they reasoned away their doubts and made their plans; aud somehow, before the little party broke up, each boy had pretty nearly succeeded in pursuading himself that he would be doing the deacon a favor by helping him make away with a small portion of his fruit. All the same, Ned Rodgers couldn't resist a feeling of guilt, not unmingled with dread, when his father said at the tea-table that evening: "I wonder what Deacon Gammou thought of that mow of early cut timothy? He was up to look at it this afternoon."

Nobody could tell what the deacon thought of the hay, for nobody had seen him. But Ned was thinking that he would give something to know just at what time in the afternoon the deacon came to look at the hay-mow.

That is what he said to his friends when they met next night all ready for the proposed raid on the deacon's cherries. There were not a few blank faces in the little crowd when he told his story.

"He might have heard us if he was there when we were talking," said Ned, beating a lively tattoo on the bottom of his basket. "I don't say he did, but he might."

"Oh, pshaw!" exclaimed Con O'Brien. "The deacon's deaf a little, and I don't believe he could hear what we were a saying. Why didn't you go 'round, me boy, to the straw hape and see if you could hear yourself in the bar-rn?"

A shout went up at that, which to be sure, was exactly what Con wanted, since there is nothing better than a jolly sounding laugh to put a boy on good terms with himself and everybody else.

"It's all right," said he. "Come on, now, and don't you be afraid of nothin'."

Not a boy among them was afraid, but a good many of them couldn't keep their hearts from fluttering in a very queer way, when they came, with their baskets and bags, to the gap in Deacon Gammon's orchard wall. The orchard was near the house, and the cherry trees were scattered about among the apple trees in a hap-hazard fashion. The house looked dark and still.

"It's just as I told you," whispered Con O'Brien triumphantly. "The deacon and his wife have gone to prayer-mating; and the coast is clear. Look at 'em, me boys!"

They did more than look at the great, delicious, clustering cherries hanging from the boughs which bent low down with their weight. They pulled them by handfuls, and bags and baskets were rapidly filled.

"But there don't look to be any less'n there was when we begun," said Con, with a merry chuckle. "Now, boys, isn't this a big help to the old gintleman? He'd niver get away with 'em alone, sure."

There was no sound except the voices of the frogs in the marsh under the hill while the work went briskly on. It was when the boys were ready to leave that they heard a voice in the direction of the deacon's domicile:

"I don't know, but I'll walk out and see."

"It's ould Mrs. Gammon herself!" sounded Con's excited whisper. "Go for the gap, me boys, and don't spill your cherries over. Go, now!"

They were all ready to obey. Away they skurried, with long leaps, like frightened rabbits, through the orchard grass to the break in the wall. But they did not go beyond it. Up rose the deacon on the other side as cool—so Jerry Baker afterward said—as a frozen cucumber.

"Good evening, boys," said he. He took off his hat as he spoke, and by the light of the moon the boys could see that he was making a desperate effort to keep his face straight. "Now I'm—Hold on there! Stop!"

For Con and Ike Harris had started to run. They stopped, however. There was nothing else to do when the deacon spoke in that way, and they knew it.

"Let's see," said the deacon, reaching toward Ned Rogers' basket, which was forthwith handed over to him with great alacrity; "let's see how many you've got."

He examined every boy's load in turn and in silence, and all the while the boys looked into each other's faces without speaking. Oh! if the moon would but go under a cloud.

When the deacon had finished his inspection he spoke again, kindly, and with a pleasant smile:

"Now, boys, I'm much obliged to ye. I've laid out to go to town with a load o' truck to-morrow, and I was wonderin' how I'd get my cherries picked. I'm reely obliged to ye, and I'll be more so if ye'll carry 'em to the house for me."

Not a boy felt like disobeying. Not one but silently picked up his burden of cherries and marched along before the deacon and into the house.

"Let 'em right down here," directed Deacon Gammon, cheerily, "an' I'll see to 'em 'fore long. Now, boys, ye've worked consider'ble hard, an' you want some supper. Come in an' have some cherry pie an' cheese."

Every boy's face said he would rather die, and there was a sound of murmured negatives.

"Yes. you will," said the deacon; "you've worked well, an' deserve your supper. Right into the kitchen now, right in! Mother's awaitin' for ye.

So she was—kind, motherly Mrs. Gammon. And there was a table loaded with goodies waiting for them, too—sandwiches and plum cake and cherry pie and cherry tarts and cherries—cherries everywhere.

"Good evening," said Mrs. Gammon, beaming upon the boys.

"Take some chairs," ordered the deacon, behind them; "and set right up and have some cherry pie and seeh."

The boys wondered whether they were awake or dreaming as they filed shamefacedly past Mrs. Gammon, hats in hand, and took seats at the well-spread table.

"Now, help yourselves," said the deacon's wife. And each boy in his heart wondered if she knew, and hoped she didn't. But they helped themselves readily enough; and at length, between the deacon's funny stories and the delicious cherry pie they came as near enjoying themselves as was possible under the circumstances.

"You ain't eat scarcely anything," said the deacon, when the boys had finished their meal. "Have some cherries? Ho! ho! ho!"

"Now, father!" expostulated his wife mildly; and then the boys kuew she knew.

"I don't s'pose I'd ought to," said the deacon; and he walked to the head of the table, and stood there looking down at his young guests with a queer little smile. "I ain't much of a speechifier," said he, "but I want to ask you boys a question. Which would ye rather be when ye get ready to take your father's places, honest men or rogues?"

Every boy caught his breath. The old eight day clock in the corner ticked painfully loud.

"The man'll be about the same as the boy," went on the deacon. "Now, which'll you be, boys, rogues or honest men?"

"Hon—honest men," cried Con O'Brien.

Later on he said he couldn't help it, with the deacon looking at him in that anxious way; but he meant it all the same. And they all followed his lead, as they ever did, every boy.

"That's right," said Deacon Gammon; that's just right and we won't say another word about it."

"No, don't," said his wife.

But, after all, it was Con O'Brien who said the right thing in the right place as he picked up his basket, which wasn't entirely empty, in the porch.

"Whenever you want any help about picking your cherries, Deacon Gammon, call on us," said he. "We'll be sure to come when you send for us, and we won't before!"

"That's right," said the deacon; "that's right."

Then his eyes twinkled, as the boys filled out into the night. "Edward," said he to Ned Rogers, "tell your father that's the best mow of timothy I ever saw."

"It's just the way I thought," cried the boys, when they got out of the deacon's hearing, "just exactly."—Harper's Young People.

A DANGEROUS TOY.

The Fourth of July is close at hand, when the very air will crackle with reports of the toy pistol. It is so safe, many ignorant persons think, because it carries neither shot nor bullet.

As I tried it once, I can tell you about it. First, I twisted one of the caps around a match, and set the match on fire. When the flame reached the paper cap there was a little explosion. Suddenly I felt a stinging sensation in my hand, and, on looking at it, I found several tiny black splinters sticking in the skin. I pulled them out, but I felt the pain for some time afterward. Then I placed a cap on the hearth and struck it with a hammer. This time I was well scared, and kept my hands as far away as I could. When it went off I felt the same stinging sensation in my left hand, which was more tnan two feet away. I had been struck again by a flying splinter. This thing was getting decidedly dangerous, and when I took up the pistol to try it, I carefully wrapped my right hand in my handkerchief. It went off beautifully, but—ah! There was the mischief! The handkerchief was dotted here and there with the black splinters from the exploded cap.

The insane desire of the small boy to carry a pistol is one of the wonders of the age; and the worse than folly of those who allow him to do so is almost incredible. Of what use is it? If the pistol will not go off, it is, as its owner would scornfully express it, "no good." If it does go off, it is a dangerous weapon that has power to maim and kill.

Did you ever think what it means to kill—to take away life? Who shall do so dire and terrible a thing as that? Are you fit to have a pistol Are you wise enough to carry a revolver? No, sir. It is against the law in some States to carry pistols. Why, then, should you wish a toy pistol, that will shoot nothing but the boy who holds it? If you live in the backwoods, and have to fight the terrible wild crow or the ferocious chipmunk, you may learn to use a good rifle. In cities and towns, where the most terrific wild beasts to be seen are the cats, a boy who carries a pistol is a boy without sense—a boy whom girls despise and brave boys call a coward.—From St. Nicholas for July.

TEMPERANCE.

EFFECT OF TOBACCO ON MAN AND ANIMALS.

Dr. Lebon, of Paris, has given a great deal of attention to the question of the effect of tobacco upon man or animals, and has lately presented a report on the subject to the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Liege. Among the conclusions which the author has reached in the course of his researches, the following may be mentioned as most important: 1st. Smokers, and persons who without smoking are enveloped in an atmosphere of tobacco smoke, absorb a portion of nicotine varying from some centigrammes to a gramme. They absorb also about an equal amount of ammonia. 2d. The quantity of tobacco consumed daily by a single individual addicted to its use is scarcely less than twenty grammes. A smoker is, therefore, liable to absorb daily a quantity of nicotine which may reach twenty-five centigrammes with an equal proportion of ammonia. 3d. Of all kinds of smoking the most dangerous is that of smoking a cigar or cigarette and swallowing the smoke; the least dangerous is that of smoking a nargile, or pipe with a long tube, in the open air. 4th. The effect produced by the result of the condensation of tobacco smoke is analogous to that nicotine. Nevertheless there must be added the effects produced by the ammonia, which the smoke contains in considerable quantity. 5th. The resinous semi-liquid which condenses in the interior of the pipe contains a considerable proportion of nicotine. It is little less poisonous than nicotine itself, aud rapidly destroys the life of animals exposed to its action. 6th. The liquid product which condenses in the lungs and mouth of the smoker contains water, ammonia, nicotine, fatty and resinous bodies, and coloring matters. A dose of one drop of this speedily produces paralysis of motion in small animals, and a state of apparent death. These effects quickly disappear, but death actually supervenes if the dose is carried up to several drops. If, instead of administering the liquid internally, the animal is made to breathe it for some time, it dies all the same. In this last case the effects seem due in a great measure to the presence of ammonia. 7th. In a dose of a single drop dangerous results are not produced upon large animals, but those of small size are killed instantaneously. Among the effects observed the most constant fibrillar tremblings, a general congestion of the superficial vessels, stupor, and especially the tetaniform contraction of the muscles of the abdomen. 8th. Nicotine is one of the poisons the effect of which is most speedily dissipated and the habituation to which is soonest accomplished. 9th. Contrary to what has generally been assumed, the vapor of nicotine at the ordinary temperature is not dangerous, but it is quite otherwise if the liquid is carried to ebullition. It then produces palpitations, a decided suffocation, precordial pain and vertigo. Smaller animals exposed to this vapor die almost instantaneously. 10th. Among the effects of tobacco smoke upon man may be mentioned: in all small doses, excitation of the intellectual faculties for the moment. In repeated doses it produces palpitations, trouble of vision, and more especially a decrease of the memory, and particularly the memory of words.—Harper's Magazine.

The Legislature of Vermont has passed a bill forbidding the use of tobacco by teachers and pupils in public schools.

At the recent yearly meeting of Friends, Joseph Shortledge said: "I am interested in the education of youth, and I had a boy about sixteen who had delirium tremens from the use of tobacco."

The University Magazine (Dublin) utters this warning to parents about their boys: "The mental power of many a boy is certainly weakened by tobacco smoking. The brain, under its influence, can do less work, and the dreary feeling which is produced tends to idleness."

Referring to the deadly effects of cigarette smoking, a San Francisco physician says: "Leprosy has not a few victims among the whites. Especially is it revealing itself about the lips and tongues of boys who smoke cheap cigarettes made by Chinese lepers." The same physician says that he knows of 170 cases of this character, the majority being Chinese.

Prof. D. S. Reynolds, in an address to the graduating class at the College of Medicine at Louisville, Ky., said: "A species of blindness, not complete but partial, sufficiently great to destroy the reading of ordinary type, results from the use of tobacco. I know a number of persons in Louisville who are now practically blind from excessive use of tobacco."

THE CHURCHES.

—Mr. Moody it is reported may yet engage in evangelistic work in Boston this summer, with vigorous help from the Young Men's Christian Association.

—A Wesleyan mission has been started in Arkansas by J. A. Robinson, of Tennessec.

—Major Whittle being too unwell to fill his appointments at the Moody church in this city on Saturday and Sabbath, Pres. C. A. Blanchard was engaged to speak at those services.

—Rev. E. J. Grinnell, of Blairsburg, Iowa, had the great satisfaction of dedicating a new Wesleyan church June 18th all paid for and no raising of funds on the occasion.

—Bro. D. A. Richards has returned to Michigan from California whither he went as Wesleyan missionary at his own charges some three years ago. He organized the work, and left a small but hopeful body of Wesleyans to carry it on.

—Ben Hogan, the reformed pugilist, whose work in Gospel has been quite successful in Chicago, is drawing great crowds to his meetings at Denver.

—The Circuit Court has decided in the case of the Reformed church building at Grand Rapids, Mich., that it properly belongs to the body that withdrew their relation from the General Synod because of the sympathy of that body with Freemasonry.

—A society "to perpetuate the memory and to foster and promote the principles and virtues of the Hugnenots," has been formed in New York, through the efforts of Mr. John Jay, Rev. A. V. Wittmeyer and others.

—Bishop Whipple, when on a recent visitation to the Indian department of the missionary diocese administered the communion to 247 Chippewa Indians. There are eight churches in Chippewa mission. One just being built will cost $10,000.

—Rev. Dr. Joseph Parker, pastor of the City Temple, London, has this year been elected Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. He received 655 votes out of 981. The Union jubilee fund has reached £243,000 ($1,215,000), and a large subscription is promised from Wales. It is said that nearly balf of the $2,500,000 indebtedness resting on the Congregational churches of England and Wales, when the Jubilee movement was inaugurated, will be paid off before the movement closes. The Church Aid Society of the Union assisted 727 churches last year, with grants varying from $200 to $19,000.

—An independent church movement was instituted in Indianapolis Thursday evening by the formal organization of a People's church, which includes about 600 representative people of the city, who will at once build a large tabernacle, where seats will be free and a free gospel dispensed. The Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, formerly of Detroit, was called to the pulpit at a salary of not less than $3,000. The movement is an outgrowth of the troubles between Dr. Pierson and the Second Presbyterian church, a large and fashionable organization, over which he presided until recently. About 100 members of the congregation went out with him, and the Third church entire has gone into the movement, which is causing much feeling in religious circles here.

—Eight of the young Chinamen who studied in this country are now taking a medical course in the hospital at Tientsin, conducted by Mr. Mackenzie, of the London Missionary Society. Dr. Mackenzie just now is absent on account of impaired health, and Dr. Atterbury, of the Presbyterian Mission, is in charge. The hospital was established by the gifts of the Viceroy, Li Hung Chung, and other high officials.

—The revival at Adana in Asiatic Turkey continues, and reports of an awakening come from Tarsus and Hajin, in the Taurus mountains,

—It is reported that there are 277 Sunday-schools in King's county, N. Y., of various denominations, exclusive of Jewish and Roman Catholic. There are thirty-two mission chapels supported by the different churches. There are nearly 220,000 youths between the age of five and twenty-one years in the county, of whom not over one-half are in the Sunday-school.

—The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of the Dominion of Canada, of which the Rev. Dr. Cochrane, Brantford, is moderator, met in London, Ont., on the 13th ints. It embraces thirty-six Presbyteries, four Synods; has within its bounds eight hundred pastoral charges, and according to its last report, 114 vacancies, 700 ordained ministers, 1,524 churches, 68,208 families, 113,977 communicants, and a total Presbyterian population of 676,-165. Total revenue last year $1,409,748, or an increase of $164,250 over the year previous.

—The combats in Africa between the people of Stanley and the natives have arrested the advance of the missionaries of the Livingstone Inland Mission. After having gone fifty kilometres beyond their station, they were obliged to found a new station upon the Loukounga in the midst of a population always well disposed toward them. Also the missionaries of this mission have decided not to establish themselves at Stanley Pool, and have actually gone to work in the region near their stations, fifty or sixty kilometres apart, over an extent of 170 kilometres. During the five years in which they have lived there they have never had a quarrel with the natives, who respect them and confide their children to them. They have learned the language of the country, prepared many pupils to become teachers, and found the natives eager to furnish them the products of the country, and at their service for porters along the route from one station to the other.

—A conference made up of representatives of all the stations of the American Board in Turkey was lately held in Constantinople attended also by two or three representatives of the Prudential Committee of the Board. Dr. George Washburn, President of Robert College in the same city, writes to the Independent that "The most important question diseussed related to the co-operation of the missionaries and the native churches in their work. There was no difference of opinion in regard to the general principle that the fullest co-operation was essential now, and that at the earliest moment possible the whole work should be given over to the native churches, the missionaries either withdrawing or turning their attention to other races. They unanimously requested the Prudential Committee to modify any by-laws of the Board which might stand in the way of giving the churches their full share in the control of the work." The Independent says editorially respecting some facts developed at this conference: "It is by no means a source of difficulty in most other fields that the Native Christians desire to take more of the responsibility of missionary work than the missionaries deem it proper to surrender to them. On the contrary, the question of self-dependence, self-support, and aggressiveness is one of vast difficulty in China and India, and a process of careful education and stimulation is necessary. That the Evangelical Armenians are not only willing to provide for their own church, and, to a considerable extent, educational matters, hut are anxious to labor for the extension of these blessings to other communities, does not augur ill for the future of Evangelical Christianity in Turkey."

—Moslems in Turkey are often led into secret questionings and gropings after religious truth, and these hidden experiences only accidentally come to the knowledge of the missionaries. An example of this kind is that of a Moslem who fell under the influence of an older man, also a Moslem, but a victim of French infidelity. The young man was told by his friend that all scientific men and all men of intellect throughout the civilized world have abandoned religion as superstition. There is no life to come, no accountability for deeds done in the body, no God. But this young man one day found his friend sick to the point of death, and was utterly amazed to find him saying to himself: "Oh God! Oh God!" The young man asked at once: "How is it that, after teaching me that there is no God, you now make use of his name?" "Ah!" replied the dying man, "my heart was full of him all the time, and I did not know it. Only now the truth has begun to come out!" That death-bed scene settled once for all the mind of the young Moslem as to whether he could follow his French masters in trying to live without God.

THE REFORMED CHURCH AND ITS LATE DELIVERANCE.

The General Synod of the Reformed church met lately at Albany, N. Y. The question of fellowshipping the devil-worship of the lodge again came up in the overture from the Wisconsin classis, and the Synod took more pronounced action than that of two years ago, but the "suggestion" of the Synod was exaggerated into "denunciation" when the reporters got hold of it, and it has been so published to the world. The Christian Intelligencer has the following version of the matter, hut is too sensitive altogether when it judges that the matter will work injury to the denomination. The reporters translated the action as it should be, and will we hope soon appear on the records of the body:

"Who sent the telegraphic dispatch of the Associated Press from Albany in regard to the action of the Synod on Masonry? We are ready to prove that the action was made plain to a reporter or reporters who had received an incorrect version of the resolution adopted. We believe that there has been in this matter a deliberate design to make a misrepresentation that would work to the injury of the church.

"The despatch sent to the press of the country was this: 'ALBANY, June 12th.—The General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church of America to-day passed resolutions denunciatory of Masonry and other oath-bound orders, and cautioning all churches of the Synod to discourage their members from joining secret societies.'

"The Synod did not denounce Masonry and oath-bound orders. The action adopted by it was as follows: 'Resolved, 2d. That we suggest to members of the Church that out of regard to the facts that membership in Masonic and other orders gives offence to many Christian consciences, and has become a fruitful source of injurious agitation and division in the Church, they, in accordance with the law of Christian love, refrain from connection with such societies.'

"The Synod with eminent propriety placed the matter under the great law of Christian charity: 'If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.'

"Was it intended by some one to punish the Synod for adopting a resolution disapproving of the publication of newspapers on the Sabbath?"

The Dutch bretbren of the West, members of the Reformed church, sent up their annual request on the subject of Freemasonry, which leads the Intelligencer to ask if they "know what an exceedingly unimportant matter this is to a very large majority of the members of the church? If it were not for their importunate requests to have Masonry reprobated the most of us would hardly know that there are such persons as Freemasons." It also says "it would be difficult to find another organization exerting so little influence upon public opinion," and that, managing its "own internal affairs," it "never interferes with our political, social or religious life." This suggests a guilelessness that in this energetic age is rarely encountered. If Masonry does not "interfere with our political life," to say nothing of its other obvious influences, it would be hard to say what does.—United Presbyterian.

LETTER FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

CAPE TOWN, April 30th, 1883.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—Your letter has been received, containing the sum of $8, as a present to us. The Lord bless the donors though we do not know who they are. As it has been given to the Lord, so he certainly will reward them. The money came just in time, as we had to use it for paying rent, and buying seats for religious meetings. The Lord is still blessing us, even in temporal things, providing us continually with the necessaries of life, witholding no good thing from us. We rejoice in telling what the Lord is doing for us. Trusting in God is not in vain. You ask whether we want more Anti-masonic tracts and books. The previous lot we received on reasonable terms, namely gratuitously, and in this way we can hardly refuse it, especially since we have to live entirely by free will offerings. The former books are nearly gone, some on Oddfellowship remaining. The tracts we distribute as opportunity is offered. Last night we gave away almost 200 tracts in a meeting of the Salvation Army, which has been working here for a few months, with good success in conversion of sinners. This work may have glorious results in this wicked place. Our daughter Jessie, six years of age, had received some money from America, for which we let her buy tracts, unless otherwise directed, which she rejoices very much to distribute, praying for a blessing on her work. The thought occurred to me that in each religious tract an Anti-masonic one might be folded, and so I did, which have been given away together by her last night in the Salvation Army meeting, intending to report it soon, as being an excellent means of making known the nature of Masonry all over town. Thus accompanied by a religious tract the work assumes more a religious appearance to them.

I constantly pray the Lord may destroy the secret societies in S. Africa, and such prayer should be accompanied by appropriate work. By this practice I will likely incur the hatred of many, and believe have already suffered in reputation on account of it, but such must be borne for the Lord's sake. Satan does not like to he disturbed.

We have at present a small but convenient house, in the neighborhood of the people amongst whom we labor. and intend to hold meetings in our own house, having seats for about fifty people. For a few months we have already kept a meeting on sanctification in our house, attended by from ten to fifteen young white men, but now in co-operation with some of these we intend to commence meetings for the colored people also. The Lord has helped in getting seats for this purpose, and we pray and trust he will prosper the work itself too. The work of the Salvation Army reaches many of the neglected class of the white population, but the colored, understanding mostly the Dutch language only, remain untouched by them, among whom we will try to labor, in a somewhat similar manner as they do. The Lord is yet prospering me in faith healing. Being formerly instantly healed myself by the Lord, of consumption, in answer to my prayer, I have the desire of making my fellow men partakers of the same blessing, in which the Lord helps me to succeed remarkably. Gradually the Lord performs greater wonders by my hands. I have got a manuscript ready in English, of about forty cases of cure, chiefly among the Mohammedans, which I have a desire to publish if the Lord pleases to furnish the means.

A remarkable cure happened a few days ago. The owner of our house lives next door to us, and they are a nice Christian family. His wife has been afflicted for a couple of years with fits, returning about every fortnight or oftener. A few days ago the disease attacked her again. She got it on two successive days, and the last time so bad that they were afraid she would not come over it. They had heard about my healing by the prayer of faith; wherefore they called me in to pray for her, which I did. She at the time was lying unconscious. They having shown much sympathy with us, I felt especially anxious the Lord should restore her at once, on on account of which I prayed the more earnestly. At the close of my short prayer I commanded her healing in the name of Christ, and just at this very moment she arose, being perfectly well. She had talked over the subject of healing by faith with her husband, hut he did hardly believe in it at the present day, taking for granted, as is generally done, that the age of miracles is past, though they return with the faith that produces them. She at once said, "Husband what do you say now?" She asked him to lead in thanksgiving to the lord for her immediate cure, but he was too much overwhelmed to do it.

Her eldest son then did it. We had a glorious time together. She at once left the bed, perfectly sound in body and mind. Otherwise, after these fits she felt very bad for a couple of days, but now there is nothing of the kind. I believe her to be cured for good. How glorious are the works of the Lord.

Yours in the Lord. WM. HAZENBERG.

THE FOUNDERS OF NIHILISM.

THE TWO MEN WHO INAUGURATED THE REIGN OF TERROR IN RUSSIA.

The Milwaukee Sentinel says that Tchernicheffsky and Bakunine may be considered the founders of Russian nihilism. The former was its theorist, the latter its apostle and standard-bearer. Like Dostoyeffsky, Nekrassoff and many other Russian general, Tchernicheffsky's name became known and his works appreciated only after his departure from the land of the living to Siberia, the land of the dead. Prior to his arrest and exile, in the year 1864, he was heard of alone in a few St. Petersburg student coteries, and perhaps in the office of the third section of the police! He was nothing more than an erratic student, who passed his spare time in writing essays on political economy and fantastic novels. One of these, which may be considered the chief cause of his transportation, depicted student life in St. Petersburg, and glorified political and social license in its worst form, upholding both communism and free love.

All his works were afterwards published by his co-religionists, and, more than the ravings of Bakunine, and the plotting of the exiles in London and Geneva, they helped to fan the flame of fanaticism that has culminated in the present terrible condition of things in the Czar's empire. About two years ago the report was circulated that Tchernicheffsky had succumbed to the rigors of his exile, and the whole revolutionary world was plunged into mourning. Six months later the Governor of Irkutsk himself took the trouble to deny the fact, and joy succeeded sorrow. An effort was then made to secure the veteran's pardon, but in consequence of the continual plottings of the fraternity in Russia, the Czar turned a deaf ear to all entreaties. Tchernicheffsky is now about fifty years of age.

CROP REPORT FOR 1882.

The Statistician of the Agricultural Department, Professor J. R. Dodge, has prepared a revised compilation of the crop statistics for 1882, which will be particularly interesting just now, when it is remembered how the croakers had the crops all ruined last spring, as they have them annihilated now. The total wheat crop for 1882 is finally figured up at 502,798,600 bushels, against 380,280,000 for 1881, and 459,476,505 for 1879. The corn crop for 1882 is put at 1,624,917,800 bushels, for 1881 at 1,199,916,000 bushels, and for 1879 1,794,861,535. The crop for 1879 and 1881 are given for comparison. A reference to the newspaper files of a year ago reveals mournful accounts of heavy frosts, cold rain, winter-killed wheat, and corn which had rotted and was being replanted, just the same as now. The official figures of the outcome last year are given in order that the value of predictions may be estimated. It may be well also relative to exports, which shows that this item is not so large as sometimes supposed. According to the Bureau of Statistics the export of wheat and wheat flour for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, was 40¼ per cent of the crop; for the year ending June 30, 1881, it was 37½ per cent of the crop; and for the year ending June 30, 1882, was 31 1-5 per cent. The average for the past sixteen years has been about 25 per cent. It is obvious that a foreign demand for one-quarter of the crop cannot fix the price, but the home demand for the three-quarters. With reference to the present crop harvested in 1882, the export up to the end of February, according to the Bureau of Statistics, was but 88,300,407 bushels of wheat, 6,372,103 barrels of flour, 14,685,160 bushels of corn, and 165,307 of corn meal.

BUSINESS.

THE BATAVIA CONVENTION MINUTES.

A correspondent writing of the grand addresses in this pamphlet says:

"Let me call particular attention to the address of our noble banner-bearer, the candidate for the suffrages of the nation, under the title "Christian politics." This admirable and timely paper is one which will open blind eyes to the causes of the war and future dangers and ought not to be merely read and shelved. It is like LIVE SEED; Let every reader get and sow it abundantly, and scatter it abroad through every State, and for every year, until victory shall crown our efforts to place a representative of our principles in the Presidential chair of the United States! Print and reprint and circulate in tens of thousands or millions! Our people are intoxicated with national prosperity, and are disregarding "the higher law." In every age the multitude is led more by the senses than by the unseen, but the Ruler of the universe brings to naught things that are by the things that are not! The things that are right and pure are eternal, and in the grand war must finally overcome the cunning and craft of every system like Freemasonry.

FULL OF GRAND IDEAS.

"Masonry and Mormonism are political engines with religious driving wheels. Their conductors are kings; their engineers, priests; their motive power, popular depravity combined with popular conscience, and their practical end is the luxury and power of leaders who form men's interests for eternity that they may tax and govern them in time."

The above is a sample of the vigorous and striking thoughts, the grand ideas of which the pamphlet on the Batavia Convention is full. Get this book by all means. Price, post paid, 25 cents each.

"HOLDEN WITH CORDS."

A fine recommendation of this wonderful book appears in the Lutheran Standard of Columbus, Ohio. Read the notice and send to the N. C. Association for a copy. Price in cloth $1; paper 50 cents.

"The title well characterizes the book. It is a serial that appeared in the Christian Cynosure, and was so warmly appreciated that it has been issued in book form. This is richly deserved. It is one of the most fascinating narratives we ever read, and teaches its lesson in a manner not soon to be forgotten. It is evidently written for the heart and its words go to the heart. It is singularly free from wild denunciation, and its occasional defects in English grammar and style do not materially detract from its value. Those who are interested in the secret society question would do well to form the acquaintance of this interesting work."

FARM NOTES.

THE "POTATO ROT."

Dr. B. D. Halsted gives a valuable article in the American Agriculturist for April, from which we clip the following:

One of the most destructive diseases of cultivated plants is the "wet rot" in potatoes. The "rot" is dne to the growth of a microscopic fungns (Peronospora infestans) that infests the potato plant in all its parts. This destructive parasite is closely related to the grape mildew fungns, so familiar in many American vineyards. The fungns makes its appearance in frost-like patches upon the under side of the potato leaves, soon causing the foliage to curl, turn brown and die. The stems are next attacked, and throngh them the disease passes down to the tubers, where the destructive work is completed.

The "rot" plant consists of a multitude of minute threads that rnn in all directions through the substance of the potato plant. These fine filaments rob the surronnding tissne of its nonrishment, and induce a rapid decay.

The "rot" usnally appears in midsummer, and is associated with rain—"mnggy" weather being favorable for its development. Early and quick-growing varieties of potatoes are recommended when practicable, as they are mnch more likely to be ripe before the pest makes its appearance. Much has been said about "rot-proof" sorts, but knowing that the disease is caused by the fungus, the development of which is favored by moist, warm weather, and hindered by the opposite, there is little hope of finding a kind that will differ so much from others as to be disease-proof. In England prizes have been offered to enconrage the work of finding out the sorts of potatoes best able to withstand the attacks of the fungus, and elaborate experiments have been carried out without any satisfactory positive results.

The farmer shonld be on the watch for the appearance of the disease, and harvest the crop as soon as possible after the tronble is found in the field. This may prevent the fungns from reaching the tubers. After digging, the potatoes shonld be placed in a dry and cool place, thns providing the most unfavorable conditions for the development of the disease. As a precaution against the propagation of the fungus, it is well to gather and burn all the old vines after digging, thus destroying the multitudes of spores that may have formed. Any tubers that are affected should be thrown out, and either fed to stock or burned. One diseased potato may commnnicate the "rot" to a whole heap or bin.

PUSSLEY OR PURSLANE.

With the hot days comes the weed, which calls for active and thorough work. Those who are particnlar as to their speech, call it purslane, bnt every gardener knows it as "pnssley." The weeds of earlier months could be kept in subjection, when small, merely by the use of a rake; when nprooted, they wonld shrivel and die. Give pnssley this treatment and it does not die at all, bnt takes root anew, and thrives all the better for the transplanting. Nothing but hoeing up and carting off will answer. Though such a pest, it has its uses. Pigs are fond of, and will thrive upon it, and it is excellent green food for poultry. Indeed it is not to be despised as a table vegetable, when cooked and dressed like peas, with milk and butter. Did it not force itself upon us, we should no doubt cultivate it with as mnch care as do the French gardeners, who, besides the common form, have three distinct varieties, the "Green," the "Golden," and the "Large-leaved" Pourpier, which is the French for "Pnssley."—American Agriculturist.

VINES AND BUGS.

For the last five years I have not lost a cucumber or melon vine or cabbage plant. Get a barrel with a few gallons of gas-tar in it; pour water on the tar; always have it ready when needed; and when the bngs appear, give them a liberal drink of the tar-water from a garden sprinkler or otherwise, and if the rain washes it off and they return, repeat the dose. It will also destroy the Colorado potato beetle, and frighten the old long potato-bng worse than a thrashing with a brush. Five years ago this summer both kinds appeared on my late potatoes, and I watered with the tar-water. The next day all Colorados' that had not been well protected from the sprinkling were dead; and the others, thongh their name is legion, were all gone, and I have never seen one of them on the farm since. I am aware that many will look upon this with indifference, becanse it is so cheap and simple a remedy. Such should always feed both their own and their neighbors' bngs, as they frequently do.—Chicago Tribune.

BROAD TIRES.—The question of the effect of cart and wagon tires on roadways is one which, while it has received a great deal of attention in the Old World, has never received that attention which its importance merits in this country. Among practical road-builders there, the fact that if the width of the tire be above a certain standard the traffic to a great measure ceases to be detrimental to roadways, has long been well known. The tolls are collected on this basis in England—the narrower the tire of the vehicle the larger is the amount of toll it must pay, while in Paris, noted through the whole world for her splendid pavements, no heavy draught cart or wagon is allowed to traverse the streets unless its wheels are of a certain width.

HOW TO CATCH A CHICKEN.—Take a heavy wire, bend it like a hair-pin, only four times as large, tie to the end of a long, light pole, and hook it over the foot of the chicken you want to catch. This is in case yon want to catch it in the day-time, when at large.—Farm Journal.

DR. JOHN BULL'S
Smith's Tonic Syrup
FEVER and AGUE
Or CHILLS and FEVER.
AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

[From the Wayne County Herald, Wooster, O.]

"This story, published as a serial in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE, was so warmly appreciated that it is now presented to the public in a more attractive form.

The story is intensely interesting, and the author has succeeded in weaving into it a great deal of information in regard to this mysterious order which is certainly startling if true, and he gives what seems to be undoubted evidence to prove his assertions. The book is one which should be read by both Masons and Anti-masons."

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are
COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing
FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doesburg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry 15 cents each: per dozen $1.25.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—At Fort Smith, Friday, Martin Joseph, William H. Finch, and Tualista, an Indian, were hanged for murders committed at different times. George Lake, a negro, was executed for felonious assault at Cambridge, Md., and Toney James, colored, paid the extreme penalty at Darien, Ga., for killing a man in a drunken brawl.

—In the past week there were 165 business failures in the United States, being thirteen less than the preceding week, but twelve more than in the corresponding period in 1882. For the half year just ended the failures have numbered 4,637, with total liabilities of $66,000,000; while in the same time last year the total suspensions were 2,597, and the liabilities aggregated $30,000,000.

—Fire broke out in J. H. Ashdown's hardware store at Winnipeg, Manitoba, Friday which consumed the structure and caused the explosion of several kegs of gunpowder. The detonation shivered the windows of one hundred shops and residences, shook the town to its center, and sent burning brands flying in all directions. Many persons, chifly members of the fire brigade, were burned or crushed by falling timbers, the wounds from which will prove fatal.

—The cold weather of March ruined the peach crop of North Carolina. Twelve inches of snow the last day of March was a stunner to the people of the old North State.

—The second excitement on the Brooklyn bridge was occasioned by three rnnaway camels which, frightened by the electric lights, broke from their leaders and tore frantically across the bridge to the great terror of a man who was driving his cart in the line of flight.

—One of the California "big trees" was named for our own Miss Willard since her visit to Calaveras not long ago. It was a sequoia gigantea about 800 years of age. It was christened by Mr. Brandt, of Des Moines, Iowa. He put a marble slab on the tree, with the temperance a postle's name inscribed thereon.

—Since the disavowal of any political scheme in the proposed National Convention of colored men to be held in September, and the change of place for holding the same from Washington to Louisville, the responses for the call for the meeting are more general, and the projectors think it will be an important event in the history of the colored race in the United States.

—A terrible affray occurred at Curragh, Ireland, Sunday evening, between North Mayo and Dublin militiamen. The trouble originated in a gambling dispute during which the Mayo men called the Dublin men "Careys" and "Invincibles." The fight lasted over an hour, each side using stones and firearms freely. The conflict was only quelled by the officers threatening to fire upon the men The latest report in regard to the affray at Curragh is that seventeen men were wounded, but no one was killed.

—News of a frightful calamity at a place of amusement in the town of Dervio, on the shore of Lake Como, has been received. While a performance was in progress at a puppet theatre at that place the structure took fire and was entirely destroyed. Forty-seven persons lost their lives and twelve others were injured. The show was held in a hall over a tavern. Sparks from a Bengal light set fire to some straw and firewood. The audience disregarded the cry of "Fire!" thinking it was part of the play, and when the alarm was raised outside the hall. it was thought an affray had arisen in the street, and the door was barred with a heavy table. Forty-seven charred corpses were afterwards found near the table, mostly of women and children.

—A dispatch from Bradford, Pa., says: "About 3 o'clock this morning a coal train, with a passenger car attached, on the Rochester and Pittsburg Railroad, broke in two while going up a steep grade near Rasselas, a few miles south of Kinzua viaduct. The severed section, consisting of seven heavily loaded coal cars and a passenger coach, immediately started down the steep grade, and while going at the frightful speed of eighty miles an hour, collided with the engine of an approaching coal train. The passenger car was well filled, and the destruction of life and limb was appalling, seven having already died from injuries, and others fatally hurt.

—At Milwaukee Saturday afternoon, a runaway horse dashed into a procession of school children, on to the sidewalk which was crowded with spectators. One little girl was killed, and several persons were trampled underfoot by the frantic brute.

—A New York paper publishes in an interview with a member of the Irish Republican Brotherhood, who states that Lord Chief Justice Coleridge of England has been sentenced to death by that society for the manner in which he conducted the recent trial of the dynamite conspirators.

—Lord Randolph Churchill on Saturday handed Gladstone affidavits and other documents in support of his assertion that the Khedive incited the massacre at Alexandria.

—England has addressed France a note hoping for an amicable settlement of the Tonquin question. A Russian organ at Brussels say that country is unwilling to mediate between France and China.

—Earthquakes and volcanic outbursts in Central and South America continue to occur with unusual frequency. Within the last six months the disturbances of this nature along the chain of the Andes have been remarkable. Last winter there were many earthquake shocks in Central America, and during one of them a small island sank out of sight. About the same time news came that Lake Titicaca was drying up in a surprising manner. Other earthquake shocks followed, destroying villages and doing other damage. Next the volcano of Ometepe, in Lake Nicaragua, suddenly burst into eruption for the first time since the discovery of America. Recently there has been a violent earthquake in Ecuador, and the great volcano of Cotopaxi has begun to hurl forth smoke, ashes, and melted rock. The latest disturbance is a sharp shock of earthquake felt along the coast of Chili the other day.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his NAME to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT to it.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

Postmaster General Gresham has given a very important decision respecting the use of the mails by lottery companies. November 13, 1879, Mr. Key, then Postmaster General, prohibited the delivery of money orders and registered letters to the Louisiana lottery company, an institution officered by such men as Beauregard and backed up by the Chicago Times, Journal and Inter Ocean. The company took their grievance to the Supreme Court and the operation of the order was suspended for the time being. The lottery company finally withdrew from the court, and aimed to go on with their business. They employed the ablest counsel to manage for them with the department but the decision is against them. Mr. Gresham in his statement says: "The controlling, indeed, the only question in the case, was the constitutional power of Congress to enact the statute. Upon that question I have no doubt. The Supreme Court in ex parte, Jackson, 96, U. S., 727, has affirmed the constitutionality of section 3,894, which, as amended by the act of July 12, 1876, declares that 'no letter or circular concerning lotteries, so-called gift concerts, or any similar enterprises offering prizes shall be carried in the mails.' In view of this decision the constitutionality of the sections applicable to the case cannot be seriously questioned."

Dennis Kearney has repudiated the Anti-monopolists. In a speech in Market street on Sabbath afternoon to a considerable crowd of curious and sympathizing listeners he cauterized the McCormick's Hall conference with a severe hand. The Chicago Socialists have also expressed their disapproval of the work done by the conference. Without saying whether Kearney's blistering charges are true, it is safe to congratulate the conference in disposing of such an Ishmael as he. There is one marked omission in the platform of principles issued from the convention—nothing is said of the co-operation of workingmen with capitalists in managing extensive business enterprises. Perhaps the frequent failures of such co-operation in this country has made the idea unpopular, and even to be regarded as not practicable. If this is so, it is probably as much the fault of one side as the other. Such co-operative companies have been successful with us when Christian charity and forbearance had control. They are also highly successful in England. A notable instance has just occurred. The great printing house of Cassell, Petter and Galpin of London, the largest in that city, with branch houses in New York and Paris; has been reorganized on the co-operative basis. The workmen of the establishment have purchased shares worth $200,000. If this experiment shall prove that co-operation in conducting the intricate business of a great publishing house can be successful the working people of the world will owe a debt of gratitude to the managers under whom it is achieved.

Our barbaric Fourth of July customs resulted in Chicago, say the papers, in the death of two men, one suicide, four mortally injured, two drowned, and some sixty persons more or less seriously injured. There were also thirty-two fire alarms, but the good attention of the fire department cut down the loss to $15,000. These accidents and fatalities were generally caused by pistols, fire crackers and rockets in the hands of small boys. The city Council being in the humor for licensing all sorts of nefarious business allowed the greatest liberty with fireworks, on the same principle as the same body sold out to the saloons. "Let the boys enjoy themselves," was the word which many a household remembers in bitter tears. Twenty boys and young men were arrested for shooting within the city limits, but had no other punishment than the confiscation of a bushel of pistols. Our papers declaim against the evil. One of them says: "It is the most stupid and disagreeable thing the American people ever do. It is Chinese in its origin, vapid and bombastic in its method, puerile and empty in its meaning, and pernicious in its effects." In rare cases local authorities take notice of it and attempt a weak suppression. But there is not generally a strong manifestation of public disapproval, which shall stamp the whole business as un-American, barbarous and a nuisance. Parents and teachers have a duty in imparting nobler ideas of our American system, and in providing entertaining, wholesome and truly patriotic pleasures for the young on our national holiday, which shall displace the vulgar taste for burning powder.

Alexander of Russia, it is said, was during the lifetime of his father a progressive in politics, which is quite a fashion with the Crown Princes of Europe. He went so far as to be somewhat familiar with the Panslavistic secret organizations of Russia, and this association was the occasion of some painful differences between himself and the Czar. It became evident, however, that these organizations were one with the Nihilists, and when the independence of the Slavic races south of the Danube was superseded by the desire for a constitutional reform in Russia with the destruction of the Czar as its central feature, the young man broke off all communication with every description of secret society in and out of Russia, and fell back upon the conservative policy which his father's advisers had marked out for the preservation of the authority which he has inherited. It would be a source of gratification to learn that the Prince of Wales had exercised as much good sense and sloughed off the Masonic gewgaws, blasphemy and unholy bonds, for the same reason, if he can find none better. The organizations that seek the overthrow of British institutions are in principle and spirit so closely identified with the lodge of which he is the head that a sense of honor at least should lead him into other company.

The aggressive spirit of France in seizing upon the feebly protected countries of the East, has received a rebuke from England that must not be unnoticed. When it was learned that the government of Queensland, a British colony occupying the whole of the northeastern part of Australia, had annexed the great island of New Guinea, there were many misgivings, since the protest of England against the course of France would be rendered void. The action, therefore, of the home government in repudiating the annexation as illegal, not warranted by policy and certain to be resisted by the natives, must be hailed with satisfaction throughout Christendom. We are beginning to learn that it is no longer necessary to subjugate a country in order to secure its trade, or introduce the influences of civilization.

The late Republican convention in Iowa gives heart to the cause of prohibition throughout the land. By a decided majority constitutional prohibition was again put on issue. It was both just, and good sense that, when the people had decided once in favor of the measure, and had been cheated out of their will by the trick of a legislative subordinate helped on by a self-willed court, they should have another opportunity to redeem their State from the saloon curse. In Missouri the Democratic party lead in this good fight. Their measures go but half-way yet. It secures only a high license, but incidentally brings into operation a law for closing saloons on the Sabbath which the Governor intends to enforce. The Republicans of Illinois and Ohio have led in the effort to control the liquor traffic, and no doubt many politicians believe the high license of one and the Scott law of the other are triumphs for temperance. In reality they are the work of politicians who are afraid of the temperance movement and hope to check and head it off by a temporizing subterfuge.

A GRAND EXPOSITION.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

We live in an era of expositions. The World's Fair in London, was followed by similar displays in the great capitals of Europe. Our Centennial and Cotton Exposition added immensely to the world's knowledge of what we can produce and were incalculable blessings to the nation and to mankind. The present display of railroad appliances shows the vast progress in science as applied to locomotion, and in no department of physical, mental or moral activity has there been any lack of these grand advertisements. But alas, there is one department of business, one which involves vast pecuniary interests and affects immensely a great number of the people, which has not met the demands of the age. These displays have been sometimes large but always exceedingly one-sided and incomplete. They have sought rather to conceal than to display their essential characteristics.

We mean the secret societies. Odd-fellows, Freemasons, et id omne genus. Gentlemen of the fraternities let us have a grand exposition. You claim to be almoners of benevolence, the conservators of morals and the handmaids of religion. You claim that you have been misunderstood and misrepresented. This is possible, but the world is willing, and we are anxious to do you justice. If you are what you claim to be then not only the demands of the age, the dictates of benevolence, but an enlightened self-interest should lead you to come fully to the light and by the manifestation of the truth commend yourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. You are fully aware that many persons, including some who have been within your tyled doors, believe and affirm that you are simply excresences on the body politic which adds nothing to its beauty or utility; that your vaunted benevolence is unmitigated selfishness, your boasted morality not the morality of the Gospel, and the religion of which you are the handmaids is in striking contrast with the religion of Christ. If those who say these things are mistaken it is a duty you owe alike to them and to those who will be influenced by them, to forever put a stop to all doubt as to what you really are. We trust that no false modesty will restrain you, and that you will remember that the Great Master commands that we let our light so shine that others may see our good works. He also affirmed that "he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be manifest that they are wrought in God." You will remember too, that Paul was forced to vindicate and even commend himself because of the misapprehensions of others. Then, too, the people think they have a right to know whether such a vast depository of power may not have in it elements of evil, whether under the veil of secrecy there may not be dynamite, which by and by may explode in terrible crimes just as it is doing in Ireland, in Russia, in Spain and in our own mining and manufacturing districts. Let there then be a true, fair, candid exposition of Masonry and Odd-fellowship, such as will put to shame all the clandestine, unauthorized expositions of which you complain. Let us have all the ceremonies of initiation, including all oaths, penalties, hoodwinks, cable-tows and setting mauls. Please, without fail publish the annual receipts and expenditures of your lodges with full specification that we may know just how much of your money goes out for benevolence and how much for necessary expenses. And please tell us exactly what are your relations to religion and how it is that the common gavel "fits a man as a lovely stone for the house not made with hands eternal in the heavens." Please to give us the full history of Hiram Abiff and the historical account of his death, burial and resurrection, and show us how it is that by being symbolically slain with him, we may (if we are middle-aged white men) be raised from the grave of iniquity to the faith of salvation and endowed with a most cheerful hope of that life and immortality that belongs to just men made perfect. When the world shall see the Masonic new birth and that it is a plan of salvation which saves alike all men of all religious, the world will have gained immensely and you will be sure of an impartial judgment at its hands.

THE HINTERS AND THEIR HINTS.

BY REV. J. K. ALWOOD.

Some one said: "I'm willin' that folks should go tolerable strong agin wrong in the abstract; for that kind of wrong is always unpopular;

——Never gets pitied;
Because 'tis a sin no one ever committed;
But you mustn't be hard on particular sins;
For then you'd be kickin' the people's own shins."

Such hints as this may be useful. But the favorite hints of such hinters as he is hinting at comes from corrupt hearts. Men as base as Ahab can ring out their gutteral groans in affected sympathy for an injured people and under color of prudence and discretion bestow expensive favors on Baal-worshipers while for the real, suffering, self-denying friend of Israel they can dish out the cutting sarcasm, "Art thou that Elijah that troubleth Israel?" Men who tell the plain truth and tell it plainly are always troubling some one's conscience. And trouble of conscience is an exceedingly troublesome thing. The man has never yet been found who enjoys it. Yet the selfish multitude are preparing to suffer it sooner or later. And when it comes in this life, Satan is close at hand with his comfort policy of no repentance but scathing censure. Now the Elijahs will speedily learn whether or not the writhing victim can evolve lava.

There are men at this hour in the United Brethren church, whose organic law declares "There shall be no connection with secret combinations," writing vigorous hints and even direct thrusts against secretism, while in their official action they pave the way for the onward march of nullification and revolution. We have bishops who do so. We have editors who do so. We have presiding elders and other itinerants who do so. Fearful responsibilities are on them and a fearful reckoning awaits them. They evidently indulge their corrupt hearts in grossest hypocrisy while deceiving—or trying for a purpose to decieve—their loyal, self-denying brethren with their gross duplicity. Are these extravagant words? Are they too severe? Evidently not, since it can be proven—has been proven—that we have bishops who nullify the laws of their church in their official chair, receiving high wages from the people they are thus abusing. Evidently not while we have editors who vigorously and effectively discriminate against loyal workers in the church in favor of nullifiers. Evidently not while we have many who deal publicly in vague, deceptive generalities against secretism, and privately in disparaging particulars against the men who oppose secretism in an effective way. The unfortunate United Brethren church has been boarded by mercenary pirates. If God does not give special help, the ship will sink.

Morenci, Mich.

SHORT SERMON.

Text: There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee.

My Brethren: We can never prevail against Freemasonry by mere praying and sermonizing. We must vote. It is only by voting that the accurred thing can be brought to the light and destroyed. We shall never recover the inheritance of our fathers and re-establish old American institutions until the accursed thing is exposed to public view and atoned for. It will benumb every vital energy; poison every source of public blessing, and corrupt every social happiness until we confess and expiate our hidden sin at the ballot-box; for the ballot-box is the voice of the nation.

My friends, if the crime of one single man, who stole only a Babylonian garment with a few pieces of gold and silver, brought defeat upon the Israelites; what calamity, therefore, may we not expect from such an abominable crime as Freemasonry?

My brethren, if Freemasonry is not a deliberate mockery against the Holy Spirit, then what is?

No nation can ever deceive itself with such a deliberate lie as Freemasonry, and at the same time enjoy the blessings of independence and liberty. To lie is the act of the slave. Freemasonry is a great national lie; and the people who tell such lies must become a nation of slaves. Arise, like men, and vote it down! So mote it be!

THE FESTIVAL.

Literally, a festival is "a time of feasting, an anniversary day of joy, civil, or religious."—Webster.

The ancients observed many festivals. On such occasions, "sacrifices were offered, feasts and games were celebrated, or there was, at least, a cessation from business."—Adams' Rom. Antiq. p. 283. One notable form of this observance, among us, is what is called the "church festival." This shameless intruder, with its feasting, fun and frolic, its "grab-bags," lotteries and other appliances for sanctimonious, ecclesiastical gambling—and all "for the support of the Gospel" (!) is fastening itself upon the very vitals of the Christian church! But the festival we now propose to examine is that semi-religious rite, or observance, which, from ancient Greece, or Rome, has come down to our time through the channel of the Romish church. That church has put the festival at the head of the front rank, in her ritual. She claims for it a sanctity and an importance, equal to that of even the Sabbath itself, and, strange to say, vast numbers of Protestants have adoped the two pagan festivals, Easter and Christmas, as among the "most Christian" of their religious observances!

Treat the festival, therefore, as we may, the question is not one of expediency, or of ethics even, but of religion. It can be decided authoritatively, only by an appeal "to the Law and the Testimony." History will come to our aid, but only to illustrate and confirm the teachings of the Divine Word.

First, then, as a professed Christian observance, the festival is a hybrid, a monstrosity, an unnatural, a spurious compound of "holy day" and holi-day; an "unclean" ordinance of the ancient paganism, perpetuated and disguised with specious names and professions, by the Roman church, and by her, foisted upon the world as an ordinance of the Christian religion!

ORIGIN OF THE FESTIVAL.

If, taking the staff of history, we travel down the long path of the ages, and, passing by ancient Greece, Rome and almost all other ancient nations, keep on till we find ourselves amid the darkness, superstition and degradation of ancient Egypt, there, before Rome was born, long ages before she began to act her part in the great drama of the world's history, there, in Egypt, we find the festival; the natural, legitimate offspring of her disgusting idolatries, basking and thriving in the congenial atmosphere of her untold pollutions and "abominations."—Rollins' Ancient History, on Egypt, Book 1, Part 2, chap. 2.

From Egypt, we find the festival spreading among the surrounding nations, standing side by side with the sacrifice, and combining within itself the whole catalogue of their idolatries and their abominations! Many festivals were attended with the foulest excesses and debaucheries.—Adams' Roman Antiquities pp. 283–303.

By its singular combination of piety and voluptuousness, of religious worship with unbounded license in moral and spiritual defilement, the festival gained an easy ascendency over the minds and conduct of men, and made them, all classes, high and low, its willing votaries and slaves. Such was the germ, such the development, and such, too, the character and influence of this "unclean thing." By what process in her subtile moral alchemy, the Roman church may claim to have metamorphosed the festival into a Christian ordinance, may, or may not be material. She has made it one of the most stupendous, most blasphemous impostures, with which she has deceived, cheated and misled mankind! But, of course, no change in the character or quality of the festival, has been, or in fact can be made. In both the natural and moral world, fundamental principles are immutable. The transmutation of one genus, species, or principle into another, is simply impossible. The product of any seed or germ, must be "after its own kind." Neither lead, nor copper, nor iron, can be changed into gold, nor gold into either of them. The offspring of the lion cannot be a lamb, nor that of the lamb, a lion. Just so in the moral world. Whatever any religious rite or observance is, in the germ so it is by nature. Such therefore it must remain. However it may be disguised, however perverted or misused, it can never become assimilated with or changed into its opposite. As, therefore, the festival was by birth a pagan, drew all the elements of its growth and composition from pagan soil and from pagan air, grew to its full stature and maturity a pagan, so, a pagan it must ever continue. Until immutability shall cease to be the law in nature, no attempt at combination, or transfusion, can effect the slightest change in it from its original and therefore its only true character. Hence

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST KNOWS NO FESTIVALS.

Not one is there enjoined, or even recognized as a Christian observance. In both the Old and New Testaments, God has given his church a system of ordinances and observances, with which to worship and honor him; but among them the festival is not! True, the Levitical law appointed the yearly celebration of three great feasts; but neither in character, design or manner of celebration, did those feasts bear even the slightest resemblance to the "festival" of ancient or of modern times; and, as that law was fulfilled in Christ, all its ceremonial observances (those "feasts" included) ended in Christ. They do not therefore, and cannot, furnish the slightest authority or justification for the "festival."

Again, the claim of "Christian" for any religious observance which the Word of God does not appoint or approve, or more, which that Word forbids, is not only groundless but blasphemous and profane. We read (Deut. 12: 32): "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it. Thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it;" Deut. 32: 4: "His work is perfect;" Eccles. 3: 14: "Whatsoever God doeth it shall be forever. Nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it." These words of Holy Writ are but a few of the many which might be quoted, which show that nothing can be "added to" or "taken from" Divine appointment, whatever may be the pretext, without usurping Divine prerogative, invading the realm of Divine authority, and impiously and presumptuously marring the beauty and harmony of God's "perfect work."

Where then, do we find the festival? The answer is easy and is at hand. While the book of God, both the Old and New Testaments, says "It is not in me," it abounds and overflows in the pagan mythology. Names are nothing. Baptize the festival with such names or professions as we may, call it "Christmas" or "Easter," "Corpus Christi," "Whitsuntide," or any other, it is a pagan still, an exotic, and therefore, as a pretended Christian observance, a counterfeit and a fraud! It cannot be "put to" or included within the circle of the Divine appointments, except as an enemy an invader and a trespasser. Yet again:

THE WORD OF GOD DISTINCTLY CONDEMNS AND INTERDICTS THE FESTIVAL.

Between it and the ordinances of Divine appointment, that Word draws the line of demarcation, sharp and clear, defining and separating them as distinctly, as widely as the east is from the west. Let us see Lev. 18: 3: "After the doings of the land of Egypt .... shall ye not do.... Neither shall ye walk in their ordinances." We have seen that the festival was born in Egypt, that it was the leading "ordinance" in the religion of that land, and therefore a conspicuous feature in those "doings" so imperatively forbidden in the Divine statute. But as if to add, if possible, solemnity and force to this command, the Divine Lawgiver continues, "Ye shall do my judgments and keep mine ordinances and walk in them." Mark the contrast, "Ye shall not walk in the ordinances of Egypt." "Ye shall keep mine ordinances, and walk in them." Surely, had the festival, that pagan, Egyptian "ordinance," been specified, called by name even, it could not have been more positively or more peremptorily condemned or prohibited. What "food for thought" for Protestants, while celebrating one of those disguised Egyptian "abominations!" In 1 Cor. 8th and 10th chapters, it is clearly shown that no Christian can, consistently, in any way, participate in any festival. But in 2 Cor. 6: 16, 17 his denunciation, both of the festival and of any participation in it, is simply overwhelming! "What agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" "Wherefore, come out from among them and be ye SEPARATE, saith the Lord, and TOUCH NOT THE UNCLEAN THING."

Of these words, the great commentator, Lange, says: "The admonition here is, that they.... should separate themselves, in spirit, from their heathen neighbors, should avoid all heathenish practices.... and especially should abstain from all idolatrous festivals."

Scott in his Commentary gives, essentially, the same interpretation.

Now as the Master has refused the festival a place in his ritual, as he loathes it, spurns and denounces it as an "abomination," an "unclean thing," and commands his people to not so much as "touch" it, can we suppose that by endowing it with pet names and specious professions, we can make it acceptable to him? "Is there wisdom or understanding or counsel against Jehovah?" Prov. 21: 30. "Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker."

Surely, we may well challenge the admirers and observers of the festival, in the words of Holy Writ, "Who hath required this at your hand?"

SENEX.

HOW CAN WE LEARN FREEMASONRY?

BY REV. S. B. ERVIN, A. M.

Freemasons laugh about "climbing a soap pole backwards," and Odd-fellows about "riding the goat" when initiated. The design is to say what is not true, and what no one will believe, and then laugh it off as a joke. They evidently wish to have the joke rest on anti-secretists, and make believe that they have been guessing, and that these and like stories are their guesses. But they have not been guessing, neither are they dependent on any such statements.

It is by no means true that what men desire to keep secret cannot be known. The old adage is true, "Murder will out." The meaning is, secrets will become known. This has been proved many times in court and elsewhere; and many criminals now in prison, realize that they have not been able to prevent others from learning what they had determined not to have known.

When a few cannot conceal a secret, it is not at all supposable that a greater number, to whom it is intrusted, will be able to do so. Placing themselves under the most barbarous penalties "to always conceal" is not sufficient, even though they call on God to witness. If one desires to learn Freemasonry, he can do so. God will not hinder; penalties cannot.

It is not learned by merely joining the lodge, and by being made a Master Mason. Candidates when initiated are made Entered Apprentice Masons. They are afterward "raised" to the Fellow Craft degree, and after that to the Master's degree, the third degree of Masonry. These three are all that are taken by most Masons, and all that are "worked" in a common or "blue lodge." The word master as applied to three-degree Masons is deceptive—it insinuates a falsehood. These are not masters in Masonry, but novices in Masonry. They have not learned the contents of a volume; they have simply seen the title-page.

Those who have taken but one degree are never permitted to be present when the lodge is doing business. They may see the lodge initiate candidates into the degree they have taken, and see it opened and closed in this degree, but this is all. The same is true of two-degree Masons with reference to the degrees they have taken. It is not until one has become a Master Mason that he is permitted to sit in the lodge during the transaction of business. When he has done so, he has this privilege, but it is, figuratively, with only a primer in hand. The few present who have gone as far as "ba-ker" in the spelling-book, must keep their speller out of sight in a "blue lodge." In the lodge he can learn nothing higher than the degree he has taken. More than that, unless one's conscience drives him to it, he is not likely to study carefully what does come under his observation. It is no more true that one can learn Freemasonry by attending lodge meetings, than it is that one becomes a statesman by attending political caucuses, or a lawyer by being on the witness-stand, or a theologian, by being at public worship.

Freemasonry to be learned must be studied. To study it successfully one must have the proper data. It is not necessary to join the lodge in order to obtain these. That would be to take a circuitous and uncertain route. It would be like studying geography by traveling, and without surveys making out a map. The more direct and certain way is to begin where others have left off. Time and money and conscience are saved thereby. Learning Masonry is quite different from seeing its "monkey-shines." Those who have seen Barnum's show have not learned by that means much natural history or anatomy. The lodge is more of a circus than a school-room. Get books, Masonic books and Anti-masonic books, and study them; and with a small outlay of money, and within a week, you will have more real Masonry than most Masons obtain in a lifetime.—Richmond Star.

JOSEPH COOK ON PROBATION.

In one of his Boston lectures last season, Mr. Cook expressed sentiments upon this subject which were widely criticized. To the objections urged in the Christian Advocate, New York, Mr. Cook replied in a letter to that paper in which he makes more clear the ideas advanced in the lecture, showing them to be no new doctrine, but an attempt to prove the Scripture doctrine in full accord with reason and knowledge. He says:

1. Most men die as they have lived.
2. Those, therefore, who have been impenitent until death, are likely to be so in death.
3. But death has great solemnity. Seen at a distance, or near at hand, or in its own supreme moment, it is fitted, as a spiritual experience, to give extraordinary emphasis to religious truth.
4. It is one of the most terrific of all natural laws that resisting light blinds us to the very illumination needed to rectify our condition.
5. It is probable, therefore, under merely natural law, that he who goes through the serious experience of death unrepentant, so sins against light as to fix his character and ruin his soul. "He who goes through life with his teeth set against God may never open them.—(Prelude of Jan. 25.)
6. While mere reason, therefore, shows that death may end probation, the dictate of all practical wisdom is to repent now.
7. What reason makes probable on this point, the Scriptures make certain.
8. It is granted that, as the will is free, there is a theoretical possibility that a soul unrepentant until death may repent at death; but as all experience shows that most men die as they have lived, this possibility is not a probability; this theoretical consideration is not a practical one; it is the merest insanity to lean on it; and so all the voices of reason and revelation emphasize the word, Now! Now! Now!

These eight propositions do not contain all I have said on the subject of probation, but they include the substance of all I have taught on the points now in discussion between us. They indicate the perspective in which the whole subject lies in my mind. I am amazed that propositions like these, brought forward in a serious attempt to resist the insidious claims of semi-Universalism, should subject me to a charge of encouraging the postponement of what I have been for years, and on all occasions, emphasizing in the name of both science and revelation as the supreme duty of every soul—immediate, total, affectionate, and irreversible self-surrender to God as both Saviour and Lord. It is one of the innovations I have ventured to suggest, that every public religious service should somewhere contain a form of prayer by the whole assembly, reining up every individual in it to the duty of self-surrender. I have never in America, Great Britain, Australia, India, or Japan, no matter what the prejudices of portions of the audience may have been, closed any religious service wholly under my charge without a form of oral or silent prayer, or both, by the entire assembly, intended to bring every individual to this total self-consecration to God as a present and personal matter. Although never an ordained preacher, it was my fortune, immediately after finishing a three-years' course of theological study at Andover, to spend three years as an evangelist. The assertion that I am directly or indirectly encouraging men to rely on death-bed repentance, sounds to me much as would the claim that Mr. Phillips favors slavery, or that Mr. Gough defends moderate drinking.

LODGERY IN COURT.—When engaging in a suit in court look to your interest by noting how many lodge men are aiding to adjust matters. If your opponent is a lodge man be particularly careful or you will be beaten especially if you are relying on lodge men for aid, counsel or testimony. If a lodge man is not better than his order, he will keep his prior and weightier obligations to his sworn brother. Non-lodge men, be careful.

LODGE AND RUM.—The lodge and rum powers are twin evils, bound to rule or ruin. It will take a long time to enforce the will of the people when professed temperance leaders are bound to the saloon-keeper and liquor venders by horrible oaths and barbarous death penalties. That such is the case is only a matter of affidavits. Thousands of young men take their first drink of liquor at a Masonic banquet, and afterward died drunkards. Grand Lodge reports record that fact.

BEST PLATFORM.—The American Party has the best platform ever given to the voting public. More righteous elements harmonize under it than any other. Every one of its twelve planks touches a response in the heart of the tax-paying patriotic citizen. It is an enunciation of doctrines dear to the American people. Its principles would protect the populace in their civil and religious liberty and perpetuate our free Republic. Peruse the platform carefully.

INFORM YOURSELF.—When an American lecturer speaks in your vicinity don't fail to turn out and hear him. The American movement meets the hearty endorsement of all true Americans no matter what their prior political proclivities have been. Even during the busy Spring work eager audiences greet our lecturers. Public sentiment is rapidly rallying to the support of Americanism against organized ringism and despotic bossism. Go and hear for yourself.

AN OUTLAWED LODGE.

A Chicago Times special from Montreal describes an alarming state of affairs connected with the Grand Lodge of Quebec. That body not having a legal standing is in a strait. It has been selling charters and secrets and degrees just as if it were a bona fide concern and not practicing fraud. Of course it makes all the difference in the world with a defrauder and cheat whether or no he has the sanction of the law—at least of its letter. If he is able to hide behind a statute he is safe for this world. No wonder there is agitation in Canadian Masonry. The dispatch reads:

A great deal of excitement has been awakened in this city and province among members of the Masonic order connected with the Grand Lodge of Quebec on account of it being discovered that their organization is illegal under Canadian laws, and that heavy penalties can be inflicted upon all who are united with it. This denouncement has arisen out of differences between lodges acting here under English Grand lodge charters and those holding Quebec warrants. As the matter will shortly come into the Dominion courts, and from there by appeal to the law lords in England, the very best lawyers in this country have been consulted on the subject. The leading opinion on this vexed question has been given in a very decided manner by Judge Badgeley, one of the most venerable and profound lawyers in the Dominion, who is not only at the head of mark Masonry in Canada, but who has also been a member of the order a half century. It may be stated that his views are thoroughly indorsed by the most eminent legal practitioners here, all of whom are members also of this influential and numerous body. The following is an epitome of the elaborate opinion of the judge: "He says that during the seditious troubles in Canada in 1837, an act was passed by the parliament of that time with the object of suppressing secret societies, then developing principally in this province, and to prevent administration of oaths unless by constituted authorities under the law, making any breach a felony severely treated by imprisonment and fine. There was a provision, however, in the act exempting from the penalties Freemasons acting under charters from Grand lodges of England, Ireland, and Scotland. At the period this penal act became law there was no local authority in existence to establish Masonic lodges in Upper or Lower Canada, all then acknowledging allegiance to the mother Grand lodges at home. This condition continued until 1855, when the Grand Lodge of Canada was founded by permission of the Grand Lodge of England, with some conditions, the most important one being that no coercion would be applied to get existing English lodges to withwraw their allegiance from their mother in order to absorb them under Canadian jurisdiction. This was assented to, and three of these oldest lodges are still true to their first love. An act was subsequently passed by some parliamentary authority, placing the Grand Lodge of Canada in some position of exemption as to its legal standing, as the Grand Lodges of Great Britain and Ireland. Matters went on prosperously and agreeably until 1865, when the organization became so numerous and powerful in this province as to cause a feeling to develop in favor of having a separate jurisdiction in the Province of Quebec. The Grand Lodge of Canada having refused the petition of a number of lodges in this city to form a Grand lodge of their own, a succession movement began, and the climax was reached by all withdrawing and setting up a rival Grand lodge for themselves. A long and inharmonious controversy followed between the two Canadian Grand lodges, which ended in 1874 by the Grand Lodge of Canada voluntarily withdrawing all its jurisdiction and privileges from this province and confining itself to the Province of Ontario. The new aspirant next turned to the Grand lodges in Great Britain and Ireland and asked for a similar charter to that given to the Grand Lodge of Canada. The English Grand Lodge consented, but only on similar conditions as in the case of the Canadian Grand Lodge. The Quebec Masons wanted to be despotic in their own territory and would not accept a charter on the terms. There the matter rested until the present time the Grand Lodge of Quebec doing all in its power to break up the English lodges but without success, the persecution rendering service far more than discouragement to the lodges that braved the storm. This is the history of Masonry in Canada as embodied in the opinion of Judge Badgeley, and he then goes on to say that no amendment or penal act has been made by the parliament of the Dominion or local legislature to exempt the Grand Lodge of Quebec or its lodges from the penal clauses of the act of 1837, which has been declared lately by the Supreme Court of the Dominion and the Privy Council of the House of Lords in London to be still in force. These judgments were given in the case of the legality of Orange lodges existing in this province. The learned Judge Badgeley says, finally, that the recognition of the Grand Lodge of Quebec by the British Grand Lodges would not now make the former exempt from the penalties in the Canadian statutes. Within a few years past Grand lodges in Eastern and Western States have recognized and held fraternal intercourse with Quebec Grand Lodge. In this city alone, there are over twenty lodges acting under its charters. The subject is now being actively agitated all over Canada, and is widening the breach that has so long existed between Canadians and old-country alliances.

COLLEGE COMMENCEMENTS.

THE OBERLIN JUBILEE.

The commencement season at Oberlin was this year one of the great occasions in its history, because at the same time occurred the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the institution and the town. The Oberlin Commencement Annual contains a complete history of this important event, with fine illustrations of the original and present buildings and portraits of prominent characters connected with the institution. In sketching the history of Oberlin to the present time the anti-slavery struggle has, of course, a large attention, but the later reform begun in the First church in 1867, against the lodge, is also fairly recognized.

The anniversary opened on Thursday, June 28th, with the commencement exercises of the Conservatory of Music, which, under the charge of Prof F. B. Rice, has gained a national reputation. The Senior Preparatory Exhibition came off in the First church Friday afternoon, and in the evening Prof. Wm. M. Barbour, of New Haven, gave an address before the Theological Alumni. Saturday morning at 8 o'clock prayer meeting was held in the Second church; at 9 the Theological Commencement was held in the First church. Ex-President Hayes attended this meeting, and spoke briefly and appropriately. The reunion of the Theological Alumni in the afternoon was addressed by a number of the former graduates.

The Sabbath exercises were held in a tabernacle or auditorium, constructed for the Jubilee by the college students, and capable of seating some 4,000 persons. Here at 8:30 A. M. a Sabbath-school anniversary was held, and at 10:30 President Fairchild preached the Baccalaureate sermon on the "Providential Aspect of the Oberlin Enterprise." In the afternoon in the same place Pres. E. H. Fairchild, of Berea College, led a conference and experience meeting, which was followed by a communion service; and in the evening both churches were open for a missionary service.

Each of the following days opened with a prayer meeting at 8 o'clock, a beautiful feature of the jubilee, maintaining its supreme religious character throughout. The Commencement of the Literary Course occurred in the forenoon, and reunions of the lady graduates of Oberlin and of the literary societies with a union exhibition by the latter filled up the day and evening. Classical Course Commencement was on Tuesday forenoon, and in the evening the Anti-slavery reunion made the day a notable one, only surpassed by the Jubilee exercises of Wednesday which filled the entire day, Gen. J. D. Cox, of the class of '51, and Gov. Charles Foster being among the speakers. The grand concert of the Musical Union and performance of the Oratorio of Elijah closing a remarkable week in the history of American Colleges.

NOT GUILTY.

AN ADDRESS AT THE COMMENCEMENT AT BEREA COLLEGE, KY., UPON THE MURDER OF DAVIS BY PHILIP THOMPSON.

In his uncivilized condition, each man makes his own laws, protects his own property, avenges his own wrongs, and fights for what he considers his own rights. In civilized countries men are supposed to be protected by governments having in view the highest good of all, governments organized to obviate the necessity of every man's being his own legislator, judge and executioner. Under such governments, men give up the right of avenging their own wrongs and concede that right to the general government. And men are civilized just in proportion as they do not punish their own enemies. It is necessary that crime should be punished, but the principle of allowing the party injured to inflict the penalty and thus causing punishment for the crime to degenerate into revenge for the injury, is destruction to the fundamental principles of government and the stability of civilization. To assume that the demands of justice can be satisfied by a crime designed to punish another crime is absurd. One violation of the law cannot justify another. Particularly is this true in cases of murder, "THOU SHALT NOT KILL," makes no provision for real or fancied injuries. Murder is no less murder because preceded by an act of injustice on the part of the victim. Nothing can justify homicide but actual self-defence, when the slayer has no other possible or at least probable means of escape.

There was something extremely ludicrous in the position of a member of the jury in the case recently tried at Harrodsburg. He was sure "Not Guilty" was the proper verdict, but not sure of the reason, his opinion had been formed in the absence of reason, but he had faith to believe that a reason existed, and, with commendable zeal he undertook to decide between the closely related pleas of emotional insanity and self-defense. And the jury had to wait. And the crowd became impatient. And "Little Phil" smoked an unlighted cigar for an hour and eighteen minutes while that juror was endeavoring to determine whether it was the more probable that a man capable of making laws for fifty million of people, had suddenly became insane and as suddenly recovered, or whether he had found it necessary to shoot a man in the back of the head to save his own life. Truly it was a dilemma of which neither horn seemed to offer a very firm hold.

The utterly inconsistent claims of the defense in the Thompson case, First, that the previous conduct of Davis made the killing legal; second, that Thompson was insane at the moment, and therefore irresponsible for his crime; and third, that the murder was committed in self-defense, bear a slight analogy to those of the man who, being sued for having cracked a borrowed kettle, set down as the points in his defense: First, that the kettle was cracked when he borrowed it; second, that it was whole when he returned it; and third, that it had never been in his possession.

I will not speak of the reasonable doubt which exists as to the guilt of the man murdered by our member of Congress. Admitting, as Thompson undoubtedly believed, that Davis was guilty, did that fact justify a deliberate murder? The jury said it did, and no one was astonished at the verdict. No man in Kentucky during that whole trial had once dreamed of such a thing as Phil Thompson's dangling at the end of a rope, or working in convicts garb; but very few people had imaginations sufficiently vivid to conjecture that the reason assigned would be emotional insanity. Emotional insanity was unknown to the unflinching justice of our fathers. Emotional insanity is a modern invention, based on the discoveries of well-paid lawyers and designed to acquit guilty men. There is such a thing as emotional insanity, but the men most subject to its attacks are not criminals but jurors, who, after swearing to try a case according to law and evidence, immediately proceed to overlook both to such an extent as to well-nigh justify the almost profane adage, that if there is one thing beyond the fore-knowledge of the Infinite, it is the action of a jury.

But jurors are not the only ones thus attacked. The judge admitting Thompson to bail, so far forgot the dignity of his office as to express from the bench his sympathy for the murderer. The most popular newspaper in the State generously tendered him the best wishes of every man, woman and child in the commonwealth. Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, Joe Blackburn, of this State, and other distinguished lawyers offered him their services gratuitously. Enthusiastic telegrams of sympathy were received by the criminal every day during the trial, and when at last the verdict "Not guilty" was read, the crowd in the wildest uproar of enthusiastic joy, bore the jury from the court room. Cheer after cheer arose at the downfall of Justice, the dethronement of Right, and hundreds of men rushed forward to grasp the hand which had held a revolver to send a bullet crashing through the brain of a human being. And the papers inform us that his political outlook is brighter than ever. The papers would have us believe that the people of this Congressional district prefer for their Representative in Congress a man who is either a murderer or is in the habit of becoming emotionally insane and killing people. Is it true?

> "Oh, Justice, thou art fled to brutish beasts
> And men have lost their reason."

Do you know that in the eyes of a Kentucky jury it is a worse crime to steal a sheep than to murder a man? Do you know that while boys of from twelve to twenty years are in the penetentiary for pettit larceny, receiving at the expense of the State a thorough education in every form of iniquity and vice, thousands of moonshiners, ballot-box stuffers, men who sell whisky without license, and men who buy votes, go unpunished—and thousands of others whose souls have been blackened to all eternity by the foul stains of murder are free, out on bail, acquitted by juries of their peers or pardoned by tender-hearted executives? Do you know that while men who steal $200 are sent to the penetentiary for life, [Com. vs. Rector, Knox Co., 1882] men who kill others are sent to Congress? Do you know that since the war, more men have been murdered in the South than have died of yellow fever? Forty thousand murders! And how many of the forty thousand murderers have been punished? In a county adjoining this 375 murders have been committed during the past twenty years, and only one man hanged. Why have the rest escaped. What or who is to blame? The laws? They are what the people make them. The officers? They are such as the people elect. The people, in their merciful, sentimental, emotional insanity, the people are responsible for the fact that murder is eighteen times as common in the South as in the North, and the only penalty regarded as certain is the lawyers fee—and even this seems to have been remitted in the Thompson case.

You may say Kentucky is no worse than other States, but statistics show that there have been years when the number of murders committed in this very county of Madison alone, have exceeded those in the whole State of Massachusetts with a population one hundred and twenty-five times as great. Were murders as infrequent here as among the native-born population of New England, Madison county would have but one murder in nine years, and the number committed in 1878 alone would suffice for two centuries.

How is this frightful rate of crime to be decreased? I cannot undertake to reply, but one or two things seem evident. The law respecting the carrying of concealed weapons must either be enforced or repealed. The sale of whisky, the indirect cause of Thompson's guilt and the direct cause of so large a percentage of our crime, must either be stopped or regulated. Murderers must not be released on bail. Public sentiment must so change that all men may know that every crime shall be punished and every violation of the law shall bring the penalty thereunto attached. False ideas of honor must yield to justice and common sense. People must learn that a man is not necessarily lacking in courage or honor because he fails to avenge an injury or resent an insult, and not remarkably brave because he dares to shoot a man in the back. Senator Voorhees informs us that a murder committed in this way proves the existence of the highest type of civilization. If this be civilization, give us rather barbarism!

So long as people agree with the Senator from Indiana that a State dishonors herself by prosecuting a murderer, so long as our law-makers can convince juries and people at large, that well-bred dogs would cross the street to avoid meeting a man who preferred law to bloodshed, so long will the reign of the pistol and the bowie-knife continue. Crime will be unrestrained, murder will be unpunished, human life will be disregarded, the law will be powerless, the word justice will remain a mockery and the verdict "Not guilty" will cheat the gallows of many a lawful victim.

REFORM NEWS.

THE N. E. PENNSYLVANIA QUARTERLY CONVENTION.

This meeting was held on the 29th and 30th of May, at Uniondale, under the auspices of our Free Methodist brethren there. This people who take right ground on all the "living issues," are consequently a "live people." No church can live in God's sight which becomes a conservator of popular evils. It is palsy and leprosy to souls. Wm. Gould, who is in charge as the presiding elder, lives at Uniondale, and is a well developed, living Christian. Beside his efficient aid and wise words, other good men of the same church were there. Bro. Miller, of Tunkhannock, Wyoming Co., and F. A. Perkins, of Beech Pond, Wyoming Co., were there, and rendered us much aid. Bro. S. E. Miller, of Clifford, gave a discourse on the evening of the 29th, which was well received. Your correspondent did not get to that meeting. By the decision of the brethren on the ground we were elected to lead in a discourse on the evening of the 30th. Our subject was, "Ezekiel's visit to the Jerusalem lodge," founded on Ezek. 8th chapter. This was followed up by well-timed and able talks by brethren Miller, Brownson and Gould. Bro. Brownson called up an advanced Mason, said to have take thirty-three degrees, who, in a few appropriate remarks, backed up what had been set forth by his own knowledge of the subject. The congregations were good each evening. People being pressed with farming, the day meetings were quite thin, though marked with a good degree of interest. They were led by Bro. Gould. N. CALLENDER.

STILL ONWARD IN CENTRAL ILLINOIS.

LOSTANT, Ill.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We have concluded to again send you a few jottings from this section. We have been favored in past years with many lectures by some of the ablest men who have espoused the anti-secret cause. These lectures together with a liberal circulation of tracts, papers and books, has created a strong sentiment against the lodge. The work has been done under the management of the Union Christian Associatian. By the way, the members of this organization ought to remember the war is not yet over in this section. The worshipful masters are more diligent to-day, perhaps, than they were six years ago, trying to swindle the more ignorant class of men out of their money and manhood by initiating them into the pretended secrets of Masonry. We say swindle, because it cannot be called anything else. People in this section believe that Ronayne and Starry and Lowe told them the truth. Many other Masons living in this section admit in private that the revelations are true. The universal cry of Masons in general that "exposing Masonry makes more Masons, is accepted by intelligent men as evidence that these men gave a correct exposition. They reason in this way: "If opposing Masonry makes men join the lodge, those who join through such influences must believe what those seceders told them." We think we have now got the Lostant Masons in the "Last ditch," and intend to keep them there until they make an "unconditional surrender."

By making the subject of Masonry prominent in town elections the past few years we forced them to form an alliance with the saloon-keepers last spring. They got the offices, but the respectable class of Masons evidently think it is a dear victory. However, subsequent events do not show that as a mass Masons cannot fraternize with saloon-keepers. A general pow-wow was held in the Lostant lodge last spring soon after the election. The "brethren" came from the north, south, east and west; as reported in the columns of the local paper, a great amount of "third story work" was done. This phrase "third story" is a little mysterious to "cowans." No doubt it means lifting a man upon the third rung of the ladder leading to the Masonic heaven. This resurrecting process in the Masonic lodge is no doubt very elevating in its effects upon some men's imagination. A Lostant Mason of large experience declared to the writer that he "never felt so near heaven in his life as when he passed through the third degree" (i. e. the "third story"). Faint, weary and exhausted the "brethren" marched down street after they had adjourned on this occasion, and halted in front of the three saloons that ornament the front street. All was dark an silent within. These dealers in death and damnation had closed their dens until Monday morning. Ordinary citizens must sneak in at the back door to get their grog through Sunday. Not so with these "third story" workmen. A familiar rap by a Royal Arch soon opened the doors and the "brethren passed from labor to refreshment."

Now was there anything wrong in this sudden transition of the "brethren" from the solemn scenes of resurrecting Hiram, to a midnight carnival in a drinking saloon? Certainly not, according to Masonic logic. A Masonic preacher was in the crowd. It would have taken ten righteous men to save Sodom, but in these modern times the presence of one of these "good men" makes anything all right. One informant could not state whether this Rev. Mason entered the saloon or not. He recognized him at the front of the procession puffing vigorously at a cigar, and thinks nothing could have made him look more Masonic unless he had carried a large Bible under his arm. He is correct in such a fancy for certainly nothing makes a minister look so wonderfully wolfish as to walk in front of a crowd of ungodly Masons with a large Bible extended in his arms surmounted with a square and compass.

OCCASIONAL.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,
OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,
OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

ANTI-MONOPOLY.

In response to a call issued for a conference of delegates from various States to be held in McCormick Hall, Chicago, July 4th, to discuss the Anti-monopoly movement, some 150 persons from nineteen States met in somewhat boistcrous session for two days, and accomplished what seems to have been the ultimate object of the meeting—the establishment of a new national political party. The anti-monopoly reform has already been carried on with vigor and efficiency by the National League with headquarters in New York, with its able organ, Justice. Anti-monopoly has also been a successful political issue in some localities in the West, and probably had the effort continued on that line, the reform, which is a great and needed one, would have had doubtless more success than as a party organization. The conferenee was of a decidedly mixed character. The president was a fine appearing and intelligent gentleman from Brooklyn, the treasurer a well-known business man and philanthropist of this city. Other members of the conference would have honored any convention, but the bulk of the meeting was made up of rougher cast. One of the secretaries sprawled over his table, stretched himself on chairs, and sucked a cigar like an ordinary bar-room loafer. A prominent speaker retired from the rostrum and began to relieve his pent-up feelings—for his speech was choked off—with a cigar. Several others were at the same time smoking pipes and cigars in the room, and continued shamelessly to do so after an order had been made to cease. Dennis Kearney, the California iconoclast and monstrosity, poured out his soul on the first day, but the assembly had the sense to reject him from the roll, as they did also a resolution to nominate Butler for the Presidency. Self-seeking and demagoguery were sufficiently prominent, but the idea of putting Christian politics foremost was in the background. The platform, however, presents a practical basis of operations which is to be commended in spite of some sweeping denunciations. We present it in full since it embraces some features embodied in our own:

PREAMBLE.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES: The people are sovereign; their servants usurping power are oppressing them. Let the people see how this is being done. Monopolists created by unjust laws crush the workingmen, the toilers in the mines, the workshops, on the farms, in every avocation of life. Legislative bodies are manipulated in their interest, courts are corrupted by favors or money; executive officers bend in humble submission to the dictates of these monopoly magnates. Thus the people are robbed of their just earnings. Political parties declare themselves friends of the people, but obey the mandates of railway, banking, tariff, and land monopolies. Congress has abdicated the power conferred on it by the Constitution to regulate interstate commerce in favor of soulless railway corporations. It has given up its constitutional right to control the currency to heartless money-lenders. It permits transportation lines to levy and collect a tax on the products of the country more than equal to the entire expenditures of the National and State governments. It legislates for the interests of the few against the rights of the many. The people are powerless because they are not united. We ask you to form yourselves in phalanx for the right. We entreat you to break the chains which bind you as captives to the chariot wheels of monopoly—chains which become more galling with each revolution. We ask you to arouse yourselves and force your servants to honesty and economy, and we present to you the platform of the National Anti-monopoly party, which we believe, if successful, will break your chains, restore your freedom and give good government to the nation.

PLATFORM.

All corporations, including those formed for the transportation of persons and products, are creatures of the States and general government, subject to their control; and it is the duty of the government to regulate transportation, prescribing both maximum and minimum charges, preventing pooling and other like combinations and discriminations between towns and individuals and the consolidation of competing lines, thus protecting the corporations in their legal rights and the people from extortionate charges.

To secure these things we demand that the next Congress, by one of its committees, shall thoroughly investigate the cost of railways and transportation, so that it may act intelligently on those subjects, and enact such laws as the protection of the people demand.

A postal telegraph system is demanded by every interest in the country, to be operated by the postal department.

Under a liberal and equitable construction of law, States and corporations have forfeited 105,000,000 acres of land, a territory as large as the five great States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, now supporting a population of over 18,000,000 of people, and this land now legally and equitably belongs to the people of the United States; therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress to declare forfeited all lands not equitably earned by construction of the designated roads within the time prescribed by law for completion, and restore the same to the public domain for the benefit of actual settlers, and all public land shall be reserved for the use of actual settlers.

We view with alarm the acquirement of lands in the United States by non-resident foreigners, and we favor such changes in the law as will prevent the ownership of any part of our soil except by residents.

We oppose the issue and control of the currency by banks of issue, which now enjoy the special privilege of charging interest upon their own promise to pay, and we demand a restoration to the people's government of its full sovereignty over all money, both metalic and paper, to be full legal tender. We favor the coinage of gold and silver upon equal terms, and demand that the volume of money be carefully restricted by law.

We demand that the national banking system be abolished and the national bonds be paid off as speedily as possible in the lawful money of the United States.

We demand the establishment of a graduated income tax.

Postal savings banks shall be established, that the people may have a safe depository.

Gambling in the necessaries of life, and combinations which enable monopolists to control the prices against the laws of natural trade must be abolished.

The patent laws should be so amended as to protect inventors, give the people the benefits to be derived, and prevent the formation of monopolies which rob the inventor and the people.

All public officials, as far as practicable, including the President and Vice-president, shall be elected by a direct vote of the people.

Congress has no authority to tax the people except for the purpose of raising necessary revenue, and in framing tariff laws that object should be kept constantly in view. We denounce the present tariff as being wholly in the interest of monopolies, and demand that it be speedily and radically reformed and free trade established as soon as the transportation and money monopolies shall be so regulated as to secure reasonable rates for freight and interest on money.

In constituting this independent political organization we pledge ourselves not to enter into any combination or affiliation with the Republican or Democratic party.

THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS OF THE MEMBERS WHO DID NOT ATTEND THE MEETING OF JUNE 21ST.

J. W. PHELPS, VERMONT.

Both Richmond and Philadelphia should receive attention as places for holding the National Convention. Perhaps Richmond would be the best place, everything considered.

S. C. KIMBALL, NEW HAMPSHIRE.

I shall not be able to attend the meeting of the Central Committee and Annual N. C. A. meeting, but favor calling a National Convention. If such a convention is called, I think we shall be able to perfect our State organization and send delegates. Our sentiment is gaining in New Hampshire.

C. QUICK, MICHIGAN.

The change of candidates is, as I look at it, a matter of grave importance, and should be approached with the utmost caution. As far as President Blanchard is concerned his acceptance, if I remember right, provided for such an emergency, but for the Vice President the case is different. In political parties it is not customary to make or even to propose radical changes like the one above referred to, without at least consulting the Central Committee, still this may have been done with all except myself, in which case I shall not complain. I hope whatever conclusion is reached it may be one on which God's blessing may rest. That I may not be misunderstood, I wish to say further that if Senator Pomeroy will accept the nomination I will most heartily support him.

PHILLIP BACON, CONNECTICUT.

I feel honored to be identified with those who have so wisely and faithfully laid the foundation of the party, which, under the blessing of him who is the author and promotor of all that is for the welfare of mankind under every form of human government, must in time succeed. To me it seems to require less than the mustard-seed amount of faith to see that the principles of the American party, administered by God-fearing men, would easily remove the mountains of difficulties which lie in the way of the welfare and progress of our nation in righteousness and all that tends to promote the prosperity and happiness of the people.

I have somewhere read an old proverb like this: "He who will observe providences will have providences to observe." To my mind the history of this nation is plainly marked with the rulings of a power stronger and wiser than that of men. Any political party which fails to recognize the authority of God, and to arrange its platform according to the teachings of his Word, will as surely fail as did Pharaoh. The American party has nothing to fear. The command of the Lord to Joshua was, to be of good courage and the land should be theirs, "only be thou strong and very courageous that thou mayest observe to do according to the law which Moses my servant commanded thee. Turn not from it to the right hand or to the left that thou mayest prosper." All the troubles of our nation can be plainly traced to the want of courage and fidelity on the part of nominally good men to obey the commands of God. There were men among the framers of our Constitution who knew that any pretext for the admission of slavery into our government was a direct violation of the divine command, and must sooner or later bring upon our country the sad consequences of God's displeasure, but they lacked courage to stand by their convictions. The history of our own country and the world proves that God is faithful, that he will reward the righteous and as surely punish the ungodly. It is plain to be seen that all the evils which trouble society to-day are tracible to the want of courage on the part of God's professing people to stand by the teachings of his Word.

Great talent and much time has been spent by the lawmakers of this nation in arranging a tariff law which should add to the prosperity of the people at large, while at the same time they neglect to provide suitable legislation that the divine command for the observance of the Sabbath; if properly carried out, it would add more to the prosperity of people than all the tariff bills that were ever passed. We have hundreds of men who can make able speeches for protection or revenue, only the interest of their respective parties, but I have failed to learn of one who had the courage to stand in his place and vindicate the law of God when the nation's law-makers were in public session on the Lord's day. So far as my acquaintance extends it matters little with those who profess to have the Lord's business in charge whether these who receive their suffrages are men who honor God in the keeping of his commandment, but almost universally party first and God afterward or not at all. It is not because these men (some of them) do not respect God and his Word, but they lack courage. God has never called for cowards to do his work. The history of the world proves this, and we need not look for a change at the present time. Would we have God acknowledged as the rightful sovereign of all national government? It will take men of courage to do it. Would we have the great good to be derived from national prohibition? It will take men of courage to do it. Would we have the sanction of the government taken away from associations which have great power to do evil, which do not recognize the authority of the Bible? It will take men of courage to do it. If Joshua was at the head of our government methinks he would have found some way in which this nation might have been rid of the curse of polygamy, and these who have been plundering the public money would have been treated as Achan.

May the Lord who giveth wisdom to all who ask it, direct the meeting of the Central Committee in all their deliberations. I regret that I cannot be with you and enjoy the personal acquaintance of those whom I esteem so highly, and receive instructions from those whom God has taught, and courage from those who have won so many hard fought battles and never showed retreat. I shall do what I can for the American party.

W. H. ROSS, PRESIDENT MICHIGAN STATE ASSOCIATION:—I had hoped it would be possible for me to come to Chicago at this time and confer with our co-laborers in this great reform movement, but it seems to be impossible. I pray that the Holy Spirit may direct in all that shall be done.

I am very much pleased with the proposed change in candidates; not that I would not personally have been glad to work for Pres. Blanchard, but the objections to his candidacy urged by him in last Cynosure have been apparent to me all along, and I have repeatedly stated to those who thought he was self-seeking in the matter that it was my firm conviction that he would withdraw at the proper time in favor of some other man.

I am in favor of holding a convention; should prefer a delegate convention. It seems to me it should not be held earlier than October or November. Every possible effort should be made to save expense to delegates, as many of our earnest ones do not touch even $25 every time they put their hands in their pockets.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GOVERNOR BUTLER AT HARVARD.

We have already stated in the Cynosure that Governor Butler, according to Massachusetts custom, came before Harvard College for the collegiate degree of L.L.D. He came before it crowned with the lofty Thirty-third degree of the "Ancient and Honorable" institution of Free and Accepted Masons; and if he had not been previously crowned with this lofty Masonic degree, whose leather apron far surpasses in honor any parchment from Harvard, he would doubtless never have been Governor, and would thus never have presented himself with his apron in his trunk to receive the parchment of Doctor of Laws.

Well, the result is known. Harvard, like a granite break-water, dared to face the tempest of Masonic wrath, and refused to desecrate its honors by mingling them with the buffoon titles of Freemasonry.

But now comes up another time-honored custom. The Governor was to make an official visit to Harvard; and as that governor is this year Freemason Butler, he of course must make a speech; for on what occasion did he ever fail to do that—much to the injury of whatever good cause he might be pretending to serve? It is impossible that a man of so many words on every occasion can be a man of effective action.

The Governor abandoned his usual slants, slurs, and smart fillips; forgot how he boasted of hanging Harvard professors; accepted the repulse that Harvard had given him (for he could do no less) and strove to play the magnanimous part of overlooking the wrong that had been done him! His speech was received as if a god had spoken, applause bursting forth from the audience at every step of its triumphant progress. Freemason Butler rode into the affections of Harvard on a swell of Masonic triumph. So would it appear, to judge from the newspapers.

For our own part, we can say that we have read the speech, and have noted the applause; and we venture to suggest the idea that if an Adams, or an Anti-mason, had made that speech, word for word, manner for manner, style for style, probably not one single outburst of applause would have followed its delivery. It was not Butler the Governor, but Butler the Freemason that drew much of that tremendous applause. It is time that these tricks of the lodge should be weighed in the balance.

AMERICAN.

"ENGLAND AND EGYPT."

DEAR CYNOSURE:—When I see anything which seems to be uncharitable or unjust in your columns it causes regret, for certainly such cannot be your purpose. It is, however, right to allow different views to be given where opinions may legitimately differ. Hence, I hope you will allow a few remarks on the above subject, so vigorously presented 28 June by the Rev. Dr. Cheever.

I object to his charges and imputations against the cabinet of Gladstone, one of the most enlightened and purest Christian statesmen in the world. These imputations of moral failure in Egypt are made upon misapprehensions and assumptions rather than upon facts. Your readers know that the war on Egypt was not simply on account of "English bond-holders," but that it was on behalf of, and in the interests of all Europe. We may remember how earnestly Gladstone's cabinet desired to have France and other powers unite their moral and physical powers with that of England, and how France, especially at the last moment, left England, and she was obliged to go on alone in the whole proceeding. Europe, however, approved of England's course, and of England's guarantees regarding the objects to be accomplished. Dr. Cheever seems to have forgotten all this, and speaks as if Gladstone was the successor of the Sultan or wielded the despotic powers of the Czar. Such an idea may be welcomed by the murderous members of the Irish League, but the duties of the cabinet of the United Kingdom were limited by its pledges to the Continental governments who had shown sufficient jealousy of such powers being exercised as Dr. Cheever so inconsiderately imputes to it.

Every one knows that constitutional governments, like those which rule the United Kingdom and the United States, have limits which cannot be passed without express treaty, or the sanction of the representatives of the people. For example, the escape of the Morgau murderer, and, how comes it that the United States government has not stopped the polygamy of Utah, and the other evils which necessarily have arisen from Mormonism? Is it not because of the territorial rights which residents acquire by settlement under the general law of the country? The evils are glaringly inconsistent with the fundamental principles of our whole system, but must there not be some change in the U. S. law to enable our government to handle the case? The rights of the Union are one thing, those of the individual States another. But England did not incorporate Egypt into her Empire, and was bound to respect the state of religion, government, etc., which she found in existence. That she protected the lives of the parties threatened for exercising religious liberty showed her watchful care in preserving the peace even against rioters, and in the cases referred to proved of greater efficiency than too oft, alas, is that of the civil power in our own great and glorious country as well as in Ireland.

If Egypt had been annexed then there would have been better ground for the reflections of Dr. C., but until then, if it ever comes, let the friends of civil and religious liberty in this country rest assured that there is not in the whole wide world a body of men more earnest, nor more useful, nor more worthy of confidence and hearty support in that cause the world over than the present ministry of the British Empire piloted by the noble-hearted Gladstone. Yours, A BRITON.

GOOD TEMPLARY.

OLATHE, Kans., June 27th, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In looking over the Cynosure of June 21, I saw an article on the Good Templars, and having been a member of the order since 1866 I deem it proper and right that some things stated in the article should be corrected, so that those reading the Cynosure may not be misled. There are some who have been Good Templars seeing the mistake and knowing nothing about any other order, only what they read, might come to the conclusion that if mistakes were made in one, the same might be made in all the rest.

The mistake I refer to is, first in the one who gives the obligation. This is always done by the Worthy Vice Templar. In the second place, the mistake is made in repeating the obligation. For the benefit of the readers of the Cynosure I will give the obligation as is now used and has been used since 1866:

OBLIGATION.

You, in a full belief in the existence and power of Almighty God and in the presence of these witnesses, do solemnly and unreservedly promise, that you will not make, buy, sell, use, furnish, or cause to be furnished to others as a beverage, any spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider, and that in all honorable ways you will discountenance their use in the community. You also promise that you will not reveal any of the work or business of this order to any one not entitled to know the same, and that in all things you will yield a cheerful obedience to all our laws, rules and usages. You also promise that you will not knowingly wrong a member of this order or see one wronged, and that you will do all in your power to promote the good of this order and to advance the cause of temperance.

I agree with Jas. H. Sly, in the Richmond Star, as to the wickedness that there is in swearing to keep secret something, before we know what we are to keep.

After investigating Good Templarism I can plainly see the Masonic earmarks. HOWARD S. JONES.

IS THE YOUNG MAN SAFE?

COLUMBUS, Ohio.

This language was used by David, the great king of Israel, in regard to his wayward and rebellious son Absolum.

As parents, may we not well raise the same inquiry, Are our young men, our sons, safe? They may be rebellious against parental authority, and yet the true parental heart yearns after them. They may violate the law of the land, and have to suffer the penalty of the same, yet the true father or mother still loves their boy, and their inquiry is like David's, Is the young man safe? With a saloon or gambling-house on almost every street corner and basement in our city, with all attractious that art and money can furnish as baits, is the young man safe? Again, with the restraints thrown off that have held sacred the Sabbath day, and all unholy desecration, as concerts, beer gardens, carousing and baseball playing tolerated, may we not well ask, Is my son safe?

Inducements are held out by the many secret orders to induce our young men to take upon themselves oaths and obligations that make them slaves for life, who will say that the young man is safe? The only refuge to which the young man can fly for safety from all these snares is to the Lord Jesus Christ. He came to set the captive free, and whom the Son makes free is free indeed, and the salvation which he provides will enable them to triumph over all these evils.

There is no institution in this city that is accomplishing so much for the rescue of young men as the Y. M. C A., and the earnest labors of the secretary, Bro. Minehart, are greatly appreciated, but the results of his labors can only be fully known in eternity. We all have a work to do to oppose these onslaughts of iniquity that are ruining so many of our young men, and let us not fear to raise a warning voice and show them the snares that are set for their feet on every hand: the dram shop, the billiard hall, the secret lodge, or the public amusements on the Sabbath, all of which curse our fair city and the country at large. God save the young men. K. A. O.

MONSTROSITY! A "WHAT IS IT?"

I am perplexed. An object with head and tail not belonging to the same thing, with a middle not belonging to either! Send it to Barnum. A Christian (?) people are going to celebrate the birth day of a Christian (?) nation on the "Glorious 4th."

PROGRAMME:—Rev. ——— will open with an "Invocation to God." Then follows musie, speeches, etc.; and a "grand hop" (the only grand thing named,) in the night season. Begins in the church with Rev. ———, and ends in the ball room with Bill Fiddler to lead. Oue thing with one programme, but the two ends,—parts of things that don't grow in the same atmosphere or climate, and neither could live a day where the other thrives.

How would this harmonize:—On the 4th inst. Grog saloon will be opened with appropriate religious ceremonies. Rev. Naaman, who "bowed himself a little" in the house of Rimmon, will open the exercises with prayer, then John the bar-tender will unveil the decanters and Joe Guzzle and Co. will begin the work of the day. Jim Joker will amuse the brethren with wit and humor. Ike Songster will sing an appropriate piece (ribald song). Bill Trickster will then uncover the gambling table, where the various amusements will go on till the company get too tipsy to navigate, when the exercises will be concluded by swearing, obscene talk and songs, vomiting and a fight. When this is all over, Dick Churl, Charely Madhead and others, will go home and whip their wives and knock over the children as usual. Alas! Tom Vengeful struck too heavy a blow, and his good wife fell to rise no more. Such is the end of a supposed occasion commenced with prayer by a clergyman! Is not a "hop" liable to such a sequel? How about a celebration commencing with prayer and ending with a ball? Either let the head disown the tail, or, the tail will swallow the head and all between. When the church consents to hitch on to the world's freight train, with the notion that she is engineer, she will find sooner or later that she is in the rear "caboose" with Satan as both conductor and engineer. "So mote it be," responds the lodge. N. C.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON IV, July 22.—Israel defeated at Ai.—Joshua 7: 10-26.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Be sure your sin will find you out.—Numb. 32. 23.

"And the Lord said." At eventide (ver. 6), for Joshua was prostrate until that time; and he is here commanded to arise. God's delay in answering the prayers of his people was well adapted to impress upon them the magnitude of the sin which was among them, and the terrors of his judgment. He may delay to answer our prayers for other reasons, as, for instance, to try, and hence to increase our faith, our patience, our hope, our submissiveness; but here his object was to express his displeasure with sin. When at length he spoke, it was probably from the ark within the tabernacle, before which Joshua and the elders had fallen prostrate. See the similar instance, Num. 20: 6, 7.—Johnson.

"Wherefore liest thou upon thy face? Bush differs from many of the commentators, and rightly, in not regarding God's words as a rebuke to Joshua. "This is not the language of rebuke, as though God were displeased with Joshua for prostrating himself in this humble posture, and bemoaning in bitterness of soul the disaster that had befallen Israel, but merely implying that it was now enough; that God would not have him any longer continue that mournful posture: that he had other work to do than to spend time in grieving and afflicting himself in view of what was past; that he must arise and set about discovering the accursed thing."—Bush.

"Israel has sinned." On what ground could the sin of one man be laid to the charge of the whole nation? (1) The participation of the people in the guilt of Achan can only be explained on the ground that Achan was a member of the nation, and that the sin of one member affected the entire body,—robbing it of the purity and holiness with which it ought to appear in the presence of God, and withdrawing from it the favor of God, which the nation enjoyed, as being God's pure and holy church. However truly the whole Scriptures speak of each man as individually an object of divine mercy and justice, they teach just as truly that a nation is one organic whole, in which the individuals are merely members of the same body, and are not alone isolated from one another and the whole.—Keil. (2) In so far as the people had been sinners, and broken any of the laws of God, they were guilty of the spirit which educated and trained and encouraged the individual criminal, and so were responsible. (3) In so far as the people were guilty of the same sins in lesser degree, as they were covetous and disobedient, they were guilty in a degree of the greater outbreaks of crime.—Peloubet. (4) National punishments are inflicted in this life, because nations do not exist after death. It follows, therefore, that, while a nation may suffer from the sin of an individual, that suffering is temporal, and not eternal, to those who are not personally involved in the guilt.—Daniel Steele. (5) In all history we observe that the nation suffers for the wickedness of a few. The best in it pay higher taxes, tremble with insecurity, and often suffer absolute disaster to person and property, owing to the presence of a criminal class. Thus, we gain nothing by discarding the Bible; the difficulty meets us in ordinary history.

"They have even taken of the accursed thing." They have used for themselves what was devoted to God, as was all Jericho and its spoils (Josh. 6: 17–19). It was the accursed use of good things that was their sin.—Smiley.

"Therefore." Thus does the Lord hold his children true unto himself; he compels them to let him search out all hidden, hindering things as their only way to victory. Their short suffering is as nothing to this necessity. Their own sense of shame, and even the taunts of their enemies, are little things in his eyes compared with the deeper evil. He must teach them that they cannot serve him in one sphere, and take their own way in another. Any secret using of his treasures, apart from his will and blessing, they must understand to be sin.—Smiley.

"Up, sanctify the people." All had sinned in a degree, all must therefore purify themselves from every sin. "Up, sanctify thyself," we may hear him saying to many an earnest suppliant; put away thy sins, supply thy own deficiencies, and do thy part to remove the stumbling-blocks from among thy brethren; then expect my help towards what thou desirest further.—Bliss.

"There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Isreal." That every evening the intelligence spread through the camp. And oh, how the hearts of many would tremble, lest the offender should be one of their own tribe or family. To Achan himself, that must have been a night of utter wretchedness; and it is surprising that he did not at once go and throw himself at the feet of Joshua, and make confession of his crime. Had he done so, who can tell but that there might have been some mitigation of his punishment? But he was probably still deceived by the hope that he might perchance escape detection. and thus blinded by the god of this world, he ventured to await the approaching ordeal.—Thornley Smith.

"Which the Lord shall take." By directing the lot which was taken. This decision by lot involved no chance, but in the whole history of the Jews it was one of the most regular methods of revealing the will of God, especially in reference to some individual.— Wm. Smith.

"Wrought folly in Israel." That all wickedness is folly, that every sinner is a fool, not indeed so much in an intellectual, but above all things in a moral respect, this cutting truth is proclaimed by the Old Testament loudly and impressively.—Lange.

"Achan answered, . . . indeed I have sinned." Achan ingenuously confessed his crime, but it is feared that it was somewhat as Judas did when he had betrayed his Master,—from terror, rather than from true repentance. There is, in fact, no virtue in a man's confessing his sins when they can no longer be hid. Had Achan acknowledged himself the transgressor prior to his detection by the lot, we might have indulged the hope that he had truly repented, and was deeply sorry; but it was not until he was dragged into the light, and his guilt exposed beyond the possibility of being further concealed, that he uttered a word relating to the matter.—Thornley Smith.

"Then I coveted them." The three words occurring in this narrative, "I saw—I coveted—I took," strikingly expresses the rise, progress, and consummation of crime.—Bush.

"The silver . . . and the wedge of gold." Even the gold and the silver were consumed: for, as Calvin observes, God "would not allow the canctuary to be polluted by the proceeds of theft." Stolen property can never be offered to God with his approval, even for the benefit of the poor or for the service of the church. No offerings can be acceptable to him, but such as are gained by honest means.—Thornley Smith.

"The valley of Achor." This valley was named Achor, i. e., trouble, from this event (ver. 26). Seven hundred years after this, Hosea (2: 15) prophesies that this very valley of trouble should become a door of hope, because the exiled Israelites should pass through it on their way home. So God often makes our valleys of trouble,—the consciousness of sin, the trying experiences, the heavy burdens, the valley of the shadow of death,—to become to us doors of hope.—Peloubet.

"Turned from the fierceness of his anger." God's anger is not an ebullition of blind passion, but a holy displeasure against the unrighteousness of men. When this unrighteousness is removed, God's anger ceases. All which has been injuriously said concerning the blood-thirsty and wrathful God of the Old Testament rests on a failure to apprehend this holy displeasure of God against the unrighteousness of men. That brings upon them, indeed, judgment and penalty, but never goes so far as to shut up his compassion.—Lange.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

THE INSTITUTION OF THE SABBATH.—THE FOURTH COMMANDMENT.

Gen 2: 1, 3. Ex. 20: 8, 11.

1. Thus the heavens and earth were finished and all the hosts of them.

2. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made, and he rested on the seventh day from all the work that he had made.

3 And God blessed the seventh day and hallowed it, because that in it he had rested from all the work which God created and made.

8. Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

9. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work.

10. But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates.

11. For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day and hallowed it.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—The Sabbath needful for soul and body.

1. An institution is something fixed or established either by law or custom.

2. All institutions are either human or divine.

3. A human institution is one established by man. A divine institution is one appointed by God. One is binding; the other is not.

4. The Fourth of July, and Fast and Thanksgiving days are human institutions. We are free to observe them or not as we choose.

5. The Sabbath dates from the Creation and is therefore the most ancient institution in the world.

6. We need to rest one day in seven. Our physical nature requires it.

7. Our souls need the Sabbath. Without it they would grow sickly and starved.

8. If we did not have one day in seven to learn our duty, to study the Bible and listen to the preaching of God's word, our daily employments would leave us very little time for these things, and the tendency after a while would probably be to neglect them all together. Thus we should grow sordid and earthly.

9. The word remember shows that the Jews were familiar with the idea of a Sabbath, but during their long bondage in Egypt had partially forgotten it.

10. God was very careful to include all servants in this command, He knew that some masters would be avaricious enough to make them work, just as some companies and corporations now for the sake of making more money oblige their men to labor on the Sabbath.

11. Nothing could so injure the laboring man as the repealing of our Sunday laws. He would have to work seven days instead of six, and probably get no more pay than he does now.

12. Beasts of burden are under the same physical necessity as ourselves of resting one day in seven.

13. The including strangers, i. e. foreigners under the command shows that it was not meant for the Jews only, but for the whole human race.

14. If we keep the Sabbath holy we shall be more apt to keep God's other commands. Profanity, drunkeness and other vices very often go with Sabbath breaking.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

We need the Sabbath for our bodies.

We need it for our souls.

All have a right to one day in seven—even beasts of burden.

Keeping the Sabbath holy is a safeguard for the whole week.

LESSON TALK.

Scholars were much interested a short time since in the discovery of an inscription on one of the Assyrian monuments which seemed to prove that the ancient Babylonians not only divided their time into weeks, but kept the seventh as a sacred day. The inscription however, gives no evidence that the Babylonian Sunday was anything general. The king, the priests, and other privileged classes—those who needed it least—seem to have been the only ones who shared its benefits. The idea of a Sabbath—a universal rest day for man and beast alike was utterly unknown to the heathen world.

Every year many thousands land upon our shores who have never been taught to regard the Sabbath as anything but a holiday, and owing to this and other causes the Fourth Commandment is being violated more and more till thoughtful Christian people are alarmed. When we exchange our Puritan Sabbath for the Paris Sunday it will be likethat of Ancient Nineveh—no universal rest day for all. Labor will lose its greatest protection against the greed of capital, and intemperance and other vices will eat up its hard earned money. But if the boys and girls who are now growing up, learn to love and reverence God's day, then this state of things will never be.

LESSON HYMN.

"This is the day when Christ arose,
So early from the dead."

Senator Morrill, in the United States Senate: "The liquor traffic is the gigantic crime of crimes in this age and particularly in this country."

THE TRAIN.

HARK!
It comes!
It hums!
With ear to ground
I catch the sound,
The warning, courier-roar
That runs along before.
The pulsing, struggling now is clearer!
The hillsides echo "Nearer, nearer,"
Till like a drove of rushing, frightened cattle,
With dust and wind and clang and shriek and rattle,
Passes the Cyclops of the train!
I see a fair face at a pane,—
Like a piano-string
The rails, unburdened, sing;
The white smoke flies
Up to the skies;
The sound
Is drowned—
Hark!

THE
CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE
A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the ablest statesmen and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

2. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

It is now owned and published by the

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

at its office, NO. 221 WEST MADISON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL., on Thursday of each week

TERMS: $2. per year. In clubs of five $8.75. In clubs of ten $15.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1883.

TALLADEGA COLLEGE, Ala., has a list of 290 pupils in this year's catalogue. It is a foster child of the American Missionary Association. Its President, H. S. DeForest, D.D., attended and spoke at the meeting of Congregational ministers at the Grand Pacific Hotel, Chicago, Monday July 2nd. Dr. DeForest is an interesting man, son-in-law of the good Dr. Robbins of Muscatine, Iowa. He represents Alabama as the most needy State in the South; it has 600,000 blacks, one in five of whom can (or should) vote; but only one in ten can read the ballot. Write for information or circulars to Geo. N. Ellis, Sec'y, Talladega College, Talladega, Ala.

SENATOR POMEROY'S Farwell Hall speech was delivered at the close of the long whirl of Wheaton Commencement, and the Annual meeting of the National Christian Association. We have just set down and read it carefully through. It is spoken of as his "grand" speech, and the adjective is strictly appropriate. Every word of it has been thoroughly thought out, and should be read and re-read. We especially commend it to the Union Signal. Mrs. Willard and the W. C. T. U. will find their leading doctrines set in that speech under a shower of sunbeams.

FIXED STARS never revolve or change their location in the skies, but shine brighter the darker it grows. Such are some men in the moral heavens. Mr. P. H. Grisham of Washington, D. C., (see editorial June 28th) sends us a whole constellation of such names in East Tennessee; as the Embrees, who, with Benjamin Lundy published the first emancipation paper in the United States. The Embrees bought and freed slaves, and manufactured iron by free labor. Mr. Grisham was their clerk when a youth, and took up their mantle when it fell; and, like Elisha, will carry their mantle of reform, till it opens for him a passage over Jordan dry-shod. Friend Isaac T. Gibson, one of Gen. Grant's Quaker Indian Commissioners, who now presides in meetings at our Washington Headquarters, and an accomplished lady, Miss Hilton, who teaches Cabinet officers children, are descendants of those "morning stars" of Abolitionism, who grew brighter as the midnight of slavery grew dense,

CHIEF JUSTICE STORY ON WOMEN.

The Cynosure readers must excuse the first person singular pronoun in this editorial for the sake of the man and the theme.

I was at Andover within a trifle of half a century ago. I had read "Story on the Constitution;" had given a lecture after Story himself before the American Institute, in the Boston State Capitol; but had never spoken, perhaps had scarcely dared to speak to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, viz., Story himself.

George Thompson, the English Abolitionist, had come to Andover, lectured against slavery, and the town and seminary were quaking with excitement, and forty Abolitionists in 150 students had voted to request me to turn out as an Abolition lecturer, a thing much pleasanter to vote for, than to act in the face of mobs.

I went to Cambridge, rung Judge Story's bell, was told he was in his library, went right up to the great hall walled in with books and marched up to the corner counter behind which sat the awful judge himself, and told him this short, true tale:

"Venerable Sir, I am an Andover student, asked to lecture on the abolition of slavery. I wish to obey all 'compromises of the Constitution,' made by the fathers, expressed or implied. You knew the men and the times and can tell me what compromises I shall violate if I say, as a moral and religious teacher, that slaveholding must and ought to be excluded from the Christian religion?"

He was rather short than medium, hair white, with a pleasant face which became florid and white by turns as he answered my question:

"The framers of the Constitution found slavery existing and they did not disturb it. They left it as it was."

He almost trembled as he spoke. This ultra-timid and conservative Constitutional lawyer, philosopher and man, is made to speak as follows on page 195 of a recent book of Reminiscences by Josiah Quincy, of Cambridge, who was his companion, admirer and friend. Quincy is describing a "Journey with Judge Story:"

> "As we jogged on...'It is only the nature of their education,' said the Judge, 'which puts women at such disadvantages, and keeps up the notion that they are our inferiors in ability. What would a man be without his profession or business which compels him to learn something new every day? The best sources of knowledge are shut off from women, and the surprise is that they keep so nearly abreast of us as they do.'
> "I think," says Quiney, "that I am safe in saying that Judge Story was alone among the prominent men of that day in the adoption of views respecting women, very similar to those afterward proclaimed by Mr. Mill. He would not admit that sex or temperament assigned them an inferior part in the intellectual development of the race. Give them opportunities of physical and mental education equal to those enjoyed by men, and there was nothing to disqualify them from attaining equal success in any field of mental effort. Whether his views were drawn from reliable data and have been sustained by subsequent experience, are questions upon which a writer of reminiscenes need not enter, but it seems due to all parties to say that many of the theoretical opinions published by Mr. Mill were anticipated by Joseph Story."

We scarcely need tell our readers that the Mr. Mill above, is the much-quoted John Stuart Mill, in the English Parliament (1865), who began to study Greek so young he could not remember when, the editor of Bentham, and author of the Utilitarian Philosophy. He wrote for the Westminster and Edinburgh Reviews, and published immensely. His chief parliamentary effort was in behalf of woman suffrage. Two such men as Joseph Story and John Stuart Mill, one advocating giving the ballot to women and the other its justice, must make the doctrine appear safe and respectable to ordinary men. While the declaration of the brewers and distillers, that "the ballot in the hands of woman means the destruction of (their) business, is the strongest possible testimony to its practical utility."

WERE THE PURITANS MOROSE?

The Congregational clergy of Chicago and vicinity, at their Monday meeting last week, at the Grand Pacific Hotel, discussed the Sabbath. One of the oldest and best ministers spoke strongly for the Sabbath, but assumed that there must be some relaxation of the rigid Puritan institutions. "My mother," said he, "would not allow me to whistle on Sunday," etc.

A recent book by Josiah Quincy (fifth of the name) is replete with pleasant allusions to the austerity of the early New England Colonists. He mentions the fact that LaFayette was driven down to Quincy on the Sabbath to visit ex-President John Adams, "against the statute of Massachusetts." And though the writer censures certain "clubs" in Harvard, sixty years ago, one of which still exists, in which "drunkenness was exhibited with a publicity that would not now be tolerated," in whose march "came reeling and swaying from side to side, a mass of bacchanals in all stages of intoxication;" yet the devout, earnest, Cromwellian Christians of that early day appear in a less desirable light than those young bacchanals even amid their revels and debaucheries.

Hon. Charles W. Upham, a classmate of Mr. Quincy of the class of 1821, and like him a Unitarian, in his first volume of Colonial history, says:

"It is common to regard them (Puritans) as a severe, somber, pleasure-abhorring generation." But he adds, "They had their amusements, recreations, gaieties and frolics. Youth was as buoyant with hope and gladness, love as warm and tender, mirth as natural to innocence, and wit as sprightly, then as now. The merry laugh enlivened the newly opened fields, and rang through the bordering woods, as loud, jocund and unrestrained as in these older settlements." And Mr. Upham proceeds through some pages, to describe their "raisings," "huskings," "sugarings-off," etc.

And yet Mr. Quincy (p. 82) cites John Adams as saying, "Our ancestors, the Puritans, were a most unpopular set of men." Why were and why are they so? The mother who forbade her sons to "whistle on Sunday," haply, raised men who proved as useful, cheerful and happy as those who permit whistling on Sunday. And as to intellect and achievment, Cambridge and Oxford, England, turned out more brains and better morals, during the eight years of Cromwellian Puritanism, than they did during a century of the Stuarts. May it not be after all that the present and past unpopularity of the Puritans is explained by Christ himself in the words: "Because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."

The question which underlies every other on this globe, is, Who shall be its God? Who shall have its worship? Christ or Satan? Mohammed, Joseph Smith and Brigham Young were popular. The Turk is popular with his "faithful," in spite of his taxes, bowstring and harem, and the inevitable squalor of the masses. None of these slur, apologize for, and discount their spiritual ancestors. Nor do we believe Congregational and Presbyterian ministers slur and apologize for their Puritan ancestry for their faults and defects, so much as for their virtues and principles which are unpopular with the world. No matter what priestcraft, what despotism, what popular squalor, ignorance and unhappiness are provided and practiced, by a religion or church which puts Christ's worship on a level with human worships and contrivances, that accommodating religion will be popular with selfish, world-loving people. Atheists and infidels even, those avowedly such, often join the Mormon church at Salt Lake. They are of the world who worship the world's god, and the world "loves its own," and simple compliance with that "worship" would have given Christ "the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," instead of a cross!

THE SPIRIT AND POWER OF THE LODGE.

"They have filled the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger." Ezek. 8: 18.

This is the last count in the grand indictment of the secret false worship which Ezekiel saw in the "hole in the wall." Human nature has not changed, nor has the nature and influence of secret combinations. Half a century ago the people of the United States were shocked at the murder of Wm. Morgan by the Freemasons. The committee chosen by the Senate of the State of New York reported that "It has been fully established by the testimony in the various trials that have been had, that a great number of Masons have been concerned in the abduction and subsequent fate of Morgan. But notwithstanding the publicity of this transaction—still no record tells us whose hands have been stained with the blood of this Masonic victim."

This illustrates the spirit and power of an oath-bound secret order; but it was but a single instance of murder. To-day they have filled the land with violence, and murders, explosions and assassinations, are of almost daily occurrence. All over Europe this malign power threatens the life of rulers, the stability of government and the peace of society. Nihilism, Fenianism, the Society of the Black Hand, owe all their power to their sworn secrecy, and plot and execute their assassinations in spite of all the power of the strongest governments in the world. How to suppress them and to make legitimate government the paramount authority, is the great European problem of to-day.

Nor is the evil in our land less real or the danger less manifest. In all our mining and manufacturing districts, in all places where large numbers are employed, assassinations, murders and unlawful combinations of various kinds are increasingly frequent and of almost every day occurrence. Innocent workmen are waylaid and shot. A negro's house is blown up and himself and little child are killed, and police officers and the military are fired upon and death is the result. These are but few of the many instances of the terrorism which the secret trades unions exercise over the laboring people.

There is nothing more seemingly innocent and appropriate than a trades union. Men of a common craft meet for mutual instruction and aid. Such was the origin of Freemasonry. It was simply an operative art. Secrecy becomes the leading factor and this secures immunity from public criticism and a large measure of irresponsible power. No man or class of men have ever been able to resist the temptation to abuse irresponsible power. Until human nature is essentially different its possession will be characterized often by the exercise of unbridled despotism and malignant wickedness. The right of men to labor where they choose and for what they choose is denied, and can only be exercised at the risk of life. Nay, the government does not and cannot protect them in its exercise.

The source of evil in all instances is the same. It is in the irresponsible power of secret combinations and the remedy is in the suppression of such combinations. History continually repeats itself. Ezekiel's vision is substantially enacted in every Masonic lodge, and Christless worships and irresponsible combinations do and will bring forth the same results. They have already "filled the land with violence" and national and domestic safety demands their suppression.

—Bro. Ross, of Allegan, Mich., writes very hopefully of the reform work as now organized in that State. Among the marks of prosperity that are to be noted he says: "Our agent among the Hollanders reported up to June 8th for two weeks' work, sixty-eight subscribers to the stock of the Association. We have not secured a general agent as yet, but are in correspondence with Bro. Day and have encouragement that he will take the field after September. The propects in Michigan are to my mind far more encouraging than at any time since I became connected with the work five years ago."

—Ex-Senator Pomeroy passed through Chicago on his way to Kansas last Friday and called at the Cynosure office. He represents the work in Washington as prospering in various ways. The press is giving it more attention, and public men both within and without the lodge are taking note that the reform is not likely to be ephemeral.

—Bro. E. D. Bailey, New Eugland Secretary, returned to Dorset, Vermont, where Mrs. Bailey is spending the summer, to find her in very feeble health, having on the 3d inst. not been able to sit up for several days. He was, however, hoping for improvement so that they might return to Worcester this week. Theie will be but one sentiment respecting sister Bailey. None who know her but will unite their prayers that her place may be speedily resumed at her husband's side.

—The Iowa State Convention will be held as provided in the constitution of the State Association, on the last Tuesday in August, which is the 21st of the month. The place selected is Albia, the county-seat of Monroe county, on the Burlington railroad. The Iowa friends propose to make an effort to have an address from Senator Pomeroy. They cannot do better than to secure him.

—The two organs of the Conservative or main branch of the Brethren or Tunker church, the Primitive Christian, Huntingdon, Pa., and Brethren at Work, Mt. Morris, Ill., have "pooled their issues," as the railway men have it, and issue one paper, the two united in the name Gospel Messenger. The two offices are continued as each is a center of denominational influence and is more or less closely connected with a literary institution.

—A note from Bro. Eli Tapley, Columbus, Mississippi, requests the prayers of reformers for the Convention of the Associated Churches of Christ in Mississippi which meets July 23. This is the only organized effort against the lodge in that section of country, and being largely composed of members of the colored churches it is fitting that all possible encouragement and co-operation be given from brethren at the North. Friendly letters from individual associations or churches will help in this matter Address Rev. Eli Tapley, Columbus, Miss.

—Our thanks are due friend David Keister of Mt. Pleasant., Pa., for a copy of the Westmoreland Republican of Greensburg, Pa., Nov., 1827. The paper contains a statement signed by Samuel Works, Frederick F. Backus, Frederick Whittlesey and Thurlow Weed embodying the testimony iaken at the second inquest over Morgan's body. The testimony of two physicians, of Mrs. Morgan, Messrs. Harris, Gibbs, Dyer, Fitch, Weed and others was so particular and convincing that the jury, numbering twenty-three, were conviuced, and gave a verdict without delay.

—The San Francisco agency of the American Tract Society advertises in the Pacific, Congregational organ, a fine assortment of "lodge" Bibles. Such a book would be a curiosity. If prepared on lodge principles, with the name of Christ left out, what business has the American Tract Society with such a book?

—We are informed that our last reference made to the affairs of Perdue University, Indiana, based on newspaper reports is likely to misrepresent the exact state of affairs. The trustees and faculty were a unit in sustaining the rule against the college fraternities, and stood by President White nobly. His resignation was intended to defeat the action of the State Legislature, providing that the usual appropriation would be made if the secret societies were allowed to come in. The politicians only were to blame in the matter, even the press of the State denounced the action, and the people of the State, says our informant, generally stand by the Perdue faculty. Two other members of the faculty retired with Pres. White, but not for the same reasons as he, and the anti-fraternity rule remains in force, having the support of both trustees and faculty, and it is understood of the new President also. As the legislative bill failed to become law, the choice of rule or money was never presented to the institution. Pres. White intends devoting the next two years to important literary work.

—In connection with the late Jubilee anniversary at Oberlin, which, from the brief outline of the week's exercises given elsewhere, was an occasion great in its recollections and its design, as well as in the execution, a word which need not diminish the general rejoicing but make it more sincere and useful was written in the Advance of May 3d. W. S. B. Mathews, the celebrated pianist of this city, writing of Oberlin with a friendly enthusiasm, says: "Indeed, Oberlin's chief danger at the present time is from its wealthy patronage, which is disposed to make inroads upon the old-time simplicity of the place." No one who ever heard Mr. Moody comment upon the words, James 4: 6: "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble," will forget the danger of trusting in worldly patronage.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WHO ARE THE PERJURED AND PROFANE SWEARERS?

District Attorney Corkhill, in closing his argument in a murder case yesterday, animadverted severely upon the character of witnesses recently put on the stand hy both the prosecution and defense, in two criminal trials. He said "almost one hundred witnesses have been examined, and so much perjury and utter disregard of the obligations of an oath I never saw in a court of justice." Colonel Corkhill suggested that the missionaries have a field for labor right here, at the Capital, among the people who, as witnesses, take no thought as to the sanctity of an oatb. It might also he suggested that the prosecuting officers of the government have a duty to perform in this field. There are distinct and adequate laws for the punishment of perjury. Why not make an example of some of these fellows who so glibly swear to what is false?—Evening Star, June 30.

I quite agree with Colonel Corkhill that missionaries have a field of labor right here at the capital, among the people who as witnesses take no thought as to the sanctity of an oath. We hope to do some of this missionary work, and respectfully ask the sympathy and co-operation of all good citizens. But we believe that "the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God."

So long as ministers of the Gospel and officers of justice from the President down to the policemen, are taking and consenting to a great multitude of extra-judicial and profane oaths, in which penalties are invoked, the execution of which would be a horrid crime against both human and Divine law, it will be very difficult to secure a just sense of sanctity to any oath. There are hundreds of places in this city where oaths are secretly administered and taken, which in their terms are shocking to the moral sense of mankind, and which, with the exception of the clause of secrecy, are expected to be broken.

Let me call Col. Corkhill's attention to the Farewell Address of George Washington. "Let it be simply asked where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice?" And he will please consider in this connection the language of Gov. Snyder of Pennsylvania in his annual message of 1816: "The frequency of oaths, the levity with which they are commonly administered, on occasions trifling and unnecessary, beget indifference and irreverence for the most awful appeal which the creature can make to his Creator. This has not only a most pernicious influence upon morals and the order of society generally, but it causes the commission of numerous injuries by perjury. This abomination in our land, it is feared will increase while oaths are uselessly multiplied, and so long as the distinction between merely moral and constructively legal perjuries, shield the perjured against prosecution and deserved punishment."

Such were the opinions of Washington and Snyder on the administration of extra-judicial and needless oaths. Their views are not now less timely and important than when they were written.

In reference to the suggestion that men be prosecuted for false swearing, would it not be well that the administration of injurious and profane oaths be also suppressed; and that our National Congress enact for this District the excellent law of Vermont, which forbids the administration of any extra-judicial oath, or any oath or obligation with intentional secrecy.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

H. H. HINMAN.

The more secret societyists boast of the wonders of charity which they perform, the more will those who are acquainted with the principles of these orders be established in their opposition. Only the ignorant or thoughtless will be deceived by such vain boasts. The charity of an association that will have nothing to do with Christ is only selfishness in a refined and delusive form, practiced for the glory of the order, not for the glory of God. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin," and it is none the less sin when it is pompously paraded before the people as splendid virtue which surpasses all the beneficence of the church. For those who do not want Christ, the lodge may supply a want, poor as the supply is; but Christians should have nothing to do with it, but set their faces against it.—Lutheran Standard.

—Everything seems to have been fixed agreeably for Commander Eastman, of the navy. He went before an examining board for promotion. The Medical Board passed him; so he was all right if he could pass the professional examiuation, although the Medical Board stated that he had heart disease. The professional board refused to pass him on the ground that he was morally incapable for promotion. The president set aside the finding, and sent him back to the Medical Board for examination for retirement. This board has reported him eligible for retirement for disability. The manipulation shows how the hand of every man is against the government. Eastman's friends so fixed it that if he could not be promoted he could be retired, and so get three-quarter pay the rest of his life.—Daily Paper.

LETTER TO THE ANNUAL MEETING.

CRANDON, SPINK CO., DAK.,
June, 11, 1883.

To the President and members of the annual meeting of the N. C. A. Assembled.

GREETING:—The distance from the place seems to justify my not being with you, which I assure you is by no means congenial with my feelings. Be assured my heart is with you, and you have my prayers and best wishes, and how gladly would I have taken you all once more by the hand with the warm strong clasp of those whose love for humanity has been intensified by the love of God through Jesus Christ to a fallen world, having taken possessiou of the heart giving it inspiration as nothing else can, to raise souls dead in sin "to a newness of life in Christ Jesus." Go forward then, my dear brethren, in this noble work of opening the doors of the prison-house of Satan so the captives may go free who are now bound fast by the slavish chains of the lodge; but never forget that man's strength can be measured by the strength of man, but the strength of man's strongest opposition is nothing before God, and he alone is our stronghold. There are Masons and Odd-fellows here on these prairies. One, with whom I had a long controversy, said there were thirty in the vicinity in which we live; but if he is as much mistaken in this as he is as to the number of Masons in the United States, the number would be materially less. He said there are between four and five million in the United States.

I have seen nothing in the Cynosure from any one in this Territory. I have stuek my stakes on secrecy, prohibition, the Sabbath, in short for Christ. We have organized a Sabbath-school, had fifty-seven enrolled last Sabbath. We hope to take this neighborhood for Christ.

Yours in the bonds of Christian fellowship,

JOHN DORCAS.

CARD FROM BRO. STARRY.

CLARENCE, Iowa, July 3d, 1883.

MR. EDITOR:—I read in the Cynosure of June 28th, an account of my dwelling being destroyed by fire on June 11th, and the loss I sustained thereby, which is all true. It also stated that it would be a kiudness worthily bestowed if friends who are able would send me a contribution to help make up my loss. Now in regard to the above, I wish to say that I highly appreciate the kindness of the writer, but I am very sorry that anything was said about contributions being sent to me. Had I known that any such thing was going to be done I would certainly have opposed it, because I do not wish any coutributions whatever. I am not entirely destitute, I am young and able to work, and above all I have a brave, noble, self-sacrificing Christian companion. who has continually suffered persecution from the mouths of the enemy, just because she happened to be the wife of a "perjured villian," who knows it is his duty and does oppose devilism, and who is more than willing for the sake of Christ's cause to stand by me in cases of danger and difficulty while engaged in this great reform work, even though friends forsake and desert us. Did I say friends? True friends never forsake one for opposing sin. It is ouly seeming friends that desert at such times.

So you see I am pretty well fixed after all. Wife and I together intend to begin where the fire left us, and by God's assistance try to climb the hill again. I will just say to the friends that contemplate sending a contribution to me. Don't send it to me, but send it to the General Agent of the National Christian Association, and tell him to apply it on the Washington building or to the Cynosure extension fund. By so doing you will aid in forwardiug the great work we have on hand. I say again, don't send a contribution to me, I don't want something for nothing; but if the friends have work for me in the lecture field I am ready to do the work and willing to receive a reasonable compensation for the same. S. E STARRY.

NOTE.—The reference to contributions was made on the principle that generally in such cases an expression of sympathy is worth a little more if accompanied by substantial aid. We are glad that it was printed, else we should not have had so noble a response from Bro. Starry. All the more, say we to friends and readers, is such a brother entitled to our cordial sympathy and the right hand of assistance? He suggests how it can be done.—ED. CYN.

—A correspondent who is apparently an anti-tobaccon ist writes as follows: "The native Canadians are not a handsome race, and the traces of Indian blood are often discovered in their physiognomy. But the dwarfing effect of the constant use of tobacco for many generations, early and late, is clearly to be seen. No excessively smoking and drinking race can get or keep ascendency."

THE HOME.

THINE EYES SHALL SEE.

[Isa. xxxiii., 17.]

Thine eyes shall see! yes, thine, who blind erewhile,
Now trembling toward the new-found light dost flee;
Leave doubting, and look up with trustful smile.
Thine eyes shall see.

Thine eyes shall see! not in some dream Elysian,
Not in thy fancy, glowing though it be,
Not e'en in thy faith, but in unveiled vision,
Thine eyes shall see.

Thine eyes shall see! not on thyself depend
God's promises, the faithful, firm and free.
Ere they shall fail, earth, heaven itself shall end:
Thine eyes shall see.

Thine eyes shall see! not in a swift glance cast,
Gleaning one ray to brighten memory,
But while a glad eternity shall last
Thine eyes shall see.

Thine eyes shall see the King! The very same
Whose love shone forth upon the curseful tree,
Who bore thy guilt, who calleth thee by name,
Thine eyes shall see.

Thine eyes shall see the King! The Mighty One,
The Many-crowned, the Light-enrobed; and he Shall bid thee share the kingdom he hath won:
Thine eyes shall see.

And in his beauty! Stay thee, mortal song!
The Altogether Lovely One must be
Unspeakable in glory; yet ere long
Thine eyes shall see.

Yes! though the land be very far away,
A step, a moment, ends the way for thee;
Then changing grief for gladness, night for day,
Thine eyes shall see!

THE SPIRIT INDWELLING.

The trouble is with Christians, they want God to give them a note of hand certified to for six months; but you can't get his blessing on that line. Will you take it as you do the atmosphere, a breath at a time? Who would ask for a guaranty for atmosphere? Why the world is full of it! but no fuller than of the Holy Ghost! It is simply giving all and taking all! Can you make the full surrender? Are you willing to be counted a fool for Christ? You must be content to take a place no higher than the Master. If they have called him Beelzebub, you may be sure they will say some pretty unhandsome things about you. So many have a struggle and give up to God; realize peace and victory to an extent, but find a certain contingent of reserve. We ask, "Are you willing the Lord's will shall be done?" "Oh, yes." "Are you willing it be done in this way?" "Yes; but I am sure that is not his will." They expect to reach heaven, of course, but all the time there is an unsatisfied hunger and thirst in their soul. Some make a mistake in consecrating themselves to the work, instead of to Jesus. Others want the Spirit, so that they can use him, rather than let him use them. But in securing this great blessing, the chief difficulty lies at the point of belief. You want the witness before you believe. You treat God like a common liar! "I'll believe it when I have it." Why, you can put any liar in Maine on that ground, and have safe dealings with him. Then you say, "I am examining the doctrine." Well, be careful lest you examine it to death, and yourself also. You can only go so far with the head. It is high grade for a good distance, but you come to the tunnel at last, where you have to "go in the dark and trust." Here you begin to pull the bell rope and cry, "Stop this train till I see about it." So, with overmuch theory, many men become halls of theology instead of "temples of the Holy Ghost."

One morning, while I was dressing, our baby boy (Ben, we call him) awoke, and thought it was time for him to be up. He crawled carefully across the bed to the edge. There he paused and looked over. Why he didn't go over head first, I don't know; but instead, he turned himself around and proceeded to push himself over backwards. But the sensation was unpleasant, so he drew up again, turned around, and looked at the situation. "Examining the doctrine," you see. Again he backed off, but his heart failed him, and he drew himself up again. At last, however, after a piteous look at me, as if to say, "Papa, why don't you help me?" he balanced himself a moment with great care, and, letting go his hold, dropped on the floor, of course unhurt, as it was only a few inches below him. Faith had to come before feeling. Have you got the blessing? No. How do you know? Because I do not feel it. And you never will before you trust. You have to come to a place where you will take God at his word. Will you now? Will you believe that he does it? "All things whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye have received them and ye shall have them."—Times of Refreshing.

HOLINESS IN THE BIBLE.

It breathes in the prophecy—thunders in the law—murmurs in the narrative—whispers in the promises—supplicates in the prayers—sparkles in the poetry—resounds in the songs—speaks in the types—glows in the imagry—voices in the language, and burns in the spirit of its whole scheme, from its alpha to its omega, from its beginning to its end. Holiness! holiness needed! holiness required! holiness offered! holiness attained! holiness a present duty—a present privilege—a present enjoyment, is the progress and completeness of its wondrous theme! It is the truth glowing all over—webbing all through revelation; the glorious truth which sparkles and whispers and sings and shouts in all its history, and biography, and poetry, and prophecy and precept, and promise, and prayer; the great central truth of the system.—Bishop Foster.

WHAT SIN WILL DO.

There was but one crack in the lantern, and the wind has found it out and blown out the candle. How great a mischief one unguarded point of character may cause us! One spark blew up the magazine and shook the whole country for miles around. One leak sank the vessel and drowned all on board. One wound will kill the body.

One sin destroys the soul.

It little matters how carefully the rest of the lantern is protected, the one point which is damaged is quite sufficient to admit the wind, and so it little matters how zealous a man may be in a thousand things, if he tolerates one darling sin; Satan will find out the flaw and destroy all of his hopes. The strength of a chain is to be measured, not by the strongest, but by its weakest links, for if the weakest snaps what is the use of the rest? Satan is a close observer, and knows exactly where our weak points are; we have need of very much watchfulness, and we have great cause to bless our merciful Lord who prayed for us that our faith fail not. Either our pride or our sloth, our ignorance, our anger, or our lust would prove our ruin, unless grace interposed; any one of our senses or faculties might admit the foe, yea, our virtues and graces might be the gates of entrance to our enemies. O, Jesus, if thou hast indeed bought me with thy blood, be pleased to keep me by thy power even unto the end.—Spurgeon.

IN BAD COMPANY.

A few years ago an infidel lawyer in St. Louis, during the progress of a great revival which he ridiculed, was on his way to a drug store to procure some medicine for his sick child. It was a bright afternoon of the Lord's day, and a street preacher was speaking of Jesus to an immense crowd in one of the worst quarters of the city. The curiosity of the infidel was excited, and he stopped for a moment on the edge of the vast throng, to see what the gathering of so many persons meant.

Not a word the preacher uttered could he hear; but near him and mounted on a wagon, stood a man who was pouring forth a volume of blasphemy, and obscenity, and hate, cursing the Bible and Christ and Christianity. The infidel noticed that the blasphemer had quite a group of sympathizers around him, who laughed at his coarse jests, and loudly applauded his vile sentiments. But he also noticed that the group was made up of the very scum of society. Thieves, burglars, prostitutes, bloated drunkards, men, women and half-grown lads upon whom the police kept a watchful eye, constituted the admiring audience of the foul wretch who was flooding them with his tide of filth.

The lawyer after awhile bowed his head in utter shame, as he reflected that he was identified with this spawn of hell. It is true that he was an infidel on far other and higher grounds, resting his skepticism upon intellectual and scientific objections to the Bible; but he remembered that the arguments and witticisms of his class of thinkers dribbled down through the various strata of the community, becoming dirtier and more offensive at each successive descent, until they reappeared at the bottom in the disgusting shape that faced him from the wagon of the infidel orator. He walked away chagrined and mortified, and without attending one of the revival meetings, without hearing a sermon, he renounced infidelity, became a Christian, and determined to devote the remainder of his days in defense of the cause he had sought to destroy.—Armory.

HOUSEKEEPER'S HINTS.

NAPHTHA.—The vexatious night-foes never met a more deadly enemy than naphtha, the lighter part of petroleum, sold under various names for twenty-five to thirty cents per gallon. Procure a machine oiler; one that holds a pint is convenient. With this filled with naphtha go over in the same way as in oiling a sewing-machine, visiting every joint and crack and flaw and spring and even corners of matresses. It does not spoil carpet or bedding or wall paper. Sofas and cribs may be drenched in this way, and if daily applied the cause soon ceases. Only one precaution should be observed, it must not be used at night, for the gas arising from the naphtha, if mixed with the atmosphere, becomes explosive if a light be applied. Hence it might be unsafe in a room with a cook-stove unless the fire be extinguished. The gas passes away in an hour. The same fluid is used to wash kid gloves. Wash like any cloth, and rinse till clean, changing the fluid.

WHOLESALE MOTH EXTERMINATION.—The American Agriculturist gives an easy process, of which it says: We mentioned it to a furniture dealer and repairer, and he said he had practiced it for some time, and that it was a sort of a 'trade secret.'

"A set of furniture that seemed to be alive with the larvae, from the month it came new, and from which hundreds of these pests had been picked, and brushed, was set into a room by itself. Three gallons of benzine were purchased, at thirty cents a gallon, retail. Using a small watering pot, with a fine rose sprinkler, the whole upholstery was saturated through and through with the benzine. Result: Every moth, larvae and egg was killed. The benzine dried out in a few hours, and its entire odor disappeared in three or four days. Not the slightest harm happened to the varnish, or wood, or fabrics, or hair stuffing. That was months ago, and not a sign of a moth has since appeared. The carpets were also well sprinkled all round the sides of the rooms with equally good effect. To have known this two years ago would have beeen worth at least $50,00 in the saving to a single set of furniture, and would have saved many days of most annoying labor. For furs, flannels, indeed all woolen articles containing moths, benzine is most valuable. Put them in a box, sprinkle them with benzine, close the box tightly, and in a day or two the pests will be exterminated, and the benzine will all evaporate on opening.

"Caution: Benzine, in fluid or vapor form, is very inflamible; therefore, when using it, have no fire or burning light in the room—not even a match on the floor to be trod on. With this precaution it is safe. With the windows open its odor even will soon disappear."

—A vegetarian reports to the British Medical Journal the result of this year's experience without meat. At first he found vegetables insipid, and had to use sauces and pickles to get them down. As soon as he became accustomed to the diet all condiments were put aside, except a little salt. The desire for tobacco and alcohol left him spontaneously. Then all his digestive functions became regular, and he found himself wholly free from headaches and billious attacks. After three months a troublesome rheumatism left him, and at the end of a year he had gained eight pounds in weight. He believes he can do more mental labor than before, and that all his senses are more acute. For breakfast he has brown bread, apples and coffee; dinner consists of two vegetables, brown bread and pie or pudding; for tea he rejoices in bread and jam, with milk and water; and for supper, bread, jam, cold pudding, and, as a luxury, boiled onions. Eggs, milk, butter and cheese are used only in very small quantities. The dietist is a doctor, and his statement is drawing out many similar ones from medical men

CORN AND TOMATOES.—One of my neighbors thinks that dried sweet corn is a poor dish in comparison with salted corn. She cuts her corn from the cob and packs it in jars, a layer of salt on the bottom, on the top, and all the way through. When cooked, first soak the salt out of the corn. She also finds tomatoes delicious, to fry them in slices in beef suet, pack them in jars and fill up with hot suet. In winter take out and warm up—ripe tomatoes, of course.

NO!

Somebody asked me to take a drink,
What did I tell him? What do you think?
I told him—No.

Somebody asked me one day to play
A game of cards; and what did I say?
I told him—No.

Somebody laughs that I will not swear
And lie and steal; but I do not care:
I told him—No.

Somebody asked me to take a sail
On the Sabbath day; 'twas of no avail;

LIVES OF CELEBRATED WOMEN.

LADY HUNTINGTON.

June 17, 1791, in her home in Sparyfields, London, Lady Huntington, one of the most remarkable Christian ladies of any age, after whispering joyfully to her friends, "I shall go to my Father to-night," passed away, aged eighty-four years. Selina Shirley, afterward Lady Huntington, was born at Chartley, Eng., August 24, 1709, the second daughter of the Earl of Ferrars. It was a period of spiritual dearth and moral darkness, not only in England, but throughout all her colonies. It was just before the Wesleys and Whitefield "lightened over England," and before the Tenants, Edwards and others, aroused the spiritual life in our own country. The profession of religion seemed to be little more than a mere form, so much so that evangelical ministers were branded as fanatics, and it was popular to break up their meetings by mobs. As in Apostolic times, they were regarded as "turners of the world upside down," and especially were they frowned upon by the rich and the noble.

At the age of twenty-one she was married to the Earl of Huntington, and became a model wife and mother; but, until some eleven years after her marriage, she was ignorant of the power of godliness. She was laid upon a bed of sickness, and here new light beamed upon her soul. Like Paul, she was enabled to say, "God, who commandeth the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts." As soon as she was restored to health, she sent for John and Charles Wesley, then in London, to come and visit her. These noble men, together with Whitefield and Ingham and others, by their itinerant preaching were arousing many from their death-like slumbers to new life and energy. They found in Lady Huntington a patron and a friend, and her house in London became the meeting place for such men as we have named, and such men as Watts, Doddridge, Col. Gardiner and others. Lady Huntington felt it also her duty to call the attention of her friends to their need of an interest in the Lord Jesus Christ, a proceeding at that period of English history altogether new, and she often met with a rebuff. The Duchess of Buckingham thus replied to one of her notes: "The doctrines of these preachers are most repulsive, and strongly tinctured with impertinence and disrespect toward their superiors in perpetually endeavoring to level all ranks and to do away with all distinctions. It is montrous to be told that you have a heart as sinful as the commonest wretches that crawl upon the earth. This is highly offensive and insulting, and I can not but wonder that your ladyship should relish any sentiments so much at variance with high rank and good breeding." And not only were her efforts directed to the rich, she delighted to speak to the poor of the wondrous grace that is in Christ Jesus. The story has often been repeated of her conversation with a laborer in her garden, which was heard by another through a hole in the wall, and which was the means of leading the unseen hearer to a knowledge of the Saviour. Thus did this noble woman labor to bring all with whom she came in contact to know and trust the Saviour so precious to her. By and by her husband is taken away, and she is left to manage his wealth and to care for their childreu, but she proved herself equal to the task. Dr. Doddridge, in a letter to a friend, speaks of her thus: "I think I never saw so much of the image of God in any woman upon earth. Were I to write what I know of her it would fill your heart with wonder, joy and praise. She desired me to educate a lad for the dissenting ministry at her expense (she belonged to the Established church), till he be fit to come to my academy, and this is but one of a multitude of good works which she is continually performing. I must tell you, however, one observation which struck me much. 'None,' said she, 'know how to prize Christ but those who are zealous in good works.'"

In January, 1739, Whitefield was announced to preach in Moorfields, then a common near London Wall, where the rabble of the city were accustomed to assemble and hold daily and nightly revels. He was told if he attempted to preach in such a place that he would lose his life, but he made the attempt, and the result was, the great multitude was melted, and tears and groans might be seen and heard from the more abandoned. He continued to preach there from a temporary shed, roughly thrown up, and called a Tabernacle, but now it is proposed to put up a more substantial building, and it was finished and opened in June, 1753.

In November, 1756, another building was erected by Whitefield in the west end of London—it was known as Tottenham Court Chapel, which, we believe was removed in 1830, and is now used as a Congregational church. Some five years previous to the opening of this first building, Whitefield had been appointed chaplain to Lady Huntington, and preached frequently to many of the nobility in her mansion in Park Street, London. And while thus related to her he made several tours through the country, including Scotland, and the result was, the leaders of the revived evangelical party, including Lady Glenorchy, were led into a correspondence with Lady Huntington, which resulted finally in a college at Trevecca, Wales, where godly men could be trained for the ministry, and in numerous chapels all over the land, that the masses of the people might learn the way of salvation—a doctrine at that period obscured by the formalism of the church, so much so that a leading dignitary felt called upon to publish a sermon on "The great folly and danger of being righteous overmuch." Lady Huntington, as a peeress of the realm, was able for a long time to give protection to her chaplains in their work of preaching the gospel, aud she appointed them, for this purpose, such men as Venn and Romaine; but by and by, by a decision of the courts, this protection was denied, and the authority of the parish rector made paramount. A number of those pastors which she specially aided were, therefore, under necessity of seceding from the establishment with their congregations, and thus another denomination was added to the list in England, known as the Lady Huntington Connection, though they were really Whitefield Methodists. Possibly it would have been better if they had all united with the Wesleyan Methodists, but they judged otherwise. The denomination differed from the Wesleyan Methodists in being Calvinistic; from the Independents in admitting the expediency of a scriptnral liturgy; from the Church of England, in their zeal to reach the masses with the gospel, and in their opposition to the legal formalities which prevented the free proclamation of the gospel anywhere without regard to parish lines. The college at Trevecca was now a valuable auxiliary to the new denomination. The principal cause of its being undertaken at the first was the expulsion of several students from Oxford because they visited the hamlets of the poor and tried to teach them the way of salvation. The charge against them was, "Holding Methodistical tenents." On their expulsion, one of the "Heads of Houses" suggested that, as these six gentlemen were expelled for having too much religion, it would be very proper to inquire into the conduct of some who had too little, but at that period it was no fault with the dignitaries of either the church or the nation to be without religion. Soon it furnished devoted ministers for the new denomination. It was finally removed to Chestnut, near London, where we believe it still exists.

For over fifty years this noble lady used her influence, her time and her wealth to promote the preaching of the gospel, and with wonderful success. Bright must be the crown that she now wears around the throne. She was styled in derision, by Horace Walpole, the Queen of the Methodists, but it was certainly an honorable title, and probably no Queen of England ever did so much work that would meet the approval of heaven as she did. But her work was by and by finished. The infirmities of old age came upon her rather than any special sickness, and, after providing for her charities and arranging for the carrying out of her plans, she went, as we have already described, to her Father's house in heaven. "Blessed are the dead."—Heroes and Heroines of the Christian Church.

OUR OWN WORK.

A story is told of a king who went into his garden one morning and found everything withering and dying. He asked an oak that stood near the gate what the trouble was? He found that it was sick of life and determined to die because it was not tall and beautiful like the pine. The pine was ont of heart because it could not bear grapes like the vine. The vine was going to throw its life away because it could not stand erect and have as fine frnit as the pomegranate; and so on throughout the garden. Coming to a heart's-ease, he found its bright face uplifted, as full of cheerfulness as ever. Said the king,

"Well, heart's-ease, I am glad to find one brave little flower in this general disconragement and dying. You don't seem one bit disheartened."

"No, your majesty. I know I am of small acconnt, but I concluded yon wanted a heart's-ease wheu you planted me. If you had wanted an oak or a pine or a vine or a pomegranate, you would have set one out. So I am bound to be the best heart's-ease that ever I can."

Very wise, trnly was the heart's-ease. We had better follow its example.—Sel.

TEMPERANCE.

THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIANS.

Few religious denominations have given of late so much attention as the Covenanters to temperance topics. At the late meeting of their Synod, able reports on the use of liquor and tobacco were adopted, from which we extract as follows:

In view of the state of the intemperance question we recommend the following resolutions for the action of Synod:

Resolved 1st, That it is most certainly the duty of every Christian totally to abstain from intoxicating beverages, as such, in whatever form they may be offered, and that any deviation from this rule is in direct violation of the divine precept: "Look not thou on the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright." Prov. 23: 31.

2. That pastors and sessions are hereby warranted in taking cognizance of any violation of this principle, and of following it with the censures of the church if the milder measures of remonstrance and brotherly reproof should fail to secure the desired end.

3. That Synod reiterate its former recommendation against the use of intoxicating wine in the Lord's supper.

4. That it is the duty of every minister to give the trumpet a certain sound on the question of temperance, and each pastor is directed to preach at least twice during the coming year on the subject.

5. That we rejoice in the growing favor in which prohibition is being held, and we pledge ourselves anew to the principle and to the use of every legitimate means for the securing of coustitutional prohibition in the several States which we represent.

6. That we regard the temperance agitatiou as practically a part of the movement that is progressing in the interests of national reform, and it is the firm conviction of this Synod that temperance can never rest upon a permanent basis until our national constitution supports it in obedience to the claims of Prince Messiah.

REPORT ON ARTICLE FOR TESTIMONY, ON TEMPERANCE.

The committee appointed to prepare an article to be inserted in the Testimony of the church would report the following, to be incorporated as No. 6 in the chapter on Church Fellowship:

"Mutual help in a holy life and maintenance of the truth being one design of church fellowship that individuals may be saved from the ruin wrought by intemperance, and that a testimony may be borne against this sin, and against the temptations thereto, the followers of Christ should totally abstain from the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicants as a beverage."

We recommend the following, to be inserted as No. 9 among the errors comdemned in the same chapter:

"That the occasional or habitual use of intoxicants as a beverage is consistent with Christian duty and fellowship."

We recommend the following proof texts to accompany the above article in the Testimony:

Prov. 23:31, 32: "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

Rom. 14:21: "It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."

1 Thess. 5:22: Abstain from all appearance of evil.

Titus 2:12: "Denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world."

Ephes. 5:18: "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit."

TOBACCO.

It is one of the principles of the church that her testimony is progressive. This is illustrated in the question of slavery, which was practiced by some of the members of the church, until she purged herself of the iniquity and set herself in array against it without; or again the question of secrecy, which, becoming a growing evil, demanded her notice, and the testimony of the church became clear and distinct against it; or the question of temperance. Once the distiller, the brewer, the wholesaler, the retailer sat down at the communion table side by side with the abstainer, the moderate drinker, the tippler and the occasional drunkard. To-day the church is washed from this vile stain, and her testimony is clear and explicit. But one of the popular evils of the day calls loudly for the voice of the church, because in its very nature it antagonizes the Christian work.

We can no longer claim the excuse of ignorance in regard to the evil of tobacco, which is known and acknowledged to be a very poisonous, and hence a very injurious plant.

Everyone who has ever tasted it knows that its first effects are to produce violent sickness, and it is only when its nse has been persevered in that the system tolerates it at all. All physicians agree that the use of tobacco is especially injurious to the system of the youug, growing boy, and experience tells us that then is the period when the habit is usually formed.

It seems high time that the church would awake to her responsibility in regard to an evil which calls forth a prohibitory law from one of the principal courts of Europe, and from the Legislature of one of our own States.

If smoking is such an evil that Germany forbids her youth to do it, and follows the violation of the injuuction with heavy penalties; if the smoking of cigarettes is so deleterious that the future of New Jersey is greatly endangered by the youth of the State coutracting the habit, then here is an evil on which the church owes it to her members and her Head that she speak out clearly and authoritatively.

We therefore recommend the following for the action of Synod:

Resolved 1st. That the use of tobacco, in any of the varied forms in which it is consumed, being the practice of an evil habit, weakens the moral force of the nser in reference to other evil habits, and is especially damaging to those who are actively engaged in temperance efforts.

2. That it is a discouraging and difficult task to undertake to restrain the youth from contracting the habit while the many in the pew and a few in the pulpit are allowed to continue its use.

3. That Synod admonish all officers in the church, ministers, ruling elders and deacons, who use tobacco in any form, to at once break off the evil habit, thereby setting the youth a practical example and illnstration of the inspired statement, "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts."

4. That we as a Synod affectionately admonish every brother who has fallen into this evil practice that his course is not good; that so far he is "defiling the temple of God," doing violence to his body, blunting the sensibilities of his higher nature, and rendering himself offensive, sometimes even odious in the eyes of others.

5. That the cultivation, manufacture and sale of tobacco is wrong, and persons under the care of this Synod are admonished to abstain from complicity in any way with an evil which is at present quite popular. Especially would we remind those engaged in mercantile business that duty requires them to cease handling an article which can only be called a luxury, and which is in fact a filthy poison.

LITERARY.

The latest and one of the most readable books on Phrenology has been lately written by Nelson Sizer, one of the editors of the Phrenological Journal, entitled "Forty Years in Phrenology." This book, which is handsomely printed, and contains over twenty illustrations, will interest readers, young and old. Derived as the matter is from more than forty years of active work as a lecturer on Phrenology and Phrenological examiner, the author has had abundant opportunity to come in contact with every kind of human being. For more than thirty years he has been the chief examiner in the office of Fowler & Wells, and in his experience has come in contact with more than two hundred thousand persons. The author says in his preface, that he "has been invited to visit schools and colleges, asylums for the insane, poor houses and prisons—rare and peculiar persons—those endowed with genius in special directions; the eccentric, those idiotic in whole or in part; in fact, every odd, strange and singular character has been hunted up and brought to test Phrenology or its exponent, and in many instances to gain hints for the better treatment and management of these peculiar cases. Thus many curious incidents have occurred which throng the memory and demand recognition and record." The study of Phrenology has waned greatly of late years, and the assumptions of many who attempted to make it the great science have failed. But though the principles are not acceptable the meeting of this observing lecturer with thousands of people was real, and afforded such a field of observation as make his comments and recollections entertaining and instructive; and many of his ideas on diet are of great value. For sale by Jansen, McClurg & Co., Chicago; price, $1.50.

A new Sabbath-school wallet is the handy and useful invention of Mr. Alfred L. Lewell, publisher, of this city, consisting of a simple envelope with five or six compartments, made of strong manilla, in handy pocket size, and useful for saving notes and paper scraps. Printed on both sides are suggestions for teachers which are of perpetual value.

T. B. Arnold, publisher of the Free Methodist, has issued good-sized, handsome pamphlet giving a sketch of the camp meetings held near St. Charles, Ill., for a series of years, containing also discourses by Revs. Geo. D. Watson and B. T. Roberts, and some suggestions respecting the management of camp meetings. Price 40c.

The August Century will be the "Midsummer Holiday number." It will open with a paper by Prof. Alfred M. Mayer, of the Stevens institute, an enthusiastic sportsman, on "Bob White, the Game Bird of America." Prof. Mayer calls him, as the bird calls himself, "Bob White," and as he is known everywhere, although in the North and East he is commonly called Quail, and in the South and West, Partridge. The illustrations of this paper are said to be remarkable specimens of James C. Beard's skill as a delineator of birds.

THE CHURCHES.

—The report is that most of the churches of Chicago have discontinued their Sunday evening services until September. The Congregational ministers have adjourned their Monday morning meetings until the same time.

—Mr. Moody, the evangelist, has sent his own pastor, the Rev. E. R. Drake, of Northfield, Mass., to serve the Chicago Avenue church during the months of July and August. Mr. Drake commenced his labors last Lord's day. It is welcome news that one church realizes that the devil takes no vacation.

—The Rev. J. R. Downey, from the Tellugu Mission, India, reports that there have been over 1,200 natives baptized there since January. This is the mission in the district visited by the famine several years ago.

—The Christian Harvester has a late letter from Wm. Taylor, the independent missionary bishop, who says, writing from Valparaiso, Chili: "This is about the hardest place in this world to secure a real spiritual work among the people. The great need of this country, and of this city especially, is, a Pentecostal work of God. The great difficulty is in raising up a Pentecostal agency that God can use. I have not been here long enough to get a footing for even a series of special services; will probably have to go round and get a Philip and a Simon, one by one, and slowly train a working force. I am trusting God to lead me on, and give me success, however long it may take to get the workers with the power to do effective work."

—The Congregational and Methodist congregations at Bellow's Falls, meet together for worship in the Methodist church, and get along very harmoniously and happy in their social meetings and Sunday-school arrangements. The weekly offerings of both societies are put in the same boxes—two collectors from each society serving—the envelopes properly separated, and the loose change equally divided.

—The Swedish Lutheran Augustana Synod met in Red Wing, Minn., on the 15th ult. and continued in session for one week. The Ministerium met two days previous to pass upon candidates for ordination. Twenty-two had made application, but an examination showed that six were not yet sufficiently prepared for the sacred calling, and were advised to attend the Theological Seminary at Rock Island. The other sixteen were set apart and will serve the church, going to ten different States. The Synod proposes to raise a jubilee fund of $100,000 for the erection of new buildings for the College and Seminary, and much time was spent in the discussion of ways and means. The buildings are to be large enough to accommodate four or five hundred students.

—During the past twenty years 17,000,000 of Bibles, or Bible-portions, in fifteen languages, have been sold or given at the Crystal Palace Bible-stand. One very fruitful branch of the work has been the distribution of Scriptures in Flemish, Dutch and French by book-post to 1,516 towns and villages in Belgium. Of course, priestly opposition has arisen. The peasants of Zele, in Flanders, were threatened by their cure with a nocturnal Satanic visitation on account of the "bad books" in their possession, and assembled one night, well armed, to receive the foe. To while away their tedious watch, they examined the books, and, becoming greatly interested, read them through the night. Their good report spread through Zele, every copy not seized by the cure was eagerly read, and application made for a fresh supply.

—Story county, Iowa, which gave the largest vote for prohibition in the State is nearly a Lutheran county all through. Its officials and merchants are principally Lutherans, and the county has three times as many Lutheran churches as all the other denominations combined. They mostly belong to the General Synod.

—The Congregational Year Book reports 1,198 ministers unemployed, and 1,023 churches without a pastor. A conundrum propounded by Zion's Herald is, "How to bring demand and supply together?"

—It is announced that the revisers of the Old Testament have now concluded their final examinations and correction of the text, and are engaged in making the appendix, which, like that to the New Testament, states the unadjusted differences between the American and English members. The committee will meet in July, and resume their labors in September. The Old Testament will appear from the University Press next spring.

—Mrs. Grattan Guinness, wife of the celebrated Gospel preacher of that name, occupies a prominent place in the missionary world. She is intimately connected with a faith college for training faith missionaries and through them with the China Island Mission and Livingston or Congo Mission. Concerning this last region there has been much anxiety on account of French interference, and there seem also to have been doubts of Stanley's friendliness to the missionaries. In these circumstances Mrs. Guinness consulted the King of the Belgians, who sent Mr. Stanley and his expedition to open up the vast Congo region, not for the advantage of Belgium alone, but of the world, on principles that would protect the natives from the curses of war and rum. The result of her conference is told to the missionaries in a letter which we copy in full on account of the present general interest concerning the Congo country.

—The Quakers of Philadelphia and vicinity are greatly concerned as to the falling off of their members. At the Yearly Meeting held lately this matter was made the subject of investigation and discussion. Several leading Friends gave it as their opinion that the increase of wealth was at the bottom of the trouble. It is known that most of the Friends are exceedingly thrifty. Some of them have made vast amounts of money. Their children have no fancy for the severe broad-brim and scoop-bonnet fashions, but desire to put on more style, and to live like the world's people. Very few of the young folks, rich or poor, are following in the ways of their parents.

—Mr. Spurgeon is quite well again and conducting the Tabernacle services regularly.

—The tombs of Egypt continue to furnish evidence in support of the Scriptures. In one at Sakkarat the name and titles of Joseph have been found, and inscriptions virtually calling him the savior of the people. In another at Thebes a painting has been discovered, which it is decided represents the Hebrews making bricks.

—Services commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the First Presbyterian church of Chicago, were held Sabbath June 24th. At the morning service in the church fully 2,500 persons were present. The Rev. Dr. Robert W. Patterson, the Rev. Arthur Mitchell, and the Rev. Dr. John H. Barrows participated in the exercises. The church was established fifty years ago by thirty professing Christians, who were in the garrison at this point and who came from Sault Ste. Marie. The first pastor was the Rev. Dr. Jeremiah Porter, who was born in Hadley, Mass., in 1804. Services were first held in a carpenter's shop at the fort, and later in a log-cabin. Before this church was established Dea. Philo Carpenter had begun the first Sabbath school in the history of the city, and there was occasional preaching in a log-cabin by an old Methodist preacher. The church is older than the town of Chicago, which was not incorporated until August 10th, 1833, when it had only twenty-eight voters. The church membership is now over 1,000. The Rev. Dr. Porter is still living and took part in the services.

—The well-known evangelistic services of the Cooper Institute, New York, conducted for so many years by Mr. C. W. Sawyer, will be continued every Sabbath night throughout the summer. These services are held in the interest of the masses of the population who are outside of the regular channels of church work. It is found that the richest ingatherings often belong to the heated term This work affords a most interesting and encouraging field for labor to the Christian worker. A praise meeting is held in the annex hall every Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, and a gospel temperance meeting every Friday evening at the same hour. Christians of all denominations receive a cordial welcome to all of those meetings, and opportunities are freely afforded them to co-operate in this effort to extend the blessings of the Gospel to the neglected masses of New York.

THE "MASTERLY INACTIVITY" POLICY.

The present policy of our anti-law brethren is evidently the "still hunt," and what Henry Clay styled a "masterly inactivity." They propose to make no open war on the secrecy question, but to appropriate every advantage accessible to them. Having most of the general officers of the church on their side, and imbued with their policy, they are furnished with great facilities and a mighty power to carry out their designs. One who has heretofore been a law man, but who has apparently surrendered without changing his sentiments, gave to us his sense of the active, tireless, but silent power exercised by these co-operating general officers, to diffuse anti-law principles and tactics through the several annual conferences, and throughout the church. The very idea of general officers operating privately to overthrow the constitution and law of the church is a peculiar one; yet such a policy as that apprehended is in perfect harmony with the spirit of organized secrecy, the interests of which are to be conserved by the overthrow of our prohibitory anti-secrecy policy. Surrendered or discouraged law brethren should remember that there is a power in truth—which has been too often unvoiced for the sake of peace—and that there is a power in the God of truth, which shall triumph over all the devices of the lodge spirit in the church. It is evident that God has not raised up a great witness for anti-secrecy truth, to give it over to the rule and polution of the lodge. Let each lover of truth and purity perform his part, and the battle for the right will end in complete victory for our covenanted right to have a church free from the guile and contamination of the lodge. For this our fathers prayed. To forward the interests of such a church, most of the larger sums given to the endowment of our institutions were donated or bequeathed; and he lacks faith in God who supposes that the Most High will permit the enemy to capture and appropriate all the fruits of these ages. And is not he worthy of condemnation and shame who shrinks from the conflict, or who is inactive or indifferent concerning the issue? Who is on the Lord's side?

This "still-hunt," "masterly-inactivity" policy seeks to put a loyal bishop or editor on his "good behavior" in its sight. It takes a man of self-denial and courage to feel that his soul is his own amid such diplomacy and espionage.

This anti-law subtility "holds the fort" wherever the fear of a conflict will deter from breaking its prescribed peace. It is after the pistol attitude, "Be still or have your brains blown out." It is like the child's weapon, "If you disturb me or cross my will, I'll squall." It would even persuade the stronger party in numbers and conscience, that a most abnegating magnamity becomes majorities, law, and order.

This "masterly-inactivity" and status quo theory is the strong card of assault and undermining. It has its allies outside of the church. It works by "moonlight." If it can, it will persuade all to believe that distrust of its purposes is uncharitable. Its assumption and presumption are its strong points, if these are not suspected, met, and discomfited.

This "masterly-inactivity," if not rightly apprehended, is defeat and ruin to the right and to reform. The strength of reform is in wise legislation, well enforced. What we have gained by ages of toil and prayer should not be suffered to fall as a compliment to guile and treachery. These fruits of years are to us a sacred heritage, and of priceless value. The only question is whether our law brethren have the energy to do what they can do to preserve them. Our faith is in God and in the conscience and loyalty of his people.—Richmond Star.

INDEPENDENT CHURCHES.

Several independent churches have recently been organized in the northwest by Holiness people, one at Centralia, Mo., and one at Nevada, Iowa. They are on a congregational basis, being disconnected with any denomination, or any other organization, claiming to be in the New Testament order. In the one at Nevada, Rev. Isaiah Reed, editor of the Highway, was chosen pastor, three other persons were constituted deacons, one recorder, another treasurer. The Bible is the standard of doctrine and discipline, and sanctified believers the type of membership.

It is claimed by them that this is not what is termed comcoutism in its results, coming out of the churches, as that heresy opposes any and all organizations. They claim that it is a legitimate and Scriptural mode of providing for such as have been expelled from or driven out of the churches because of their profession and teaching of the doctrine and experience of sanctification. This being so who can raise any well-founded objection? This is a free country, free to all to do right. And yet Rev. Wm. MacDonald, editor of the Christian Witness, enters his protest against it. To this the editor of the Highway good-naturedly says: "Well, brother M., what if you do? Why should you object to people who have no house having one if they can? If you have one, why should not they? If you do not want to live in theirs why should you want to compel them to live in yours?"

We have deprecated the formation of a Holiness church, thus multiplying the number of sects. But we see no good reason why people may not take to themselves the right to form themselves into a church in a congregational capacity, more especially when and where they have been foully dealt with as some have been. It is no new thing. In Philadelphia there are independent Methodist congregations served by pastors of their own choosing; while in other places Methodist preachers are serving independent congregations. In Brooklyn, N. Y., Rev. J. P. Newman is serving one, while Rev. A. J. Wood is doing the same. —Way of Holiness.

OBITUARY.

ELDER OZIAS SCOTT died at his home in Kalamo, Mich., on the 28th of May, in the 83d year of his age. He was a hearty advocate of the reform against the lodge and for the exaltation of Jesus Christ as Lord of all.

MRS. LYDIA KEISTER, wife of David Keister, Esq., of Mt. Pleasant, Pa., died June 25th, 1883 at the age of 71 years. She was attacked with a slight stroke of palsy on the Saturday previous to her death, but on Monday while quietly resting she passed into a comotose condition from which she could not be revived. The local paper speaks thus highly of this aged sister and her family: "Mr. and Mrs. Keister were two of the charter members of the U. B. church in this place, and remained in good standing in the church, faithful even unto death. The couple celebrated their golden wedding two years ago last May. Of the family, only the husband and two sons are now living. Jacob, the oldest son, is a prominent lawyer of the Minnesota bar, while the other, Daniel B. Keister, is a well-known citizen of this place. A large circle of relatives and friends will mourn the death of Mrs. Keitser, but will rejoice in the fact that what is their loss is her eternal gain." Mrs. Keister was an earnest reader of the Cynosure and most fully sympathized in the efforts of Christians against secretism and other evils that tend to destroy good society.

E. BRUCE BUCK departed this life at his home in Newfane, N. Y., May 13, 1883, of injuries received while moving a barn the day previous. He was aged a little more than 50 years. Twenty-five years ago he was converted to God and was one of the few who dared to step into the front ranks of reform and oppose the popular sins of the age. He joined the M. E. church and remained a member until he saw that worldliness and Masonry ruled in its councils; then obeying the divine command ("Come out from among them") he left that church and joined the Free Methodists, where his experience was endorsed and he could proclaim his principles and find a hearty amen to them. He was a faithful man of God, filling many places of responsibility in the church and was always at his post. He took a decidcd stand against secrctism, was Secretary of the Niagara county Christian Association, and was always ready to oppose this evil with his means and influence. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss, but they mourn not as those that have no hope, for he fell at his post with the armor on. As death appeared he said he was ready and had no changes to make.

The Christian Statesman of Philadelphia (representing the National Reform Association), which was recently enlarged from twelve to sixteen pages, has just added a business manager and managing editor to its working force in the person of John Wagner Pritchard, the founder and owner of the daily and weekly Paragon of McKeesport, Pa., and until recently its editor. This broadening of the affairs of the Statesman has been made necessary by its increased constituency of believsrs in a national religion, the principles of which it has been advocating for sixteen years. Especially marked has been the success of the National Reform movement during the past year—so vast the work done and so liberal the contributions to the Association, that six additional lecturers have been appointed to enter the field during portions of the ensuing year, which will make nine specially employed lecturers in all, to say nothing of the great and increasing number of ministers and laymen who are actively engaged in urging an acceptance of National Reform principles all over our nation.

THE BATAVIA CONVENTION MINUTES.

A correspondent writing of the grand addresses in this pamphlet says:

"Let me call particular attention to the address of our noble banner-bearer, the candidate for the suffrages of the nation, under the title "Christian politics." This admirable and timely paper is one which will open blind eyes to the causes of the war and future dangers and ought not to be merely read and shelved. It is like LIVE SEED; Let every reader get and sow it abundantly, and scatter it abroad through every State, and for every year, until victory shall crown our efforts to place a representative of our principles in the Presidential chair of the United States! Print and reprint and circulate in tens of thousands or millions! Our people are intoxicated with national prosperity, and are disregarding "the higher law." In every age the multitude is led more by the senses than by the unseen, but the Ruler of the universe brings to naught things that are by the things that are not! The things that are right and pure are eternal, and in the grand war must finally overcome the cunning and craft of every system like Freemasonry.

FARM NOTES.

THE SAVING OF SEEDS.

The following is from the pen of Dr. G. F. Needham, Washington D. C.: How to prevent seed from deteriorating is a most important question, lying at the foundation of all agricultural and horticultural prosperity. Nature's law is to "multiply and replenish," no matter as to the particular quality, but everything as to the quantity.

"The survival of the fittest" governs the result. But Nature's operations are too slow for our short lives, so the business of the cultivator is to aid Mother Nature, and thus reach the best results in the shortest period. It is a fact too well known that, ordinarily, crops deteriorate, and this, for one reason, because the seed becomes weakened. The story of "Deere's Improved Lima Beaus" will illustrate the idea and explain the whole modus operandi of saving seed.

Some years ago a gardener asked our Mr. Saunders how he could improve the Lima bean. He was told to find, if possible, a pod having at least four beans; the next season to plant the one, the largest and best of these; the next season to select as before one bean, the one that not only seemed to the eye the largest and best, but the one that would weigh the most, and then to pursue this method for several years. The result we all know is a great improvement of that delicious vegetable.

One has asked why our melons are so inferior nowadays. The answer is that pains are not taken in saving the seed. There is a variety of musk melons sold by one of our seedsmen, the "Hunter" melon, which illustrates the point. A Mr. Hunter received, some years since, from abroad, seeds of a very choice melon. These were planted and the seed of only the very best were saved. In this manner has the seed been selected, and now, after more than twenty years, this variety commands the highest price in our markets, and the seed sells for $3 per pound, while other varieties can be had for fifty cents, and are dear at that.

I have seen a stalk of corn bearing ten ears. Of course this ninefold increase came from selecting the seed at first of a stalk that bore two good ears, then there would be a few with three ears, and so on until the grand result was reached. I know many farmers say that if they can get one good ear off each stalk they will be satisfied. Well, such are not very particular, and will buy corn from a neighbor's crib and plant the best of his. Of course they get only an ordinary crop. Is not this the reason that growing Indian corn has become such a poor and unpaying business? For my part I will let the idiots grow this corn, and I will purchase it in the fall for less than $2 a barrel.

WHY ALWAYS TIMOTHY?

The teudeucy to fall into routine is nowhere more strikingly shown than in our grass lands. It is timothy and clover so generally in all the meadows, that one would suppose timothy was the only grass that would succeed in our climate. In New England timothy was formerly called "Herd's-Grass," a name which in Pennsylvania is given to what is known elsewhere as red-top. This formerly led to much confusion, but at present the name "herd's-grass" generally dropped. Timothy is especially unsuited to the too common method of treating grass lands, There are farmers who still, after taking a crop of hay, turn their animals upon the land, after the grass has made a second growth, and convert it into pasture. Timothy forms a bulbous swelling at the base of its stems, from which next year's growth will start, and is greatly injured by cattle trampling it, and eating off the leaves that should protect the bulb during the winter. Some farmers, after a few years, give up a mowing lot to pasturage; the grass being almost entirely timothy is soon killed in spots, as, however valuable for hay, timothy is a poor pasture grass. In many respects, a much more useful grass than timothy is orchard grass (Dactylis glomerata). This, in England, is generally called "rough cock's-foot grass." Orchard grass, the only name by which it is known in this country, unfortunately conveys the idea that it is only suited to the shade of trees. We never knew a farmer to fairly try orchard grass who was not so pleased with it that he did not continue its use. Yet take the country through, it has made its way but slowly. It is preferable to timothy to combine with clover for hay, as the two are in perfection, that is, in blossom, at the same time, while as pasture grass it is vastly superior. Orchard grass is, in fact, a true pasture grass, while timothy is not. It at once recovers after it is closely cropped, and the earliness of its growth in spring is greatly in its favor. The chief, in fact the only objection that has been made to orchard grass, is its tendency to form tussocks, or clumps, a trouble which may be overcome by thick seeding. Two bushels of clean seed to the acre, if alone, or one bushel if clover is to be sown with it, will give a sufficiently thick growth to prevent the formation of clumps.—American Agriculturist for June.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR PARIS GREEN.—The free and careless use of Paris green and other poisons for exterminating insects has caused much injury to health, and some loss of life. It has been found that water impregnated with gas-tar, after the following method, is quite as good an insecticide as the Paris green: Put two quarts of gas-tar in a pail, fill the pail with water, stir it well, and let the tar settle; then sprinkle the vines with the clear water. This remedy may also be used safely on currant bushes and fruit trees.—H. S. K., in Field and Farm.

REMEDY FOR SQUASH BUGS.—I have found the following a sure preventative of the attacks of squash bugs, cucumber beetles, etc., on my garden vines: Saturate a piece of cloth or old rags with kerosene, and tie to a short stick, or draw them through a split made in the top of the stick to fasten them, and insert the stick in the hills or near the vines, and the "bugs" will soon disappear. After a shower, and, usually, once in a couple of days, the rags will need to be saturated anew. It is worth a trial.—J. V. L., in Rural New Yorker.

DR. JOHN BULL'S

Smith's Tonic Syrup

FEVER and AGUE

Or CHILLS and FEVER.

AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of BULL'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient.

The genuine SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP must have DR. JOHN BULL'S private stamp on each bottle. DR. JOHN BULL only has the right to manufacture and sell the original JOHN J. SMITH'S TONIC SYRUP, of Louisville, Ky. Examine well the label on each bottle. If my private stamp is not on each bottle do not purchase, or you will be deceived.

THE PUREST IS THE BEST.

In the selection of SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS, the most important point to be considered is the moral tone of the subject matter. If this is of a questionable character, the papers should be shunned, no matter how large, how attractive, or how low the price. Such papers are

COSTLY AT ANY PRICE.

The country is being flooded with S. S. literature that is largely composed of what may be properly termed "RELIGIOUS FICTION," the tendency of which is to create a distaste for sound reading and foster an appetite for fiction of a more deleterious character.

The engravings of these papers are equally objectionable. In many cases a lady or girl dressed in the height of fashion is made the HEROINE OF A STORY, thus putting the highest sanction to extravagance and pride. With such instructors in our Sunday-schools we cannot expect the children to grow up with a love for sound literature and with correct ideas of Christian propriety. With a view of supplying S. S. papers, of a pure and elevating character, the publishers are issuing

FOUR MONTHLY PAPERS.

They are FREE FROM FICTION, and the cuts are chosen with great care. While they are thus carefully edited, they are not lacking in attractiveness. They are well printed on beautiful tinted paper. The children are delighted with them. The very low price at which this line of S. S. papers is issued, places them within the reach of even schools of limited means

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doeshurg, Past Master Unity □ No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 60 cents; per dozen, $5.50. First three degrees (376 pages), in cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.00. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00. ☞ The Masonic quotations are worth the price of this book.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $8.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50cts; $4.00 per dozen.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Freemasonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degrees of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Valance's Confession of the Murder of CAPT. WM. MORGAN. This confession of Henry L. Valance, one of the three Freemasons who drowned Morgan in the Niagara River, was taken from the lips of the dying man, by Dr. John C. Emery, of Racine County, Wisconsin, in 1848. 10 cents each; per dozen. $1.00.

History of the Abduction and Murder OF CAPT. WM. MORGAN. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 De-GREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers. 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin Trial. Also the letter of Hon. Richard Rush to the anti-Masonic committee of York County, Pa., May 4th, 1831. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14th, 1881, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons, swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen $3.50.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodgery; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expoaitions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Chris-TIAN RELIGION. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, but he boldly replied to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Ameuded, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Re-PUBLIC, with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies Illustrated. Containing the signs, grips, passwords, emblems, etc., of Freemasonry (Blue Lodge and to the fourteenth degree of the York rite), Adoptive Masonry, Revised Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, the Temple of Honor, the United Sons of Industry, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, with affidavits, etc. Over 250 cuts, 99 pages, paper cover. Price, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry, by Rev. W. P. M'Nary, pastor United Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Ind. This is a very clear, thorough, candid and remarkably concise Scriptural argument on the character of Freemasonry. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Prest. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Prest. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Secretism, by Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Graugers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Prest. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

—Attorney General Brewster Thursday rendered an opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury that the exportation of bonded whisky to Bermuda with a view to its re-importation, for the purpose of evading or delaying payment of the tax, is not an exportation within the meaning of the law.

—The vicinity of Brattleboro, Vt., was visited Thursday night by a rain, hail and thunder storm which resulted in great damage to crops. Land-slides on the railways delayed all trains. A fierce storm also deluged Galena, Ill.; and the section round about, highways, bridges and vegetation suffering severely. For two or three days continuous storms have prevailed at Dubuque, Ia., and its vicinity, awful thunder and lightning occurring Wednesday, by which the wife of the Rev. Frances Folks was killed. At Scranton, Pa., and its neighborhood, rains for two weeks have injured crops severely, and additional heavy rains fell Thursday, accompanied by thunder and lightning, which caused loss of life. About St. Thomas, Ont., the creeks are overflowed, farms are submerged, and houses and railway tracks have been washed away. At Dover, N. H., the storm caused the bursting of a sewer, which flooded the Cocheco Print Works, damaging prints ready for shipment and other stock to the extent of $50,000. Seven persons were struck by by lightning and three persons killed.

—The region around Petersburg, Va., was visited by a heavy thunder and rain storm on the same night, many structures being struck by lightning and orchards damaged. Wind and rain did serious injury in the vicinity of Albany, N. Y., trees, ice-houses, and barns being demolished, and crops injured.

—The hot wave in New York caused great mortality among children iu the tenement districts. Up to noon Friday the total deaths for three days numbered 494. There were twenty-six cases of sunstroke in the city Friday—three fatal. Albert Daggett, the anti-Graut leader in Brooklyn, was also prostrated, and may not survive.

—Near Huntsville, Texas, July 5th a saw mill was blown up with fearful destruction of life. Dick Grant (colored), the fireman, and his assistant, John Barkful, a convict; also convicts Slade and Jordan were instantly killed. Four other convicts were seriously wounded.

—A special from Raleigh, N. C., says: At Wortham's bridge, Colnmbus county, near Whiteville, six negroes, four men and two women were drowned yesterday. They attempted to cross a deep and wide stream on a raft made of logs and grape vines. When in the middle of the river the raft went to pieces. The two women sank immediately. Two of the men struggled in the water, while two others swam ashore, but seeing the helplessness of their companions went to their rescue and were seized by the drowning men and lost their lives also.

—A cyclone Monday the 2d inst. swept through Port Jervis, Hancock, and Binghamton, N. Y., the Naugatuck Valley, in Connecticut, and the Williamstown Valley, in Massachusetts, uprooting trees, destroying houses and churches, and laying flat crops and fences. The new Williams College gymnasium, where the alumni dinner was to be eaten Wednesday, was wrecked, causing a loss of $60,000. A fierce tornado rushed through Ozaukee county, Wisconsin, Monday morning, doing great damage in several towns and villages, and in some instances sweeping away bridges. Three men were drowned at Port Washington, and several schooners lost their topmast and rigging. In the towns of Belgium and Fredonia more than 200 buildings were demolished.

—Ten suits were instituted by Mormons in the District Court July 2, against the commissioners appointed by the President to carry out the provisions of the Edmunds bill. This is a deliberate attempt to break down the commissioners, and done at law. The suits were instituted for damages, with the evident intention to coerce the commissioners.

—The miners at Ely, Vt. who cannot get their wages, threaten to destroy the town with gunpowder, and have already committed acts of violence. The Governor has ordered four companies of malitia to the place, and will also attend himself to prevent outrages.

—A railway traiu crashed iuto a Brooklyn (N. Y.) street car Wednesday last, killing a woman and wounding the driver.

—Five policemen, Superintendent of Hacks Rufus P. Marsh, and several other persons were sunstruck at Boston Wednesday. Marsh died.

—For unknown reasons the four commissioners and Clerk of Grand County, Colorado, were shot by masked men Wednesday morning, two being killed instantly and two others being mortally wounded.

—Irish Catholic bishops condemn State-aided immigration, maintaining that large tracts of uncultivated land, if tilled, would support the surplus populatiou.

—Floods in the Surah district, Hindostan have effected great damage. Five hundred houses alone have fallen at Surat, and thousands are homeless. Whole villages have been destroyed.

—Holders of Confederate bonds in London have subscribed £10,000 to be used in endeavoring to have some of the Southeru States recognize their debts, and trustees of the fund have been appointed.

—The King of Saxony, who is making a tour, was about to ascend in the elevator of a factory which he was inspecting at Milan, when the weight attached to the car fell, killing the Governor of the district, who was accompanying his Majesty, and injuring the manager of the factory. The King, who had entered the elevator before the accident happened, was much overcome, and abandoned his tour.

—The latest reports indicate the state of affairs is slightly worse at Damietta Egypt, some 110 to 120 dying daily of the cholera, but is improving at Mansurah. The Nile is rising well, which, it is expected, will cut short the epidemic in some districts. The cattle plaguc in Egypt caused the death of 90 per cent. of the cattle attacked.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 6.—The government has ordered the establishment of a rigid quarantine on the Black Sea, to prevent the introduction of cholera by vessels coming from Egypt, and has forbidden the usual pilgrimage to Mecca.

A NEW AND RAPIDLY SELLING BOOK IN OPPOSITION TO FREE-MASONRY.

We desire to call your attention to this useful work, and ask you to help us in its circulation. We want Agents to canvass every community.

By selling this book one can do much good. It is by such literature that we must expect to awaken a popular sentiment against secret societies, and overthrow them. By selling this book one can make money. Liberal terms will be allowed, and any energetic Agent can sell many copies. Masons will buy it from mere curiosity. Anti-Masons will buy it for the facts and arguments presented. Many will buy it to send to their neighbors. Those on the fence will buy it that they may learn the truth on the subject. Those not interested in the discussion, and young people especially, will buy it for the story.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"It is an attack on Freemasonry with a sprinkle of Slavery thrown in to make it go down well."—A. R. Presbyterian, (S. C.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of the best class of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia, Pa.)

"A charming work fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

The book is neatly and plainly printed, handsomely bound, 352 pages, thick paper. A specimen copy sent to any one contemplating accepting an agency for $1.10.

Single copy $1.50; Per Dozen. $15.00.

Prof. Ensley of Howard University, Washington, has just been visiting Chicago and lectured one evening in one of the South Side churches. He attended also one Monday the meeting of the Baptist elders, and was taken by one of them to a fashionable restaurant for lunch. The proprietors remonstrated and requested the Professor to leave their premises—for he is colored as to his skin. The Baptist brethren resented this unconstitutional and un-American proceedure and have adopted a minute strongly condemning the eating-house. We learn that in Professor Ensley's own city, Washington, a more honorable and just sentiment prevails. There is seen no such distinction as to race or color by the visitor, except in some of the churches—be it said to their shame. In two denominations, the Congregational and Catholic, the color line is ignored, just as it is in hotels, street-cars and places of amusement. The advanced position of the Congregational church of Washington on this question is due, we learn, in great part to ex-Senator Pomeroy whose good influence has always been on the right side. His colored coachman takes a seat in the family pew, and in the time of the war Mr. Pomeroy conducted a colored Sabbath-school. The sentiments of his Farwell Hall speech are therefore a practical part of life with him.

The "Believers' Meeting for Bible Study" which will begin this year on the 25th inst. at the village of Niagara on Lake Ontario will be a peculiar meeting according to a worldly estimate. The Truth says this meeting will be more largely attended than any previous gathering of the kind for the past nine years, but there is a singular warning against preachers who are looking about for a newspaper reputation during their summer jaunts. Says the Truth: "Surprise has been expressed at a previous announcement concerning the approaching conference, that 'eloquent addresses are strictly forbidden.' But the language was deliberately chosen, and meant precisely what it said. Eloquent addresses, as commonly understood and admired, are a delusion, a humbug, and a sham. If a brother is like Apollos, 'an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures,' and if his eloquence consists in the aptness, clearness, and force with which he can bring the Scriptures to bear upon the point under discussion, he will be heard gladly. But for any other kind of eloquence those who meet at Niagara have a profound and intelligent contempt."

The citizens of Woodstock, Conn., have for a number of years been highly favored on Independence day. Their method of celebration has, through the public spirit of Henry C. Bowen, publisher of the Independent, been in many respects a model for the nation. The fusillade and fuss of our ordinary Fourth of July has there been superceded by addresses by eminent citizens upon topics of public interest, the whole day being devoted to such instruction as shall make all who come within its influence, by hearing or reading, better neighbors and more patriotic Americans. The programme this year included addresses from ex-President Hayes, Senator Platt of Connecticut, Blair of New Hampshire, Aldrich of Rhode Island, from Bishop Coxe, John B. Gough and Congressman Wait; also poems by John G. Whittier and Dr. L. W. Bacon. This was probably the best celebration of the day witnessed throughout the country, and we should have some thanks for the press and telegraph which have given the speakers an audience of millions. Why should not such a celebration be prepared in all our large cities year by year?

The telegraph operators have given the nation a text—

"Believing that man's physical and mental welfare demand that at least one day in seven be accorded him for rest and recreation, we demand the total abolition of Sunday work as a compulsory duty."

These operators are ready for a strike. They have banded together in secret lodge, thirteen thousand of them, and for over a year have been groaning under a bondage that to them is becoming Egyptian. Without commenting upon their folly in banding under secret obligations; or the atheistic sentiment that leaves out of such a proposition as that above the idea of a moral character that has some interest in the Sabbath day; or the fearful and irresponsible power these men have taken into their hands, by combining in secret, having in their hands the means of secret communication from one part of the country to another—passing these by, we have here a demand, from a body of men who are not to be despised, that the greed of capital must no longer take from them a day given by their Creator for rest from labor. It is a demand that is re-echoed from the locomotive foot-board, the U. S. post offices, the city groceries and shops of every kind, the cheese factories, the iron furnaces, the packing houses, and the thousand lines of business that are being pushed by inexorable managers to the destruction of the bodies and souls of men. This is about the best reason for a strike that any class of oppressed employees ever pnt before the public.

The forcible occupation by the French of Tamatave, on the east coast of Madagascar, and the principal port of the island, is producing considerations of a serious character in England, and to some degree also in Germany and the United States. The information that has reached the British government and has been reported personally by Gladstone in the Commons is that the French admiral hauled down all the foreign flags, ordered the English consul from his sick-bed to leave the city (the consul died seven hours later), imprisoned an English missionary, and refused any communication with a British man-of-war in the harbor. Germany and our own government had consuls in the city who were also shabbily treated. These are the first grave and painful reports; all hope they may be so modified when the facts are known that an international difficulty may be avoided. There is at least no doubt that the powerful opposition to the bad ambition of France will restrain her in time and prevent any appeal to arms for settlement.

John Wesley: "They murder by the wholesale, neither doth their eye pity or spare: and the inheritance of blood is theirs."

A WORD OF ENTREATY TO OBERLIN.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

What was the moral condition of this nation that demanded of God the birth of Oberlin? It was a condition that demanded a wide-spread and universal reformation in theology, spirtual life, morals and metaphysics. Hence, the grand mission of Oberlin was to give to the nation and to the world a race of universal reformers; and such were the students she first sent forth on this mission. And so long as Oberlin continues to send forth such reformers, her continued existence will be imperative—but no longer. Reformation implies conflict, sharp and prolonged, that often merges into a moral war, and this produces veterans, heroes and martyrs. Of these Oberlin has had her full share, a necessary result of her mission.

And now I ask this important question, Has the day that demands martyrs and reformers past? Look abroad over this wide land. Is it a nation whose God is the Lord? is it subjugated to Christ? is his regency acknowledged and lovingly accepted? Alas! alas! "darkness is still upon the earth, and gross darkness upon the people." "One sin habitually practiced," said the sainted Finney, "forfeits heaven and the Divine approbation." And what is the attitude of Oberlin and her children towards that "one sin that is habitnally practiced" from ocean to ocean, and from the lakes of the North to the gulf of the South—the sin that is second to no other for its antagonism to Christ and to the principles implanted in this western world by our Pilgrim Fathers; that practices its idolatrous deeds of darkness behind doors bolted and barred and guarded by the drawn sword of its appointed custodian; where are administered to church members and ministers and sinners of all grades oaths foul enough to put to blush forlornest hell, with penalties for divulging the infamous secrets intrusted more barbarous than were ever chronicled in the catalogne of savage tortures? And what today is the attitude of Oberlin towards this sin, that numbers its votaries by the half million of able-bodied men that ean pay for the perpetuity and universal propagation of this sin of sins?

Thongh President Finney was a well-nigh peerless and universal reformer, yet upon no other organic sin did he open battery after battery of his awful guns as upon this Masonic conspiracy against God and men. This his successor has amply shown in his recent letters in the Chicago Advance. It is concerning this blood-stained conspiracy that the churches and miuistry of to-day maintain a sepulchral and guilty silence, with some worthy exceptions. And it is to Oberlin and her Alumni that God looks, and has a right to look, for voices that shall awake the nation from this fatal slumber. In his book on Masonry Mr. Finney says: "If the public cannot be aroused to look this conspiracy in the face, and rise up and put it down in time, they will surely find, too late, that their hands are tied, and that virtually slavery or bloody revolution awaits us."

Would you know the Divine call, read these sentences from Mr. Finney's sermon, on the marks of a true Christian: "He not only refuses to sin, but he denounces it everywhere, and enlists heartily in God's plan for its overthrow. For this he lives. His love for the honor of God is greater than for his own life. Hence, he delights to suffer, and make sacrifices, and practice self-denial for the putting down of rebellion and for the glory of Christ." Penetrated and interpenetrated through and through himself with these marks of a child of God, he heaped the red-hot coals of God's wrath upon the guilty head of the Masonic harlot, declaring that men who could not see these abominations were judicially blinded of God for their sin. Every true Christian, knowing, as he should know, what a masterpiece of the devil, for decoying and ruining unwary souls by its infamous sorcery, Masonry is, can but arm himself against it. Is Oberlin's preseut prosperity God's seal of approbation for her past fidelity in reforms? A broader seal of his approbation did God place upon the Anti-masonic reform of fifty years ago that swept Masonry from the land, and compelled ministers and church members publicly to renounce it or suffer expulsion.

It was at the very heighth of that tremendous excitement, in connection with the labors of Mr. Finney, that God poured down the Holy Spirit in mighty floods, such as the world never saw, from one end of the land to the other. "Oberlin needs to perpetuate the principles of its founders and to carry them forward to a glorious victory," said Mr. Finney. There are evidences that these principles are losing their place and force in Oberlin. Let them be resurrected and transmitted by her Alumni through the nation. Let her become again a pattern and safe example to follow. Let her not forfeit her place by standing aloof, or occupying a doubtful position on this momentous question. Let her come to the front once more, and the good shall bless her as in days of old.

Detroit.

THE TRUE BASIS OF CHURCH UNITY.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

It is a satisfaction to see that so much attention is given in the Cynosure to the subject of church union. The great danger of secretism is, that by means of grips and passwords and oaths it is organizing every power of evil, so that they can bring their united force in striking a single blow, and fight with weapons it is impossible to parry. Now it is proper to be taught by our enemies; not that we should adopt the tactics of secrecy, but that all the friends of truth should fall into line, and organize for united and effective resistance. I believe the result of the grand struggle that is now looming up from every point of the horizon will be to weld the church into greater unity.

We are mostly agreed that the normal condition of the church is a unit. Its division into sects is a condition of disease. The true doctrine on this subject is clearly expressed in the covenant sworn and subscribed by the Covenanter church at its Synod in Pittsburgh in 1871. It is as follows:

"That believing the church to be ONE, and that all the saints have communion with God and with one another in the same covenant; believing, moreover, that schism and sectarianism are sinful in themselves, and inimical to true religion, and trusting that divisions shall cease, and the people of God become one catholic church over all the earth, we will pray and labor for the visible oneness of the church of God in our own land and throughout the world, on the basis of truth and of Scriptural order, considering it a principal duty of our profession to cultivate a holy brotherhood, we will strive to maintain Christian friendship with pious men of every name, and to feel and act as one with all in every land who pursue this grand end. And as a means of securing this great result, we will by dissemination and application of the principles of truth herein professed, and by cultivating and exercising Christian charity, labor to remove stumbling blocks, and to gather into one the scattered and divided friends of truth and righteousness."

Now the great question is, How is the unity of the church to be secured? It is not by compromising the truth. A unity on any other basis than the truth, is a conspiracy and not a unity. As the above covenant declares, our union must be "on the basis of truth and of Scriptural order." I would like to ask, Is it possible for churches to unite and have different forms of church government? And does the Bible prescribe any form of church government? Or is the government of the church such a trivial matter that Christ has left it to human wisdom? The highest authorities agree that Christ has prescribed a form of government for the nation, and that is the republican form. In the Jewish Republic Christ gave the first pattern of a republican government. It contained every great and good principle of our Republic, with none of its defects. Their thirteen tribes like our thirteen colonies, formed one confederacy. The moral law was their constitution, and their civil rulers were invariably elected by the people. When Israel changed their republic into a monarchy, they were distinctly reproved for their folly, and warned of the encroachment on personal and public liberty, which would be the consequence.

Now we call this nation a union; with all the emphasis of the late war, we called it a union. It is a union, because it is organized on the principle of Bible republicanism. Now why cannot we have the same unity among the churches that we have in these United States? There are a large number of Christians in this land, who believe that Christ has prescribed the same form of government for the church that he has prescribed for the nation. They believe it as firmly as they do the Divine inspiration of the Scriptures, that the form of government used by the church in both Old and New Testament times, was the republican form. The Presbyterians, numbering 5,044 ministers and 578,671 members; the United Presbyterians, numbering 700 ministers and 82,119 members; the Covenanters, numbering 112 ministers and 10,625 members; all these besides the Presbyterian church, South, and the Dutch and German Reformed churches, together with several other smaller branches, use the same form of government used by the nation. Their sessions, as legislative bodies, exactly correspond with the township officers. Their presbytery corresponds with the county commissioners, their synods with the State Legislature and their General Assembly with the Congress of the United States. In other words their whole system is delegated power from Christ, and coming THROUGH the people. Not a single objection can be brought against this government in the church, which cannot also be brought against our republican form of government in the state. All these classes of Christians believe that this form of church government has the authority of God behind it, and they will not compromise it any more than they will give up their Bibles. I know that they are divided on points of doctrine, but we see in the great Pan-Presbyterian Council, the beginning of a movement which is destined to bring them all together.

Of one thing I am sure, that the more honestly and diligently we study our Bibles, the more we shall see eye to eye in relation to truth and the closer we shall come together. The Word of God contains the only platform of truth, on which all the divided friends of Christ will at length unite and stand as one company.

HOLY CHIVALRY.

Oh! we need not wait for chances!
Sin hath borne too bitter fruit;
And the heavens, with pitying glances,
Look on men beneath the brute;
Look on sorrowfulest sorrows,
Which no healer charms away;
Look on hearts, whose darker morrows
Make less stern the dark to-day.

Christian soldier! rise and arm thee!
Take the Spirit's sevenfold shield!
Let no coward fears alarm thee,
Recreant from this solemn field;
Fiercer than the fabled giants;
Are thy foes of Want and Crime,
God thy Helper! men thy clients!
Haste thee to the strife sublime.

Bid the slaves of sin's excesses
Hearken what the Saviour saith;
Weave the spell, which charms and blesses,
Round the spirits "drawn to death."
Though they spare from cursing never,
Though men hate, deride, condemn,
Cease not from the brave endeavor;
Work to lift and rescue them.

By the heaven that shineth o'er you,
By the soul's uncounted worth;
By the love which Jesus bore you;
By the human loves of earth;
By the moments, speeding faster
To the shore as yet untrod;
By the dread of worse disaster;
By the holy name of God;

Forward! men beloved of Heaven!
Wave your white device on high;
Rest not till its hope hath given
Light to every troubled sky;
Go where none have gone beside you,
Go to homes of dark despair,
Men implore you, Christ will guide you
Win your spurs of knighthood there.

THE TREND OF PUBLIC OPINION.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

We are informed by the most intelligent and trustworthy of Western residents and observers, that the prevailing trend of thought and judgment in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and throughout the West, is toward the Constitutional Prohibition of the liquor traffic. The drift of opinion is all that way, notwithstanding the late tidal wave of license. The position taken by Prohibitionists that the liquor traffic, on account of its antagonism to Christianity and the well being of man, cannot be justified, and must soon cease to be, is growing stronger and stronger.

This view is in accordance with the stand lately taken by the conservative Bishop Huntington, in his "Pastoral Address for Lent," to the churches and clergy of his diocese, in Central New York. "Trace abominations," he says to his clergy, "to their sources. When you arraign the drunkard before the law of God, do not forget to show how often the drunkard is the victim, while the dealer, the seller, the owner of the tippling shop, the city or town official that grants the license, is the actual sinner."

Let me add to this that Dr. Howard Crosby, of New York city, whose famous Boston delivery in favor of license and against prohibition two or three years ago, entitled "A Calm View," marked an epoch in the temperance reform, has lately admitted the utter failure of his honest effort to control the liquor traffic by regulation and limitation. Commenting on his (Dr. Crosby's) experience, who has at length reached the conclusion that "we need something stronger than persuasion to choke the tiger (the liquor traffic) that is running at large," The Christian Intelligencer puts the case after this manner: "We learn that there is but one thing to do with the liquor traffic, and that is, stamp it out and stop it off entirely. The endeavor to do this will at least restrict it, and this is the only thing that will ever restrict. License gives up the question in advance. It adds a prestige of legality and respectability to the traffic. Prohibition, on the other hand, puts it positively under the ban, makes dram-selling illicit and dram-drinking disreputable. This, indeed, may not always prevent the confirmed drunkard from getting his liquor somewhere and somehow, but it is sure to tell increasingly on the sentiments and habits of following generations.

And where there is an honest disposition to enforce the law, the way to do it is made easier and plainer than when embarrassed by the well-nigh impossible distinctions, the Protean evasions of a statute of license. By reason of the extremely difficult observance of those conditions, license becomes, in most cases, a practically unlimited sale, with the State as a partner in the business, imparting virtually a moral sanction to the dram-shop, and throwing the shield of legality over the drunkenness and crime that originate there. It is easier, as well as surer, to cut off an offending dog's tail close behind his ears than at any other point. And to regulate the toothache for a permanence by pulling out the ulcerated tooth is better than puttering with palliations and keeping up the ache.

TOUCH THE SPRINGS.

BY REV. ISAAC HYATT.

The Bible is a precious book. Within it are treasures of untold value. Its promises are exceeding great and very precious. Its consolations come like a healing balm to the troubled heart. There is no book so dear to us when we know how to find its hidden treasures and appropriate them to the wants of the soul.

In the "green room" at Dresden are many mementoes and treasures of priceless value. For centuries the Saxon kings have been gathering them together. Among them is a silver egg which was presented to one of the Saxon queens. It has a spring, which, when touched flies open and you behold a golden yolk. Touch a spring in this and you are delighted to find a chicken whose wing when pressed opens to your eyes a beautiful golden crown, studded with sparkling jewels. Touch another spring and you find hidden away in the center a magnificent diamond ring.

So it is with the Bible. Its truths and promises contain a treasure within a treasure. The more we examine them the more we percieve their excellence. The deeper we dig the richer they grow. The harder we press them the sweeter the flow of their honey. The higher we reach the more delicious the clusters of fruit we find. Let us not neglect to touch the springs lest we become weak and sickly.

In our reform we need men and women of strength, sweetness of temper and tenderness of heart. We can become such only in feeding bountifully upon the hidden manna of God's Word.

SHORT SERMON.

TEXT: No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him.

MY BRETHREN: When men seek to begin a revolution in popular sentiment, they often begin by substituting one word for another. Thus, the lodge-Jesuits, when they began to revolutionize the popular mind in order to turn it against Christ, substituted the name of Great Architect in the place of God. They nowhere, I believe, call God by the name of Father, as Christians do; or at all events, this is not his usual designation with Freemasons. They often call him Grand Master, as if he presided over the charlatanish insincerities of a lodge of buffoons. It is an insult to the majesty of God to make him the Grand Master of a set of Freemasons.

My friends, God never yet drew a man to Christ through, or by the Masonic lodge. He may, indeed, have drawn men away from the lodge to Christ. Instead of the lodge-god, the Great Architect, drawing men to Christ, it draws men away from Christ; and hence the Great Architect cannot be the God whom Christians worship.

It is true, God in his attribute of Creator was indeed the architect of the Universe. This fact is admitted. But this creatorship is only one of God's attributes; and it is not the one by which he is usually or emphatically designated by Christians. The Great Architect created the world it is true. He created Freemasons, and also gnats. A man might as well call his father the begetter, as to call his God the Great Architect. We are all ready and willing to admit the creative power of God; but Freemasons do not allow his fatherhood to be his principal attribute; nor do they permit Christ to draw them to him, or him to draw them to Christ.

My brethren, God cannot lie. He could not possibly tell such a lie as the Masonic lodge is; for no greater lie than that which is embodied in the lodge has ever been told since the creation of the world. The ministers of the Gospel who preach the lodge to you, by precept, or by example, or by silence, are wholly unfit to be your shepherds, your guides or your teachers. If they repeat the Bible to you, you may believe that; but not because they repeat it. You must not become Masons, nor jack Masons, nor dumb servitors of Masons as they do. In fact, you should never give them your money, your vote, nor a moment of your attention.

SO MOTE IT BE!

JOSEPH COOK ON ARBITRATION.

Not proposing the formal political confederation of Christendom, but its close moral alliance, I defend twelve measures that would secure, if carried, what scholars have been asking for these fifty years—universal peace, justice between strong nations and weak, and a general advance of Christian principle in all the departments of international law.

1. Arbitration in place of war in every case to which it can be applied; treaties, including agreements to use arbitration before resorting to war.

Mr. Bright, in 1849, supported Mr. Cobden when the latter presented a petition of 200,000 names to Parliament, asking that arbitration be made a remedy for war in every case to which it is applicable. The petition was not granted; its supporters were regarded as fanatics. In 1873 the House of Commons passed a resolution praying the Queen to put a provision making arbitration a remedy for war into every treaty she should make with foreign nations. Our own House of Representatives, in 1874, passed a similar resolution. The Senate never passed it. This last winter a distinguished Massachusetts Senator, whom may God bless, introduced that resolution once more, and it will not always sleep, even in our upper house. Our martyred President Garfield announced that arbitration was the settled policy of his administration. He wished to bring together all the nations of this continent, and enter into a treaty with them to make arbitration a remedy for war in every case to which it is applicable. Commerce was asleep; commerce was counting its dollars in its tills; commerce was bending over its muck-rake and forgetting the glorious crowns of philanthropy which are far-flashing things in history long after individual or even national wealth is forgotten. Little Peru, in South America, called for a convention to make arbitration the rule of this hemisphere. It was for our interest to hold this convention, but we were far too busy to attend to the matter, even when Garfield proposed it. What we want is that, not merely among English speaking nations, but throughout the whole globe, it should become the practice to make arbitartion an international system, and thus a remedy for all wars to which arbitration can be applied.

2. The complete abolition of the slave trade on the sea.

You say that we have abolished it. Not we. Great Britian has put forth Herculean efforts to abolish the slave trade, and is yet engaged in that majestic business. Between Africa and Persia the slave trade is vigorous yet. In the Pacific Ocean, slave traders are constantly watched by British men-of-war. America ought to help in that chase. She is too penurious to do so. Commerce holds her back. Why should she attend to this matter? Here again we must take the church by the hand a little earnestly and commerce also, and awaken both to the prompt performance of this international duty. Great Britain has at this time many men engaged in suppressing the slave trade, and I do not know that we have one. Africa, even in our time, is a shield with streams of blood down to the edges. Along the slave trails that run to the eastern and northern ports of Africa murders and other atrocities occur so frequently that the trails are blood stained. They are marked by the bones of thousands who have fallen on them. The slaves shipped off in Moorish and Arabic vessels from the coasts of Africa are far more numerous than you dream, and yet America sits here in her Bostons, New Yorks and Chicagos, and thinks herself enlightened and advanced and philanthropic, while Great Britain, mighty as she is, finds herself unable to repress this trade.

3. The wider protection of the rights of neutrals in all wars.

4. Common laws as to copyrights and patents.

We steal more books from England than she does from us, but she steals more patents from us than we do from her, and I would put the two abuses together and reform them.

5. Postal union facilities of all kinds.

6. International bills of exchange—about which a heavy clamor is arising in London, Paris and Berlin.

7. The extension of international law to the Orient, Africa, and all the weakest nations.

8. Mixed courts, made up in part of judges from one nation, and part of judges from another, for the trial of international offenses by individuals.

In China and Japan there are mixed courts now, but they are full of abuses, which it is the office of international morality to reform.

9. An international police.

10. A scholarly codification of international law as far as it now exists in a positive form, and the adoption of a brief summary code by the advanced nations. Let the seven principal powers of the Occident—England, Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy, France, Spain and the United States—adopt such a code, and it would make its own way ultimately through the world. Forty-six nations have agreed to define maritime rights in certain ways; sixteen nations are united now in postal union.

11. A high court of arbitration in case of disputes between two nations.

12. An annual conference of nations, with a view to facilitate intercourse, prevent abuses and to secure international peace. The interests of neutrals in modern European wars have become so great that the Great Powers have often guaranteed the military neutrality of Belgium, the Rhine, and Switzerland. In Australia I heard statesmen saying that after the Panama Canal is cut, the time will come when Cobden's doctrine will look practical, that the great highways of commerce on the ocean should have their neutrality guaranteed by the chief Powers of Christendom. The time is coming when the Pacific Ocean will be only what the Mediterranean was to the Roman Empire.

International reform, you say, is a mere kite flown in the winds of philanthropic discussion, and is useful only as a toy. Your Sumner was accustomed to fly it, however, and so was your Longfellow:

> "Down the dark future, through long generations,
> War's echoing sounds grow fainter and they cease,
> And like a bell with solemn, sweet vibrations,
> I hear once more the voice of Christ say, Peace."
> LONGFELLOW: "The Arsenal at Springfield."

Charles Sumner, through his whole career, was a defender of the principles on which scholars are trying to build universal peace. He believed in war, indeed, such as our Northern States fought to abolish slavery and maintain the Union, but his aim was to spread the white robe of peace around the whole earth. When the suspension bridge was built at Niagara, the first thing done was to send a boy's kite over the chasm. It carried a silken cord across the roaring abysses beneath it, and that cord drew after it wires, and the wires cables, and the cables a bridge which now bears the thunder of traffic between the two empires. Just so this thought of a league of advanced populations, this idea that it is the duty of Christendom to maintain international morality and thus to lay the basis for reform of positive international law, this theory that it is possible and desirable to bring all advanced nations together in a cosmopolitan moral confederation, may be a kite flown in the winds of discussion; but if you fly it often enough and long enough on both sides of the Atlantic and Pacific and in the northern and southern hemisphere, it may ultimately carry over the roaring abysses of international prejudice a silken cord of Christian amity, and that cord may draw after it wires and cables, and by and by a bridge, which shall bear the weight of the heaviest international reforms and uphold at last the feet of the white Christ as he walks into the dawn of the millennial day.

A fixed inflexible will is great assistance in leading a holy life. Satan will suggest a thousand reasons why we should yield a little to the temptations by which we are surrounded; but let us ever stand fast in our purpose. A good degree of decision and tenacity of purpose is of great importance in the ordinary affairs of life. How much more so in the things of religion! He who is easily shaken will find the way of holiness difficult, perhaps impracticable. A double-minded man, he who has no fixedness of purpose, no energy of will, is "unstable in all his ways." Think of the blessed Saviour: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Though he was momentarily forsaken, at least so far as to be left to anguish inconceivable and unutterable, his heart nevertheless was fixed and he could still say, "My God, my God!"—Sel.

A QUAKER WITNESS.

I had never seen the great dusky eagle (a bird considerably larger than the bald eagle) until I came to Michigan, fifty years since. A hunter shot one of these at a long range, as they were very shy, and found his talons measured fully two inches in length, and his enormous, cruel beak was a sight to behold.

I was not much of an ornithologist, but from the appearance of the bird, and from the facts above stated, I believe any one would feel warranted in coming to the conclusion that it was a dangerous bird, that lived by rapine and plunder most certainly.

Let us now, by similar analogy, take a glance at Masonry, and see what is to be learned, and what we can discover. Do we apprehend it is necessary for people to meet for years and years together, under the cover of night, in an upper room, with windows darkened, and door guarded by a drawn sword, and a secret association formed for some laudable and praiseworthy object, bound together by terrible oaths of secrecy, that are not to be whispered in the ears of any one outside under the penalty of death? No! we are not warranted in coming to any such conclusion. The motto of the honest man is, truth and daylight.

A candidate, on being conducted into the lodge, is told by the presiding officer that Masonry will not interfere with his religion, or with his duty to his family, or his politics. But this assertion, we are told by scores of conscientious people who have left the lodge, is utterly false. A minister in our society had joined the Masons in early life, but when he became converted, left them. He has told me that he could not be a Mason and be a Christian. So say hundreds who have tried it. . . .

The Ohio Yearly Meeting has circulated a good many copies of Prof. Finney's book on this subject among its members, not thinking that by a few lines in our Discipline we had fully discharged our whole duty toward our sons in this matter. By what we hear, are we not, as a church, silent in this respect, especially before our children, as well as others, in many localities?

I have become an old man, and believed that truth demanded what I have written, for the benefit of the younger portion of society, at least.—T. J. Comstock, in the Christian Worker.

A LUTHERAN WITNESS.

It is a well-known fact that all true Lutherans are a unit in vigorously and uncompromisingly opposing secret societies. This is not due to any foreign propensities of our own or of Lutherans generally. It is not because we are not in sympathy with everything truly American, with everything justly deserving that name. Foreign propensities cannot be the source of our opposition, for the simple reason that the secret society fever which has had hold of our people ever since the Morgan abduction was forgotten, is not specifically American; its source, origin and rise being more or less attributable to the French Deism of the preceding century. Our reason for making war upon them is because a secretist, if he be consistent in his error, cannot be a good citizen; because a secretist cannot and will not, being a secretist at the same time, be a faithful Christian. We oppose all kinds of lodges because they are detrimental to Christianity's cause. They are disseminating a sugar-coated diestic, natural religion of "being good" and thus going to heaven on a way paved by our own virtues—a poison none the less venomous on account of the sneak ways in which it is successfully instilled into the very life blood of many churches—a principle practically doing away with the very essential features of Christianity. To know that secret societies are founded on such an unchristian basis and yet to join them, entering upon more intimate fraternal relations with such Christless, unchristian, anti Christian, though often greatly civilized, highly cultured and fashionable heathen of whom the bulk of the lodges is composed—is indeed a denial of Christ. This is our position from which we make war against lodgery of every description.

In this great contest against secretism we are not alone. There is a great anti-secrecy organization, with its headquarters at Chicago, called the National Christian Association. As the press of our country is, to say the least, almost entirely under the silent influence of the lodges, the papers make it a special aim never to say a word about this Association, fearing that, by the publications of that Association, the masses might chance to receive some light on the real nature of the pseudo-religious rites, blasphemous prayers, money-making schemes of the political chicanery and the humbug of the lodges. The object of this Association is "to expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion and our republican government from corruption."

The Christian Cynosure publishes a list of the names of religious bodies and individual religious organizations openly disavowing lodgery as a Pagan abomination—a list which proves that some of the non-Lutheran churches have done far more in this direction than the timid, halfway measures of the so-called Lutheran General Council will ever accomplish. We feel assured that thousands of quiet, earnestly-minded Christians are in sympathy with this movement, at least in their inmost heart. We hope that the time will come when all the churches throughout the country will set their face against secretism, even if they should lose the occasional presence or contributions of a few more or less wealthy roll-members. Most are foul at heart anyhow. Their sticking to secret clans of luke-warm Christians, infidels, Jews, etc., their more closely adhering to them than to those whom they should still like to call their brethren in the faith, being unmistakable evidence that in their inmost heart they have already beforehand fallen away from Christ, and, if they ever were Christians, ceased to be such. Nothing but this is the cause of their choking down, with more or less relish, that semi-religious hash of Paganism and Christianity, which the lodge will condescend to feed them with. Nothing but this will prompt them to stand the extortions of the lodge which will compel them to pay for being imposed on (by degrees) with twice and thrice the exorbitant fees generally charged by traveling doctors and other professional "itinerants." For, to men of intelligence and observation, it is an open secret that the high officials of Masonry know that there is money in the popular humbug of Masonry, appearing in the form of princely salaries.

But, to return, we say let all Christian churches, let all true citizens rise and protest against lodgery, one of the grandest impostures the world has ever witnessed. Let them be fully aware of the danger it is replete with for the church and State. Let every one uncompromisingly oppose secret societies in every lawful way. The protests of the 1,800 churches of Synodical Conference against secretism have been to some avail in the past, and have had this good effect—that the testimony against secret oath-bound organizations has not been utterly silenced, and has freed many from the ensnaring meshes of lodgery.—Rev. C. Dreyer in Lutheran Witness.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

NOMINATIONS FOR 1884.

For President,

JONATHAN BLANCHARD,

OF ILLINOIS.

For Vice President,

JOHN A. CONANT,

OF CONNECTICUT.

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore, the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

SHALL WE KNOCK OFF A PLANK?

Pres. J. Blanchard,

MY DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:—I write to call your attention to one or two things that seem of vital importance to the reform you so ably champion. And

1st. If success be the end sought it seems to me that the political conventions ought to be called at an entirely different time and place from those of the National Christian Association, and this because there is a deep-seated feeling among the American people against religious bodies, as such, controlling in political affairs. I do not argue that this feeling is right, but it exists as an obstacle to success if we follow in the way we have gone heretofore; i. e., holding the two conventions at once, or in connection. And

2d. We have too much in our platform. It's good, but entirely too good to ever be carried all at once. There are several distinct issues embodied in the platform, any one of which is sufficient to constitute the main issue in a campaign. The trouble is, you can't get so many people to unite on so many distinct points. By endeavoring to do too much we are likely to succeed in nothing. Take Anti-masonry, which is essentially Anti-monopoly (and vice versa), and then formulate your platform into an eloquent defense of human rights and equality; declare ourselves against all monopolies, rings and cliques; in fact, make of it a good political document (its too religious) and you will have success much sooner, I feel sure.

Believing that the great moral reformation of humanity is to be accomplished by slow processes, one thing at a time, and that this is the auspicious time for Anti-masonry.

I am as ever, yours ruly, ———

REMARKS.

The Cynosure hopes for success, not by fitting a platform to the present majority, but by enlightening a mass of men and women who will never go back on their convictions, expecting that those who want office will vote those convictions, if true, for the sake of getting office. Judge Wood had the Democratic votes of Ohio under his advice. He came, or sent, to S. P. Chase, offering to put him in the U. S. Senate if the Democrats might have the State offices. Mr. Chase, who had then held no office above a city alderman to vote on curbstones and sewers, answered: "I vote for my principles, not for office; and I vote for all who stand on my platform." The Democrats had hungered for office so long that they would vote for any thing to get it. Chase wrote them a strong Liberty party platform, and they voted it and sent Chase to stand by Sumner and Gillette in the Senate.

If the Abolitionists had undertaken to frame a platform to suit the then majority of voters in Ohio, they would have failed.

The night when the Ohio Democrats in the Legislature came to repeal the infamous Ohio black laws, some of them came to Chase and begged piteously to be let off. It would "be their political death-warrant." Mr. Chase replied that he and his friends should vote for that platform. The Democrats swallowed it and survived, because they got the State.

THE SITUATION STATED.

MR. EDITOR:—In what way is the Republican party a temperance party? Is not the Republican majority from thirty to seventy thousand in the State of Iowa? Do not Republicans believe in majorities governing? Did not a majority of thirty thousand votes say that we should have prohibition in this State? Were not the supreme judges, who decided that the people should not rule, representatives of the Republican party put in office by it? Are not nine-tenths of the incorporated villages, towns and cities of the State, where the saloons flourish, under Republican rule? Are not three-fourths of the saloon-keepers and brewerymen of Iowa active workers in the Republican party? Is there a Democrat official, in many counties, from circuit clerk, down to "dog-pelter?" Have not Republicans run nearly every office in the State from governor to country school director, from time immemorial? Do not the thousands of saloons running in full blast stamp the living lie on the loud professions of temperance from the leaders of the Radical party? Is that party going to take sides against its own men? Can a house divided against itself stand? From the everlasting howl of the Radical newspapers a person would conclude that the small Democratic minority in Iowa was responsible for all the deviltry brought about by the saloons that were brought forth, sheltered and perpetuated under strong Republican rule.

Hundreds and thousands of men throughout the State, hitherto acting with the dominant party have been duped into voting its ticket for the last time. Iowa, with her thousands of saloons, in a State boasting as high as seventy thousand Republican majority, is only a sample of what may be expected where large Republican party majorities actually govern. Free Americans seriously object to trusting longer a party that has fastened intemperance for lo these many years, and has to favor its own base interests, virtually declared that the voice of the people is not law.

Such, Mr. Editor, seems to be the situation at present. Let every true temperance worker take due notice, mark and govern himself accordingly. But more in the sweet by-and-by. Yours for popular rule and temperance.

AMERICAN.

Clarinda, Ia., July 7th, 1883.

PRESIDENT FINNEY ON POLITICAL REFORMATION.

Mr. Finney, though so devoted, heart and soul, to the conversion of men to Christ that he had no time or strength for anything else, nevertheless believed in the political duties of Christians. He thought that godly men should immediately set about the moral reformation of government. "But here," he says, "the question arises, How shall this reformation be brought about?

"(1) It never can be brought about by that kind of party movement—such party men and party measures as have brought this nation to such a pass of wickedness. Such party measures can never work a reformation of public morals. They are of themselves a vile and loathsome offense to public morals.

"(2) The needed reformation can never be brought about by contending for truth in a wrong spirit. There is something very remarkable in the providence of God in this respect. Facts in the history of the world demonstrate that God would rather even truth should suffer a temporary defeat than triumph when maintained in a bad spirit. Besides, there is something in the spirit which, in such instances, contradicts the truth, and prevents it from being received as truth. Whenever any set of men, however much truth they may have on their side, get into a wrong spirit in the proclamation and defense of it, they may expect that God will give them up to defeat. Men who hold the truth are very apt to be presumptuous, and to boast that they shall prevail because they have the truth. But mark me, and mark the fact where you will, that in this they will be disappointed. The truth will eventually prevail, but not in their hands.

"(3) This reformation must be brought about and may be brought about by promoting union among Christians, and by extending correct views on this subject of Christian responsibility in regard to their relation to the government. Anything that will unite the church and consolidate her efforts, and direct them wisely on this point, will correct the national morals; and nothing else can."

These are the words of a Christian philosopher, who was governed not only by his hatred of sin, but also by the spirit of Christ. They were undoubtedly directed in part against some of the less wise anti-slavery advocates, whose vituperations, not only against slavery, but also the Christian church, was a blot on the great cause to which they gave their lives. Mr. Finney's words as to the true spirit of reform, might, however, be wisely appropriated by temperance and other reformers to-day.—Rev. James Brand in the Advance

REFORM NEWS.

STATE CONVENTIONS.

The season for holding State Conventions is at hand. The condition of our country and the state of our work demand a vigorous campaign. Government reform, anti-secrecy and prohibition are the three fundamental planks in the American movement to day. New York State and Iowa each recognize this fact in the respective programmes for their anniversaries under consideration. The name of Hon. S. C. Pomeroy has been added during the past year to our strong effective speaking force. He has promised to attend such conventions as other engagements permit, and arrangements are well advanced to secure his attendance and a prepared address from him at both the New York and Iowa conventions. Those of our readers who have carefully considered his Farwell Hall speech will not deny that he is radical on the vital questions of the hour, and that he discusses living issues boldly. Have the executive committees or friends in different States any thing to say on this question of anniversaries? J. P. STODDARD.

DODGE COUNTY MINNESOTA.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since I have been requested to report the doings of the Dodge County Christian Association opposed to secret societies, held at Wasioja May 21 and 22, I proceed to do so as briefly as possible.

Two lectures were delivered by the State lecturer Rev. R. J. Williams of Winnebago City, Minn., in which was shown the anti-Christian character of secret societies, but more especially of Freemasonry. "It violates the Savior's teaching in reference to forswearing; tends to alienate husband and wife; destroys the spirituality and power of the Christian church; is selfish in its nature and only answers selfish purposes; is a rival religion. It is an insult to God for men to offer themselves to him when all there is of them is pledged to the lodge. The tendency is to monopolize the administration of the civil authority. The oaths of Freemasonry are extrajudicial and not binding" These topics were ably discussed by the speaker, and such was his Christian spirit and gentlemanly bearing, that the most sanguine Mason could not have been offended. Large and attentive audiences both evenings.

The forenoon of Tuesday was occupied by short speeches from different ones, some conservative, some radical, but harmony prevailed throughout. In the afternoon a very interesting and instructive paper entitled "Reform and Reformers" was read by W. F. Hillman. Mr. Hillman also read a communication from C. C. Wheelock on "Yale College Secret Societies."

The Association then elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

Rev. H. E. Walker, President.
A. A. Mason, Vice President.
W. F. Hillman, Vice President.
Prof. E. G. Paine, Cor. Secretary.
W. C. Mullenix, Rec. Secretary.
Mrs. D. F. Shepardson, Treasurer.

Everything considered, the association was perhaps the best ever held in the county. W. C. MULLENIX.

FROM THE WISCONSIN AGENT.

In reporting his work for June Bro. Bancroft mentions the following places visited: Fayette, Reney's Schoolhouse, Mifflin, Platteville, Mt. Zion, Potosi, Waterloo and British Hollow. All these localities are in the southwest corner of the State. He lectured thirteen times during the month, traveled with his own conveyance 321 miles, made 243 family visits, and spent $1.25. Of the character of the people and the work Bro. Bancroft speaks for himself:

POTOSI, June 30, 1883.

I have just finished my report for June. It is not as full as I could wish, but have to be content. It is about as well as I could do as there have not been many idle hours. I thought I should have a little rest to-day, but find every hour must be used in order to get fully ready for to-morrow (Sabbath). I have collected but little money this month, as I am on new ground where no lecturing or preaching has been done for our cause, and the people are very poor and so is the country. It is among the Mississippi bluffs, and I have generally felt more like giving to them than asking them to give to me. I had two Masons to hear me at Potosi last Sabbath. One of them had said to me several years ago in one of our conventions that he would like to have me come to Potosi and preach if I would not say anything about Masonry. I told him that he could not tie my tongue; I should preach what I thought the people needed. The other was a teacher from Iowa, and when he came out of church and bade me good-by he was so effected he could hardly speak. O, I hope God by his good Spirit will lead him out of the lodge! I am hoping to see him to-day. Grant county is quite large, and I hope to make quite a thorough canvass of it, visiting nearly all the villages and some of the country places. I have felt nearly all the time that God was with me, leading me all the way.

Yours truly, I. BANCROFT.

A QUIET WORKER'S EXPERIENCE.

PARTRIDGE, ALA., July 9, 1883.

DEARSIR:—I determined yesterday to make a donation of books to Elder Joseph B. Huckabee of Jasper, Walker county, Ala. He was raised to the degree of Master Mason twelve years ago, and has never visited a lodge since. I exhibited him "Freemasonry Illustrated." He says that he don't pretend to know much about Masonry, but knows that there is Masonry in the book, and says that he prophesied to some of them that Masonry would be revealed long before he ever heard that there was a National Christian Association working for its over-throw. Yesterday in a sermon he denounced, among other evils that the Christian had to fight against, secret societies. I asked him if I would present him with some books would he read them, and he promised me to do so.

I had Prof. Whitfield stay all night with me not long ago. He is a graduate of our State University and has filled one of its chairs as professor. I asked him if he was a Mason, and he replied that he belonged to them. He continued by remarking that he was very rusty; that he had not been in a lodge for eight or ten years: that he doubted being able to work himself into a lodge; but, that he was one of the corporators of the lodge at Tuscaloosa; that the lodge at Tuscaloosa lost their charter during the war and could not work until they obtained a new one, and he with others applied and got it. I inquired to know if they had to pay one hundred dollars. "No," he remarked, "I don't think we paid that. I think we had to pay a recorder's fee or something like that. I don't think we paid $100, but did not remember correctly as to what they paid." He is chief engineer on the Decatur, Meridian & Gainsville R. R. now, a new line being surveyed.

I had an East Tennessee man call the other day. In the course of conversation I asked him if he was a craftsman. He replied that he had taken two steps in that direction. I continued, "The Entered Apprentice and Fellow Crafts degrees?" "Yes," was his answer. "Why don't you advance further into Masonic light?" Answer, "My business has compelled me to be away from home all the time, and you know that I could not advance only at home. As soon as I become stationary I mean to advance." Upon this remark I produced a copy of "Freemasonry Illustrated" and turned to the Entered Apprentice's oath. He read it and, looking at me in a bewildered way, remarked, "It is all here; all right." I then had him read the Fellow Craft's oath. He made similar remarks and confessions, and finally stated that his lodge did not give him any book to learn it from; that the brethren taught him what he knew about it in some private place.

I learn that one of the books I sold last year has come up and is bearing abundant fruit. I sent one out by a friend and he sold to Elder Sargent, a missionary Baptist minister. It is said that he is one of the brightest Masons in Walker county, Alabama. I learned yesterday that he carried the book with him whithersoever he went, and publicly testified that it was correct. We have another M. B. minister in our neighborhood, a new accession here, who refused to acknowledge to me that he was a Mason, but afterward did show to a woman who had a deceased husband's demit, his lamb skin. Afterward he denied to one of the members of his church that he was a Mason, or had ever been one; then also confessed to another that he had been a Mason and that he had an honorable demit, and that he could join at any time or let it alone. Now a minister that will equivocate thus is not worthy the name; he is meaner than the system of which he is a member, if possible. Respectfully your friend,

JESSE WARD.

WORK ON INDEPENDENCE DAY.

BURDETTE, HAND CO., DAK., July 5th, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I think I have seen nothing in the Cynosure from Dakota since I have been here. During this three months I have been talking to those met from time to time, both Masons and non-Masons, secretists and and anti-secretists, and have given out some books, but as the people are scattered considerably over the prairies and as I have no conveyance I waited patiently till yesterday when most of the people for a number of miles around gathered to enjoy the celebration of the 4th of July got up by our Sabbath-school.

After the dinner was over I got my basket and began to give out the Weed pamphlet and tracts, talking and answering some questions. A number of Masons (some Royal Arch) and Odd Fellows were on the ground. I gave to all without respect of persons. This I think is a good field for this reform work, as society is in the formative state and more easily moulded and got into the right shape than it will be after awhile.

I would like to say to our friends of this reform (and this embraces more than opposition to secretism), let in the light. Take a stand for the right in your community, if you stand alone. Keep your lamp trimmed and burning, the promised and prophesied time will come, when "the saints shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever:" "and the kingdom, and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom shall be given into the hands of the Most High."

We are commencing the fulfillment of the latter quotation by seeking the promotion to office of God-fearing men, and may God forbid that any man who professes to be an anti-secretist and especially one who claims to be in harmony with the N. C. A. should ever again cast his ballot for any candidate for office who is identified with any order whose initiatory ceremony is a secret or who is opposed to prohibition. Let this be his watchword and rallying cry in politics and the time will soon come when the power of the lodge will be broken and poligamy and intemperance be things of the past, and may God hasten the day.

I met a man this morning (not at the celebration) who said he heard that I got killed yesterday. But my coming up and shaking his hand satisfied him that the report was false. I suppose those tracts stirred up a little bad temper. Well, so far as this place is concerned, and I am concerned, and I am concerned with society, the stakes are stuck and the lines drawn, so far as paying Masonic preachers, or supporting secretists for office. My word is out so that I could hardly take it back if I would and I am sure I would not if I could. As I am naturally timid, pray that I may be faithful to God and to my fellow men.

JOHN DORCAS.

INGERSOLL AND VOLTAIRE.—Ingersoll presented Voltaire as one of his six infidel saints. Some weeks since we spoke of Parton's Life of Voltaire. Parton is himself an infidel, and tries to make a hero of his subject, but he admits that Voltaire was tricky, deceitful, given to lying and licentious. The "philosopher" was a constant and unblushing libertine, ready to invade every family, and assault the virtue of every woman. Of one of his intrigues, kept up for many years with a married woman, Madame Chatelet, Parton says:

"What of the Marquis du Chatelet? Nothing at all. He viewed the enthusiastic friendship with an equanimity that was never disturbed. During their liaison of sixteen years, this docile and tolerant soldier frequented Votaire's abode quite as usual, and remained on the most cordial terms with a poet who lent him money, and drew the fire of a wife perhaps oppressively superior. All this, I repeat, being simply inconceivable to persons of our race, it were useless to expend words upon it. These people had amended one of the ancient commandments by striking out the word not, and adding 'but thou shalt commit no indecorum.' Voltaire obeyed this latter amendment with ingenious consistency as long as he lived."

Can the American people have patience when such a lecherous scoundrel is held up for their admiration!—Christian Statesman.

CORRESPONDENCE.

IN SELF-DEFENSE.

JULY 10, 1883.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I send herewith an address in defense of secret societies before Union Lodge, A. O. United Workmen, Sacramento, Cal., and published in the Pacific States Watchman. It is a matter of rejoicing that these orders begin to see that they have been arraigned at the bar of public opinion, and must plead to the indictment. Let the case be tried, and it is only a question of time when the verdict of condemnation will be everywhere pronounced. This address is a plea for all secret societies, ancient and modern, and assumes what is quite evident, that they must stand or fall together.

After lauding the A. O. U. W. he says: "The same may be said of nearly all the other secret societies of the present generation. That grand old secret brotherhood, the Odd-fellows, have similar principles, and that ancient order, the father of all secrect societies, the Masons, can force the church to-day to hide its head in view of the fact that the great idea of the brotherhood of man was first promulgated within the sacred temple of Freemasonry. That young giant, the Knights of Pythias, has in this country to-night an army nearly 200,000 strong, banded together by the common tie of fraternal love and the brotherhood of man." * * * "To recapitulate the substance of these arguments, we are forced to the conclusion, first, that Christianity owes its existence, its rise and progress, to the developments of ancient secret societies; and second, they have done quite as much, if not more, than the church, in the way of elevating the condition of mankind, the protection of society, and the advancement of a superior and enlightened civilization."

Three things are here affirmed:

1st. That all secret societies, both ancient and modern, have a common character and origin, and that that origin was in Freemasonry.

2d. That they are superior to Christianity, inasmuch as it owes its existence and development to the ancient secret societies, and that they have done as much, if not more, in elevating the condition of mankind.

3d. They are the basis of a superior and enlightened civilization, which, if it means anything, means a new order of society, under the sole direction of the secret orders.

I commend these propositions to those religious people who have heretofore seen no evil or danger in the secret societies. But to comprehend the depth of the arrogance and blasphemy of this discourse, let us consider: 1st, what these ancient secret orders were; and 2d, what the Word of God says about them.

Bishop Warburton says, "Each of the pagan gods had, besides the public and open, a secret worship paid unto him, to which none were admitted but those who have been selected by preparatory ceremonies called initiation. This secret worship was termed the Mysteries." Divine Legation, Vol. 1, B. 11, p. 4, 189.

Dr. A. G. Mackey, the distinguished Masonic author, says, that this worship was always paid to the sun and the heavenly bodies, and that Freemasonry is a "philosophical development of this ancient sun-worship."—Mackey's Ritualist, p. 113 and 114.

Now this secret pagan worship is most graphically described by the prophet Ezekial (chap. 8:7-18), and the Lord says, "Is it a light thing to the house of Judah that they commit the abominations they commit here? for they have filled the land with violence and have returned to provoke me to anger (v. 17)."

This unholy worship is also declared to be a crime punishable with death. (See Deut. 17:2-7). Now to say that Christianity had its origin in these sinks of iniquity so abominable that they had to be suppressed by the Roman emperors, is not only to degrade the Gospel of Christ to an even lower level, but to pronounce it absolutely untrue. The Gospel claims that God "So loved the world that he gave his Son." This is the origin of the Gospel. If this is not true we have no Gospel, but if it is true it never had any connection with ancient mysteries.

Again, neither ancient nor modern secret societies ever taught the doctrine of the brotherhood of man. American Freemasonry excludes from its brotherhood all negroes and Chinese; all cripples and all women. But really there can be no real brotherhood of man except as they become brethren in Christ. He only is our Elder Brother, and we are one only in him.

Now none of these orders even claim to be brotherhoods in Christ. They do not hold him as their head, but rather cast out his name and count his Gospel as in no sense superior to the doctrines of devils taught in the ancient and modern lodges.

Such is the doctrine and influence of modern secret societies. Let the church consider. It must either arise and destroy them, or be destroyed by them. This is the utterance of one of the youngest and mildest, but has the voice of a dragon. Their name is legion. May God help us in the conflict.

Yours in Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

A QUESTION FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

Can anyone, save God, rightfully institute or appoint any religious symbol for the use of his people? Let some one answer this in the Christian Cynosure. The Old Testament abounded with religious symbols, and all, I think, God appointed. The New Testament had two, to be in perpetual use till Christ comes again. Has anybody, professedly religious or not any business with the institution or appointment of any religious ordinance, right or symhol? Have not all the corruptions of the church either culminated or begun in this reserved right of him who gave us one heing? Did not God and Christ specify all of the rights, symbols, etc., to he employed in religious teaching by the priests, prophets and apostles? Do not the lodges, in the invention of their numherless symhols, justify themselves on the assumptions of the so-called churches and Sahbath-schools, in what they call "object teaching," etc.? Written to ohtain information.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

FROM MISSISSIPPI.

COLUMBUS, Miss., July 4, 1883.

I have just read in the Cynosure the interesting article, "Women Opposed to the Lodge." I wish to repeat a sentence in it—"Men and women must have the courage to speak and write their convictions on this [secretism] as well as on other subjects." I call the attention of those who see the wickedness fostered by lodgery and yet keep silence, to the example of the Apostles when they were commanded "not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus." They prayed, "Grant unto thy servants that with all boldness they may speak thy word." Observe how exactly their prayer was answered. And they spake the word of God with holdness. If the Lord has shown you that there is a secret idolatry in our midst which is productive of untold evils, defer not to warn those who are still in ignorance of danger. "Speak out" by mouth or pen as the Lord may give you opportunity. I wish I could lift a warning voice, "one the whole wide world may hear," and say, Beware, heware, beware of Freemasonry—and not of Freemasonry only, hut of every secret order.

I am acquainted with a Mason who makes no profession of religion, but who said plainly that he expects to he saved through Masonry. Are you willing that any over whom you may have an influence should trust in this for salvation instead of Christ. I have often met with another Mason who said, in speaking of the order, "I would he like the old martyrs; I would burn some hefore I would give it up." But he does not show that love for Christ that would indicate a willingness to suffer martyrdom for his sake. Are you willing that your friend should love a wicked organization more than Christ?

As I was walking the streets of Columbus distrihuting tracts I met a poor deluded young colored man who said, "You are still in the work?" I answered, "Yes." He added, "So am I." He had a paper which seemed to be a commission from the Grand Lodge of the People's Protection Society to work in the interests of that society. He seemed to think that he was engaged in a good work. (Will the reader pray that his eyes may be opened and be turned from the error of his way.) Many are looking to secret orders for salvation, giving them their love and trusting in them for protection instead of Christ. They are therefore his rivals.

Two questions I wish to have thoroughly elucidated. Are not those who tolerate secret temperance orders giving their influence toward leading our hushands, hrothers and sons into the Masonic order? Are not secret temperance orders in reality enemies to the cause of temperance? Among others, will Miss Frances Willard "speak out" on these questions? Your sister in Christ,

MRS. M. A. F. TAPLEY.

FROM A NEBRASKA READER.

HUMBOLDT, Richardson Co., Neb., June 31, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am glad to say your paper, recently suhscribed for, comes promptly to hand every week, and of all the good weeklies I read, not one is read with equal interest, or higher and more entire approval. It has some most commendahle features which the others lack. This one, for instance, a negative feature, is noteworthy; the absence of all fictitious stories and mere sensational stuff. No pandering to the demands of vitiated tastes for trashy literature. Then, there is the great distinctive feature, which I heartily approve; a "holy war" against all secret orders, with a determined aim at a general reformation wherever needed, in politics, morals and religion. The Cynosure has in hand a work of immense importance, an importance that cannot well be overstated, and should have the widest circulation. It is needed everywhere, but I think, nowhere more than in this new and rapidly growing State. The dark lodges, Masons, Odd-Fellows, Knights of Pythias, etc. abound in our midst. All the little towns along the railroad here have them, and I suppose it is the same way all over our State. These fraternities are wide awake organizations, strong in numhers, and popular among all classes. They have a controlling influence in public affairs, and in many instances, in the church of Christ, they, themselves having no Christ as memhers of the lodge, hold membership and office, and nothing is thought of it as being a cause with many other causes, of the blighted condition of our dear churches. I could name churches much like a person paralized from head to foot, while spiritual death reigns more or less, in all. It is sad even to contemplate such a state of things already long existing, and it is not my purpose to speak of it at length now. I wish merely to ask your attention to this part of Nehraska as a field greatly needing such work as the National Christian Association is doing so heroically and successfully in other states.

This brings me to the point I would speak of particularly. The United Brethren here, as everywhere, hold no fellowship with members of secret societies. So far they are true as steel, yet they offer no active opposition to secretism. They seem to he sleeping over what they helieve to be a great evil, and only need waking up to become willing and aggressive workers against it. I know of no hetter way of doing this, than hy introducing among them the Cynosure. So far as I can learn, not a single copy is taken herc by them, and they know little, or nothing of the paper, or of the grand mission and work of the Association. If only a few suhscribers be secured among the Brethren, the result soon may be a more general circulation, and finally, a general work he inaugurated. The Cynosure would surely in a little time, open the way for some ahle and heroic lecturer, such as Prof. C. A Blanchard. I should like to see him here, and hear his voice, as I heard it in Rossville, Ill., in 1872. What a stir those lectures made! It was like thrusting a stick through a hornet's nest. For days after, there was a terrible huzzing about the hives of secretism. I hopc the time may soon come when a similar experiment may he tried here. But what we want just now is the Cynosure as a fore-runner of the lecturer. You may have surplus copies on hand. If so, please send a few of the best as samples. I will use them for the purpose indicated ahove.

Yours for the cause, WILLIAM C. BISSELL.

FROM SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

PASADENA, Cal., July 1st, 1883.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Here in Southern California, nine miles east of Los Angelos, with my family I am located for the henefit of my health, which is very much improved and the Lord willing, I hope I will yet be spared to do much in the reform work. I left many endearments at our old home in Iowa, hesides relatives and friends, to find a climate suited to weak lungs, and think here in Pasadena I have found it.

We are about 1,300 feet ahove sea level, in a beautiful valley and in ahout four miles of the Sierra Madra mountains. They have a watering or irrigating district here of near 15,000 acres, and a heautiful location laid out in streets every half mile and avenues every quarter; over the principal part of the place is a house with an average of a five acre lot each. There are two drygoods and grocery stores, two hardware and one drug store, four large hotels, but no saloon, which we are thankful for; and the good people of Pasadena are aiming to keep this curse from our place. We are from twelve to fifteen miles from the heach, and consequently get the refreshing sea hreezes every day, as well as the cooling mountain air every night. So any onc may see we are healthfully located.

We have citizens here from almost all parts of the Unitcd States, more especially the Eastern, from Nehraska to New York. Some of your Chicago men have fine residences here.

Nearly all kinds of semi-tropical and delicious fruits are raised here, such as oranges, lemons, limes, prunes, figs, dates, olives, apricots, peaches, plumbs, pears, apples, and a variety of other fruits are successfully cultivated, besides sixty varieties of grapes, among which are several varieties of the raisin grape, which bear a high price in the market. With the fruit and climate advantages here, this part of California is bound ever to demand a high price for its lands. The watered land now is briuging from $150 to $1,500 per acre, owing to location and improvements. The orange, lemon, pepper-tree, rucalyptus and acacia tree (similar species to those found while hunting for Hiram Ahiff's grave), are green all the year round; besides a large variety of evergreens of California and the Eastern States. The last year's oranges are not yet all gathered from the trees.

There are some reform workers here, and I hope there are many, yet I am a stranger here and have formed acquaintance with hut few. I find the enemy of our souls has long been here helping to blind men, get them careless in the true work of our blessed Christ, and leading them into secret conclaves where his blessed name is not allowed to he mentioned. We expect to still pray and work for the enlightenment of mankind, and bring them truly and wholly to Christ. Then they will want no secret, man-made institutions to bother them. Pray for us, brethren and sisters in Christ, that we fail not until our work is fully done. T. K. BUFKIN.

P. S. Any one wishing inf ormation as to county, climate, or things of interest here, I will gladly give as far as I can if they will send stamps for return postage.

POINTS FROM LETTERS.

THE QUEEN AND THE PRINCE OF WALES.

Our newspapers have occasional paragraphs about these two distinguished personages, prohably intended to detract from the popularity of the Queen and add to that of the Prince. At all events, that is the tendency of such paragraphs and letters. There is probahly a motive for them. What can it be? When it is said the Queen is getting old or it is insinuated that she is unfit for her position, the special qualifications of the Prince are placed in contrast. The Queen is not personally loved but the Prince is. The Queen, in fact, is a mere figure-head, attending to her own personal tastes, but the Prince has much public spirit and would adorn the throne. Such hints keep in the shade, that ever-ready sympathy with misfortune or suffering which has won the hearts of her people, and the admiration of the world. They don't allude to her fine womanly instincts, which as daughter, wife and mother, have made her an example and hlessing to every people. They bury all former charges against the early errors of the Prince, and now, lo! how admirably he would fill the throne! Ahem! If he were not a Freemason would he he half as well qualified? H.

"THE SOCIAL PLAGUE."

In the Cynosure of the 5th inst. I find an article copied from the Chicago News under the above caption. The writer of the article gives as his opinion that "woman has lowered herself in the estimation of man." Allow me to dissent, and assert that from my knowledge of the effects of male secret societies, gained from the inside, as well as from the outside, that all such societies directly lower woman in the estimation of man. With the increase of these societies comes the increase of the "social plague." There heing nothing in any of these secret orders that elevates men, all seeming elevation is based upon the degradation of others, and as it always hasheen, poor woman is degraded first. It may he, and in the case I have mentioned, douhtless is true, that woman lowers herself "by stooping down to man's level to please him," hut this only shows that man gets down to a lower level first, and hy a well-known law woman follows. God says, "They twain shall be one." Secretism says, They shalt be two. J. WYE.

DENY SELF.

Please print something in the Cynosure ahout self-denial among the wealthy. I noticed something in June 28th number on that point. Let us have more of it. I relate an incident that occurred some years ago. A good old woman rented a room in my house, she was supported hy the M. E. church, and the members wanted her to wear a hetter dress on the Sabbath than calico. They gave her two dollars to huy one. She bought the cloth and showed it to me on returning home. I said, "The church will be offended at a calico dress." She replied, "I saw one in the window that suited me. I went in and found I could huy it for one dollar and get my wash woman a dress with the other dollar. She is a widow with four children and can't get to meeting for want of a dress. So I obeyed God by denying self; and if I offend man I won't offend God." This is what we need the present day—self-denial among the rich. CHARLOTTE BOCK.

JESUS CHRIST IN THE LODGE.

Here comes the tyler of the lodge. "I was wantiug to see you, Sir, on Tuesday, to show you our new chapter lodge-room. When looking for you two of the members of the U. P. church came along with a companion. They did not know that she was one of our women." Elephant hunters use tame elephants to entice whole herds of wild elephants into their traps. So Masons use knowing women to entrap the simple ones into their dens to deceive them. "So one of the U. P. women asked me (the tyler) if I would show them through the lodge room.' 'By all means,' said I. So they came up. "What is that book on this table?" said one of the women. 'It is the Holy Bible,' said I. 'Is it the same Bible that we use?' asked she. 'I always thought it was, hut you can examine it for yourself and see.' She examined it. 'It looks to me to he the same. What do you do with it here?' 'We open and close the meetings of the lodge by reading a chapter of it.' 'I do not see how that can be, for I am told the name of Jesus Christ is not allowed to be used in the lodge,' said she. 'Who told you that?' I asked. 'A very godly minister of this town.' 'Tell him from me that he is a liar and that I said so.' 'Will you read some passages out of your Bihle that we may know if it is the same?' I read some passages out of St. John's Gospel in which were the names of Jesus Christ. 'There must be some mistake somewhere,' said she. 'So you see, sir, you will have to look out." He did not give me time to reply, or I would have asked him, if he read Matt. 24:26. "If they shall say . . he is in the secret chambers, believe it not;" or John 3: 18–21, "Men loved darkness rather than light hecause their deeds were evil;" or 8:44, "When he (the devil) speaketh a lie he speaketh of his owu for he is a liar and the father of it;" or 18:19–23, "In secret have I said nothing." But he was away and I have seen him no more. On the same spot I read the valuable articles of W. G. Howe, Maryland, N. Y., June 28th, to a companion, and hope it will do good. I thank Mr. Howe for that article. "No, we detest and ahhor the very name of the imposter," Jesus Christ, is truly the spirit of Freemasonry though they may not all be willing to own it as the old deaf man of 90 who had taken thirty-two degrees in Freemasonry.

BUY THEM OUT.

Thinking it will be of interest to our readers I send the following, clipped from the La Fayette, Ind., Weekly Journal: "There is talk in Muncie of huying the unfinished Masonic temple in that city and converting it into a city hall and offices. The Masons are unable to complete the building." LORENZO D. BROWN.

AN IRREPRESSIBLE BROTHER.

I want you and friends to know I think of and pray for you. I never felt any more encouraged over the prospects of our reform than at present. It is so natural for me to keep it before the people in all our large gatherings. It has come to pass that they feel disappointed if we don't say something directly bearing on it. I am loaded to the muzzle. Praise God! This is testimony for the Cynosure. E. MATTHEWS.

LECTURES FOR MICHIGAN.

I write this from my home in Michigan (Clarkville, Ionia Co.,) which I reached on the 25th of May. You will please drop my name from the list of State lecturers. Though I shall be glad to respond to calls for lectures in this State wherever expenses can be paid. This is no time to falter in the fight with this anti-Christ of lodgery. Rather let us gird the armor tighter and press forward in the conflict, nerved hy the assurance that in its issue are involved our liberties as citizens, as well as the perpetuation and propagation of a pure Christianity which is the hope of the world. D. A. RICHARDS.

BIBLE LESSONS.

LESSON V, July 29.—The Reading of the Law.—Joshua 8: 30-35.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing.—Deut. 30: 19.

TIME.—B. C. 1451. Spring or early summer. Immediately after the capture of Ai. Some have thought that these verses should be placed later on, at the close of chapter II. But Keil has answered all the objections to its present place in the narrative. Indeed this is the only proper place, for Moses commanded them to do this as soon as they had crossed the Jordan (Deut. 27: 2).—Peloubet.

PLACE—Shechem, in the valley between Ebal and Gerizim, thirty miles in direct line northwest of the encampment at Gilgal, near Jericho. It was seven miles south of Samaria.

"The promise to Abraham at Shechem." This was the first place where Abraham encamped and built an altar in the promised land. Here God again appeared to him and promised to give this country to him and his descendants (Gen. 12: 6, 7). It was fitting that this coronation of Jehovah as king, and this agreement to be good citizens of their heavenly ruler, should take place when those descendants first took possession of the promise, and on the very spot where the promise was made. Here, too, Jacob settled on his return from his exile in Mesopotamia, and bought a parcel of land near the city for 100 pieces of money, and erected an altar to God, which he called "God, the God of Israel" (Gen. 33: 18–20). Here also was Jacob's well. Here was Abraham's oak. Here were afterwards buried the remains of Joseph, which they had brought with them out of Egypt. —Peloubet.

"The command of Moses." Moses, before he died, not only set before the people, as clearly as words could picture them, the blessings and the cursings which would come upon them, according as they obeyed or disobeyed God, but he commanded them (Deut. 11: 29; 27: 1–10) to have the results of the two ways impressed upon the people by the most solemn ceremonies, and in the most vivid manner possible. It was to be done on the mountains Ebal and Gerizim, as soon as they had crossed the Jordan and had placed their feet on the promised land. The object was (1) to make such a deep impression on the minds and hearts of the people that they would be kept from idolatry and its fascinations, and choose to obey the Lord their God. (2) It was accordingly a formal consecration of themselves to God. (3) It was a declaration that they now took possession of the land in the name of their God upon the condition of obedience. —Peloubet. (4) It was a pledge of the conquest of the foes who still remained.—Keil. (5) It was the coronation of Jehovah as king of the country, and the publication of his law as supreme over it. Attention should also be given to the reason which Moses assigns for the ceremony (Deut. 27: 3), "that thou mayest go in unto the land," and not because thou hast already conquered it. The service, as an act of faith and obedience, was to secure the divine favor, and success in conquering the country; and Joshua would obey literally, in order to secure the divine blessing.—Johnson.

"The safety of the journey." The march of thirty miles would be made in two days, before any great coalition could be formed, if one had been attempted. Any attack in small force would have been repelled, as all the army accompanied the women and children. At Gerizim and Ebal defense was so easy that no foe would attempt hostilities. If we consider the terror inspired throughout the country by the miraculous passage of the Jordan and fall of Jericho (Josh. 5: 1; 6: 27), a terror only increased by the march of the invaders to the very heart of the land, we shall be convinced that there was no danger of even a petty assault during this remarkable expedition.—Johnson.

"Ebal and Gerizim." These twin mountains are situated in the center of Palestine. Gerizim is, according to Condor, 2,849 feet above the level of the sea, and 1,000 feet above the level of the valley, "a huge dome of chalk;" while Ebal is 227 feet higher. Geikie says that the valley between them in which Shechem is situated, is perhaps the most beautiful spot in Palestine. "Bright rivulets, fed, as the natives say, by no fewer than eighty springs, run down the slopes, and sparkle over the sunny glen. Gardens musical with many birds surround the walls of Nablous (modern Shechem). Wherever water reaches, either naturally or otherwise, it is a paradise. But above that limit, the barrenness is well-nigh complete." Mount Ebal, the northern peak, is rocky and bare. The summit of Ebal is a plateau of some extent, reaching its greatest height toward the west, from which there is an extensive view of the country from Hermon on the north to the heights of Bethel on the south, and from the plain of the sea on the west to the Hauran plateau on the east. Conder suggests that the site of Joshua's altar may be represented by the modern sacred place called Amad el-Din, "Monument of the Faith," on the top of Ebal.—Schaff's Bible Dictionary.

"Fitness of the place." A wonderful confirmation of Scripture is afforded us by modern discovery. The Rev. George Williams was the first to notice the important fact that in this valley of Shechem there is a natural amphitheatre,, formed by a recess in Mount Ebal, exactly facing a similar recess in Mount Gerizim; this amphitheatre, in the subsequent investigations of Captains Wilson and Anderson of the Palestine Exploration Fund, proved to be admirably adapted, both in size and acoustic properties, for the assemblage of a large concourse of persons to hear the reading of the law. But, stranger still, close by this very spot is a sanctuary still called El'Amud, "The Pillar," containing the very stone set up by Joshua, and venerated alike by Mohammedans and Samaritans.—Palmer. Let us imagine the chiefs and the priests gathered in the centre of the valley, the tribes stretching out as they stood in compact masses, the men of war and the heads of families, half on the north and half on the south, crowding the slopes on either side; the mixed multitude, the women and the children extended along in front till they spread into the plain beyond but still in sight; and there is no difficulty, much less impossibility, in the problem. A single voice might be heard by many thousands, shut in and conveyed up and down by the inclosing hills. In the early morning we could not only see from Gerizim a man driving his ass down a path on Mount Ebal, but could hear every word he uttered as he urged it; and, in order to test the matter more certainly, on a subsequent occasion two of our party stationed themselves on opposite sides of the valley, and with perfect ease recited the commandments antiphonally.—Tristram's Land of Israel, pp. 149, 150. See also on verse 34.

PRACTICAL.

1. Vers. 30, 31. The real history of man is the history of religion; the wonderful ways by which the different families of the human race advanced towards a truer knowledge and a deeper love to God. This is the foundation that underlies all profane history; it is the light, the soul, and the life of history.—Max Muller.

2. Religion is before morality. There should be religious worship, sorrow for sin, consecration to God, before every great and solemn duty.

3. We should obey with the closest fidelity every commaud of God.

4. Ver. 32. God's law is written on all nature as well as on our hearts.

5. Vers. 33–35. God sets as clearly as possible before us the two ways, of life or death, of blessing or cursing. He would deceive no one. But words and examples and the teachings of nature are all used to make all see the two ways which lie before us.

6. Each one of us must make the choice.

7. We usually make that choice in the beginning of our active life, as we set out to take possession of what God offers us.

8. No one directly chooses cursing and death, but only disobedience, whose necessary fruit is cursing.

9. Our own consciences say amen to the blessings and cursings.

10. Older people stand before the young as either on Mount Ebal or on Gerizim, as warnings or as examples.

11. This law is our law; these blessings are to be our reward; and these curses our doom, according as we obey or disobey this law of our own holy Lord God.—Cowles.

BAND OF HOPE BIBLE LESSON.

TEMPERANCE.

24. Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth a prize? So run that ye may obtain.

25. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown: but we an incorruptible.

26. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air.

27. But I keep under my body and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway. 1 Cor. 9: 24–27. But a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, just, holy, temperate. Titus 1: 8. That the aged men be sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience. Titus 2: 2.

GOLDEN TEXT.—So run that ye may obtain.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—God cannot give us the prize without self-denial.

1. St. Paul alludes to the footraces in the Isthmian games which were held once every three years on the Isthmus of Corinth, and were great events with the Corinthians.

2. The prize was a wreath of pine from the groves that surrounded the stadium or race-course.

3. The words used in our Golden Text are the very ones in which the racers were cheered forward when they started for the goal.

4. By "striving for the mastery" is meant a contest of wrestling, which was an important part of these national games.

5. Every candidate was obliged to be at least ten months in training, to deny himself wine, live on the coarsest diet, and submit to a very severe discipline.

6. Every Greek city had its gymnasium where the youth were instructed in athletic exercises. In these schools the pupils frequently had sham fights in which they struck out at imaginary adversaries.

7. When people abstain from the use of tobacco and all spirituous liquors, eat plain food and observe regular hours we call them temperate in their habits.

8. Statistics show that temperate habits are the strongest protection against disease.

9. People of temperate habits can do more work and do it better than others.

10. The greatest scholars have always been temperate men.

11. If we search the lives of philanthrophists, missionaries and others who have done great things for God and the world we shall find that they were always strictly temperate.

12. We ought to deny ourselves all hurtful dainties. If we are not willing to do this, we have no right to blame the drunkard whose appetite is so much harder to control.

13. Habits are formed when we are children. If we learn to be temperate when young it will come easier to us when we grow up.

PRACTICAL TRUTHS.

Temperance prolongs life. It makes us strong, active, clearheaded.

Christians have a race to run, a battle to fight, and they need to put forth every faculty of mind and body.

Children are invited to run this heavenly race and fight this warfare, and they are not too young to learn lessons of temperance.

LESSON TALK.

The most remarkable instance of long life on record is that of the famous Thomas Parr who lived to be 152 years and nine months, and died in 1635. He was a farm laborer all his life, and like all laboring people in that age lived on very plain and coarse food. King Charles II. hearing of his great age was so anxious to see him that he sent for him to come to London, where he soon died from dyspepsia caused by the unaccustomed richness and variety of the royal fare. The famous Dr. Harvey made a post mortem examination but could find no other cause of death.

But it is not merely in order to have a long life that we should cultivate habits of temperance. We are very prone to forget that our bodies are not our own—that they as well as our souls belong to God. We have no right to drink alcoholic liquors which will poison the brain and nerve centers and derange the whole system. We have no right to use tobacco, causing a vile ill-smelling breath, disordering our circulation and digestion, and unfitting us for all grand and noble work in the world. Nor have we any right to shorten our lives by rich and dainty living. It is a well-known fact that high livers though they may look hearty and well are often struck down by apoplexy when they might have lived years longer by adopting a plain and simple fare.

We owe it to God, to the world and to ourselves to keep our bodies healthy and strong, so that we may do the most and the best work possible, for him and for humanity.

LESSON HYMN.

Yield not to temptation for yielding is sin,
Each vict'ry will help you some other to win.

COLLEGE WORK.

The annual catalogue of Wheaton College shows that the past College year was one of much prosperity. Including the Theological Seminary classes in the same building, 216 students were in attendance during the year, and their commencement performances demonstrated their proficiency. There appears one serious falling off in the record of the College department, of the three higher classes there are but two members indicated as pursuing the full Classical course, the majority choosing the shorter Laureate course. The Freshman class, however, brings up the standard of scholarship to its proper grade. Among the improvements during the year are the thorough reorganization of the musical department under Prof. S. W. Martin, so that it will now rank with any collegiate department of the kind in the West. The library has also been removed and arranged with convenient fixtures and furniture through the liberality of Dr. F. J. T. Fischer, of Elmhurst, Ill. The Literary Societies have also fitted up rooms in an elegant manner. Arrangements for enlarged accommodation for students who wish rooms in the college buildings are being made for the opening of the fall term on Tuesday, September 4th.

Dover Academy, located at Dover, Ill., designed as a training school for teachers and for higher education generally. The Seminary is under the supervision of the Rock River Conference of the United Brethren church; and is under the immediate charge of Mr. W. H. Mason, as principal, and F. L. Kennoyer, assistant. The different departments were well represented and the course of study marks out a good preparation for entering college. The fall terms Monday, September 3d next. Dover is located in Bureau county, Ill., near the town of Malden, on the C. B. & Q. railway.

Fisk University, probably one of the best known of the American Missionary Association freedmen Colleges in the South, issues a fine catalogue with cuts of the fine buildings built and occupied by the institution. The president, Rev. E. M. Cravath, son of the late revered Oren Cravath, of Minnesota, is assisted by a full force of seventeen officers and instructors, under whose charge there were during the year past, 424 pupils. The courses of study include College, Theological, Normal and common English departments, with studies specially arranged to meet the wants of the young colored people of the South. The fall term opens Monday, September 3d.

—Petitions are being circulated in Wayne and Huron counties, Ohio, calling upon the independent voters to meet in "Anti Dram Shop" conventions, and nominate candidates for the legislature and county officers. The signatures of voters of all parties are invited, and the convention will be called when one-third of the voters of the county sign the petitions. It is explained that "this is strictly a non-partisan movement for the suppression of dram-shops, not interfering with State or national party politics."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1883.

IN STORE.

The time of year is come when every one who can afford it, from the U. S. President to the professional tramp, drops his work and runs away for a day of rest. The Cynosure proposes to do as good and as much work in summer as in winter, for the present, and frankly invites examination of the present number as proof. But we have waiting for next week matter that will rejoice all our friends. The portrait and history of the great Anti-masonic Governor of Pennsylvania, the only one the State ever had, we have secured at much expense of money and labor. Neither have been before printed, at least not so fully as we propose; and they will make a noble number even without some other features of special interest. This expenditure is made confidently relying on all the friends of the paper that a corresponding effort will be made on their part to enlarge the list of subscribers with the greatest diligence.

REFORM AND MISSIONS.

The era of missions sprung up in a stack-yard, began with the American Board seventy-three years ago (1810). Home missions soon followed, and are now the more popular of the two. Mission boards must have money, and money dreads disturbance. In 1845, at Brooklyn, Dr. Woods reported and the American Board voted to take both caste and slave-holding into churches, and trust the Gospel to absorb and annihilate them. For a time a determined Abolitionist was refused by the committee of the American Home Missionary Society. Home missions yielded first. The central committee of twenty-five, voted that slave-holding churches must show, in order to get aid, that their members owned slaves, not for the profit of the master but the good of the slave. This abolitionized home missions, and the good Dr. Badger thanked us publicly at Rockford for, "Your patience with us during our complicity with slavery."

In 1867 the Andover Faculty signed a request to the then Boston Tract Society for an Anti-masonic tract. Dr. Kirk endorsed the application, so also did George W. Blagden and Nehemiah Adams; and Secretary Warren printed, but dared not publish the tract. That tract was taken to Dr. Milton Badger, Secretary of the American Home Missionary Society, who said: "Print it, by all means, and we will furnish every home missionary with a copy."

The tract was taken to the Western Tract Society of Cincinnati. Henry M. Storrs, Dr. Badger's successor, as Home Missionary secretary, added a third part to the tract with his own pen. It was published and is now in circulation unless out of print. Dr. Storrs is now, we believe, pastor in Portland, Me.

That Home Missionary Society has now two secretaries, Messrs. Barrows and Clark, with whom we have not now, but with whom we hope to cultivate a personal acquaintance. Their report for the year closed is magnificent. The receipts from April 1882 to 1883 were three hundred and ninety-eight thousand nine hundred and sixteen dollars. They hope for more than half a million next year. They have a small army of one thousand one hundred and fifty missionaries, laboring in forty-one States and Territories, from Florida to Alaska and from California to Maine.

The spirit of the men whom these secretaries put forward as superintendents is admirable. Superintendent Blanchard of the Rocky Mountain district holds this plain language, and the secretaries print it in their report:

"Men in that country are not tolerant of imitations and shams. If they want religion at all, they ask for the pure article. * * There is respect for a Christianity that has in it a stalwart faith in God, Christ and a supernatural revelation. Ministers who have no settled faith are not wanted in Colorado, in any church. Men know they are sinners, and if they hear to anything it will be to a message that offers an assured hope in a Divine Redeemer."

Is there a religious "sham" on earth which transcends the lodge?

J. M. Manning, D.D., a Freemason, and one of the vice-presidents of the Society, has died during the past year; Theodore D. Woolsey, D.D., LL.D., the president, says he is opposed to secret societies; Hon. Charles G. Hammond of Chicago, has published his testimony against the lodge; and Prof. Edward A. Park has expressed his abhorrence of it in private. These two gentlemen are living vice-presidents; and without certain knowledge we presume the list of vice-presidents does not contain a Freemason since the death of Dr. Manning.

1st. The obstructions are the Freemasons in the pulpits and churches which give the funds; and

2nd. The National Congregational Council with its Masonic head. But it was the money question which protected slavery for a time, and that gave way before the power of truth. So will it in case of secret lodge-worships. The moment the mass of intelligent Christians saw that slaveholding was contraband and to be eventually disallowed, the fate of slavery was sealed. The conviction is already fastening on the mind of the churches, that lodge-worship is rival and antagonist to Christ, and as soon as that conviction becomes settled and general the great missionary societies will be with us, and the lodge no more tolerated than would now be the property holding of men.

"THE CONSENT OF THE GOVERNED."

This phrase in the Declaration of Independence, is taken by some to exclude God and the moral law.

Let us see. "The consent of the governed" must be taken, unanimously, by majorities, or individually. If unanimously, the United States has no "just powers," for there were many Tories who refused their consent. If majorities make consciences, rogues may rightfully hang honest men one day—and honest men justly hang rogues the next, as majorities change sides.

Jefferson was speaking against hereditary prescription, and divine right. His meaning by just interpretation is: Under God "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." The people, not a fraction of the people, called kings, priests and nobles, manufacture and own governments; as men raise and own crops, by the powers of nature and the providence of God.

The truth that "there is no power but of God," and "the powers that be are ordained of God," is everywhere assumed by Jefferson in his writings. When he said of slavery, "I tremble for my country when I remember that God is just;" and that no attribute of the Almighty could take part against the slaves, he was speaking of slave-State governments, and the power and right of God to reverse the conditions of master and slave. To doubt or deny this, is to attribute nonsense to Jefferson when he was in solemn and profound earnest. Four times in that same Declaration, he refers to and recognizes the God of the Bible, as the Author of governments and Court of final appeal; and the civil oath does the same.

Jefferson meant and the civilized world now means, that no human beings or human courts can enforce divine sanctions, or coerce conscience. This is enough. It bars out priestcraft and religious despotism forever. But to exclude God from governments and literally derive power from consent, would justify the code of pirates who consent to be ruled by their chief.

THE EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION AT SARATOGA.

It is a good idea to bring the higher educational interests of the country into these centers of fashion, Saratoga, White Mountains, White Sulphur Springs, etc., for fashion rules the polite world, and it is philosophical to make use of such a power for favoring a great interest. Among the incidents of the convention which has just ended a three day's session at Saratoga was the presenting a resolution by one of our Anti-masons, that created a more than ordinary interest. It ran as follows:

Resolved, That the inclination towards military grandeur and display which is fostered of late years by Grand Army organizations, officers reunions, Decoration-day observances and dedication of soldiers' monuments, demands renewed efforts on the part of the educators of the country for counteracting these hostile influences against our institutions of popular self-government.

The introduction of this resolution excited an animated discussion, and the resolution was finally tabled; but it has gone before the country and the people will have to decide whether our Republic is to merge into a military establishment to be sustained by the force of arms, or whether we are to look to our public schools for the support of our people's government. At present the educational influences from the Masonic lodge and the net-work of military prestige, art and organization with which it surrounds itself, are much more powerful for giving direction to our political course than those of our schools and conventions of educators. It is not among the dead issues of war that the life of the Republic is to be found, but amidst the future living interests of education; and educators must assert the supremacy of the school over arms or our Republic must succumb.
